Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of the annual report of the Commissioner of Railroads for the year 1895 1,500 extra copies in paper covers, with appendixes, for the use of the Commissioner of Railroads.

To the Committee on Printing.

THE RULES.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the unfinished business; and desire to say that, as to Rule XV, we will lay that aside for the present and call it up hereafter, going on with the rest of the work, because some members seem to be in trouble about the rule as it may apply to Friday night sessions, and possibly to business brought up by unanimous consent, and we desire to see if we can meet their suggestions.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House will proceed to the consideration of the next amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. I would like to ask the gentleman if that disposes of the third paragraph of Rule XV.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to amend another portion of the same rule?

Mr. WHEELER. I simply desire to strike out the third paragraph of Rule XV.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order. The Chair supposes the gentleman from Iowa does not desire to postpone anything but the fourth paragraph.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the gentleman has any other amendment to offer he may do so now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the third paragraph of Rule XV.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, will it be in order to——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized, unless the gentleman rises to make a point of order.

Mr. MILES. I simply desire to ask for information in reference to an amendment to be offered hereafter. Will it be in order to offer an amendment to section 4 of Rule XV?

The SPEAKER. That will be taken up later.

Mr. MILES. When taken up later will it be in order to offer amendments to it?

The SPEAKER. Certainly. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed.

Strike out clause 3 of Rule XV, as follows:

"3. On the demand of any member, or at the suggestion of the Speaker, the names of members sufficient to make a quorum in the Hall of the House who do not vote shall be noted by the Clerk and recorded in the Journal, and reported to the Speaker with the names of the members voting, and be counted and announced in determining the presence of a quorum to do business."

[Mr. WHEELER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER], which is to strike out clause 3 of Rule XV.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WHEELER demanded the yeas and nays, but subsequently withdrew the demand.

Accordingly the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule XV by striking from the first paragraph thereof the following: "And after the roll has been once called the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "And after the roll has been once called the Speaker shall, of his own motion or at the request of any member or members, cause the Clerk to call again the names of those present and not voting."

Mr. DALZELL. To what section is this amendment proposed?

The SPEAKER. The first clause of Rule XV.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The first clause of Rule XV; and the object of it is merely to dispense with the necessity of calling twice the names of those who are absent and who of course can not respond. Any member can determine readily, when he sees the amendment in print, whether he is in favor of or opposed to the proposed change. I therefore ask that it merely be passed over with the rule for consideration at a later time.

Mr. HENDERSON. To be brought up hereafter, when we call up the rule. The gentleman merely asks, as I understand, that the matter remain pending.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes. It is the amendment to which I called the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] asks that this amendment may remain pending when the fourth clause is called up. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. If nothing further is offered on Rule XV, the Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. MILES. I was informed that hereafter I might offer an amendment to section 4, Rule XV. Am I right?

The SPEAKER. That goes over to be called up, and when it comes up the gentleman will have the right to offer whatever amendments are in order. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The next committee amendment was read, as follows:

In Rule XVII, section 1, second line, substitute the word "voting" for the word "present," and after the word "quorum" add the words "be present"; so that as amended the section shall read as follows:

"RULE XVII.

"PREVIOUS QUESTION.

"1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members voting, if a quorum be present, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments, and include the bill to its passage or rejection. It shall be in order, pending the motion for, or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there any other amendment to Rule XVII? [After a pause.] The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule XIX by adding the following provision:

"Amendments to the title of a bill or resolution shall not be in order until after its passage, and shall be decided without debate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If no other amendment is offered to Rule XIX the Clerk will proceed to the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Rule XXI strike out of section 3 the words "to the Committee on Indian Depredation Claims," and insert after the words "Land Claims" the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Unless there are other amendments offered to this rule, the Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Rule XXII, section 3, insert after the words "correction in case of error of reference may be made by the House" the words "without debate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there any other amendment to this rule? [After a pause.] The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Rule XXIII, section 3, insert after the words "to the United States for money or property" the words "or referring any claim to the Court of Claims," so that the section will read as follows:

"RULE XXIII.

"3. All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, or referring any claim to the Court of Claims, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to be heard on that proposition for a moment. The proposition is to amend Rule XXIII by adding the words "or referring any claim to the Court of Claims." That means that all claims, before they can be referred to the Court of Claims, must first be considered in Committee of the Whole here. Now, Mr. Speaker, the act of Congress passed on the 3d of March, 1883, expressly provides—and I ask the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to it, because I do not think he will object to this amendment if he hears me a moment——

Mr. HENDERSON. I am listening to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The act of Congress passed on the 3d of March, 1883, known as the Bowman Act, expressly provides that the committees of either the Senate or House, in order to expedite the business of Congress, may send, upon their own motion, claims to the Court of Claims. That is a provision of the act known as the Bowman Act, and I will ask the Clerk to read the first section of that act. This rule will be directly in the teeth of that act of Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

That whenever a claim or matter is pending before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or before either House of Congress, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or House may cause the same, with the vouchers, papers, proof, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the Court of Claims of the United States, and the same shall there be proceeded with under such rules as the court may adopt.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is sufficient.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that language is as explicit as it can be that the Committee on War Claims of the House has the right to send certain claims to the Court of Claims, and it certainly violates that act of Congress to come and provide that the House must take action before the Committee on War Claims can take its action, when the law expressly provides that it may do it.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not perfectly competent for the House to make a rule as to its action which is in confirmation of the Bowman Act?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all; because the law expressly states that the committee may take this action. This rule would provide that the House must first take action.

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all. The Bowman Act provides a rule which applies in certain cases to committees and which applies in certain cases to the House of Representatives. Now, when the House of Representatives comes to exercise its powers under the Bowman Act we provide in this rule that it shall be done through the intervention of the Committee of the Whole. The gentleman has overlooked the fact that either the committee or the House may cause the claim to be sent to the Court of Claims. There are cases where it becomes the business of the House of Representatives to pass upon these claims, and they may see fit to send them, under this act, to the Court of Claims at once, or, if this is provided in the rules, they will then send them to the Committee of the Whole, which it seems to me, considering the amount of money possibly involved in these claims, is not only a proper thing, but a duty on the part of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the rule provides that before any money can be appropriated the Committee of the Whole must consider the claim.

Mr. DALZELL. But one of the difficulties is——

Mr. RICHARDSON. That has to be done before we make an appropriation. This reference to the Court of Claims is not for an appropriation; it is not for a judgment; it is simply to find the facts. Now, before an appropriation can be made the bill must receive its consideration in Committee of the Whole. I would not object to that, because that is all right.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that it was the express intention of the Committee on Rules to have all these references when only the House was involved, whether they involved judgments or merely findings of fact, go to the Committee of the Whole, because we all know that findings of fact by the Court of Claims involve in nine cases out of ten a subsequent appropriation of money. For that reason, I repeat, it was the intention of the Committee on Rules to require all these cases where the House is acting independently of a committee, whether intended to be followed by a judgment immediately or contemplating a mere finding of fact, to go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOCKERY. I congratulate the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that it amounts to this, that whereas the law provides two authorities, the Committee on Rules in their report reduce the number to one.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is it.

Mr. CANNON. Let me see if I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania. As I understand him, he claims that the Committee on War Claims being a creature of the House, it is quite competent for the House to say on what terms and conditions its creature shall act; in other words, that the House can revise the action of the Committee on War Claims either in Committee of the Whole or in the House itself. If that is the gentleman's ground, it seems to me quite correct.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think it is quite incorrect if I can construe the language of the statute of March 3, 1883. The statute provides that—

Whenever a claim or matter is pending before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or before either House of Congress, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or House may cause the same, with the vouchers, etc., to be transmitted to the Court of Claims of the United States, etc.

The committee "may cause the same" to be transmitted to the court. The bill may not be pending before the House; it may be pending only before the committee. Now, you provide in this rule that the claim can not get to the Court of Claims until it has been considered in Committee of the Whole. That seems to me to be as plain and palpable a contradiction of the statute as can be made. The statute gives the committee the right to refer every war claim of this character to the Court of Claims. Suppose that the Committee of the Whole, considering such a claim, should say, "We will not refer it." Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania mean to say that that would operate as a limitation on the action of the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. DALZELL. This rule simply provides that the bill shall be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But suppose the Committee of the Whole considers it adversely, does the gentleman maintain that in that case the Committee on War Claims can not refer that bill to the Court of Claims?

Mr. DALZELL. The Committee on War Claims can not have jurisdiction of the claim unless it gets it from the House. No claims can go to that committee save those which go to it from the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. When the bill is introduced it is referred to the Committee on War Claims, and the committee then has absolute jurisdiction and can refer the claim to the Court of Claims under this law.

Mr. DALZELL. But does the gentleman claim that the House can not change its rules?

Mr. RICHARDSON. This amendment does not do that, and I do not think the House could violate the law in that way.

Mr. DALZELL. This amendment does not violate the law. The law gives the House jurisdiction of all these claims, and it has the right to say whether they shall go to the Court of Claims or how they shall be disposed of. Now, this rule simply provides that when that question is presented the House, before determining to exercise its power to send those claims to the Committee on War Claims, shall consider the matter in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the whole object of the Bowman Act was to expedite the hearing of these cases and to afford relief to Congress and the Executive Departments. That appears from the title of the act. The idea was that the House of Representatives and the Senate should be relieved from considering the question of referring these claims to the Court of Claims, and that the calendars of the two Houses should be thereby relieved by giving the Committee on War Claims the right to refer these claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from Tennessee does not assume, I suppose, that the Bowman Act includes all cases known as war claims? It does not go beyond cases relating to claims for supplies and subsistence furnished to our forces during the war.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is all. It does not go beyond that. Claims under the Bowman Act are limited to claims for supplies and subsistence.

Mr. LOUD. That act applies only to claims for subsistence furnished to our forces during the war, and does not include the thousands of other cases known as "war claims."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly not. The language of the Bowman Act is wholly different from the language of the Tucker Act, which also relates to war claims other than those for supplies.

Mr. DALZELL. I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee if there are not two classes of cases, one under the jurisdiction of the committee, and the other cases in possession of the House and capable of being referred to the Court of Claims——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. DALZELL. Are there not two classes of cases which, under the Bowman Act, may in proper circumstances be referred to the Court of Claims, to wit, cases over which a committee has jurisdiction and cases over which the House has jurisdiction?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I so understand.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, with reference to the latter class, does the gentleman contend that this rule interferes at all with the law which makes it entirely discretionary with the House as to whether or not it shall send claims over which it has jurisdiction to the Court of Claims or dispose of them otherwise?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think where the House has jurisdiction of the claim and there is no provision in any law as to how it shall be disposed of, then we may adopt such a rule as I understand this to be; but if the language of an existing law covers the case, then I do not think it is possible for this House to make a rule contravening that law.

Now, the language of this proposed rule is explicit. It says, "or referring any claim to the Court of Claims." Now, the Bowman Act provides that the Committee on War Claims may refer to the Court of Claims any claims for supplies furnished by loyal people to the armies of the Union during the war. If it be admitted that the language of this proposed rule does not undertake to limit the Committee on War Claims in its action, that without regard to this rule the committee can under the law refer claims to the Court of Claims without having those claims go to the Committee of the Whole, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. DALZELL. My contention is that it is within the power of the House of Representatives——

Mr. RICHARDSON. To violate the law?

Mr. DALZELL. To say whether it will refer a war claim to the Court of Claims or dispose of it in some other way, the House having jurisdiction of the claim, and it not having gone to a committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman (because I know he is an able lawyer) this question: If the House in considering a war claim in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union or considering it during the disposition of the Private Calendar should decide adversely to the motion to refer, what are you going to do with this provision of the Bowman Act, which says that the Committee on War Claims may refer such a bill without action of the House to the Court of Claims?

Mr. DALZELL. The committee can not refer it until it has jurisdiction, and it can have no jurisdiction except from the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Committee on War Claims has jurisdiction of the claim, in the case supposed, by the reference of the claim to that committee.

Mr. DALZELL. The committee has not jurisdiction of those claims which the House disposes of in Committee of the Whole. The House has power to control its agent, a committee, and to say whether a claim shall go to a committee or not. The power of the House to do this under the rule and its power to decide adversely constitute a contingency in which the jurisdiction of the committee under the Bowman Act to make the reference might not arise. A committee can not rise above the power that appoints it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. According to the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, this rule, if adopted, would operate as an absolute repeal of so much of the Bowman Act as provides that the Committee on War Claims may refer these bills to the Court of Claims.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will.

Mr. LACEY. Under the rules of the House, a war claim is at once referred by the Speaker to the Committee on War Claims; and under the Bowman Act that committee can do one of two things—it can send the bill directly to the Court of Claims, or it can report the bill back to the House. If the bill comes back to the House, then, under this proposed rule, it can be considered in Committee of the Whole and then referred to the court.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is all right. If that is the construction of this proposed rule, I have nothing to say. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not, I think, state that such is his understanding.

Mr. DALZELL. "The gentleman from Pennsylvania" says that his contention is that these claims, which it is within the jurisdiction of the House to refer, may be disposed of in Committee of the Whole and an adverse report had thereon, notwithstanding the provisions of the Bowman Act.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, I ask the gentleman whether he means to say that by a rule of this House the act of Congress passed on the 3d of March, 1883, can be expressly repealed, for that act says that the Committee on War Claims may make this reference? The gentleman from Pennsylvania, on the contrary, insists, as I understand, that the House of Representatives must first act upon the question and may take away from the War Claims Committee the right given it under the Bowman Act to make the reference of the bill to the Court of Claims.

Mr. DALZELL. On the gentleman's first proposition he needs no answer. Of course I make no such contention.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman understands, if I may be permitted to say so, that the construction which he gives to the Bowman Act would enable the House of Representatives, by itself, without the concurrent action of the Senate, and without any change of the existing law, to practically abrogate that law as it stands on the statute book. Now, I insist the House can not do that and the Senate can not do it. It must be done, if at all, by the concurrent action of the House and Senate, taking the form of a new law.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand, there is nothing in the Bowman Act requiring the House to send these war claims to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not in the act itself; but the rule of the House requires that.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand, the Bowman Act provides only that in the event of the committee getting jurisdiction of any one of these claims it may send the claim to the Court of Claims or may return it to the House for consideration. There is nothing, however, in the Bowman Act, as I understand, requiring the Speaker to refer a war claim to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. WHEELER. The rules of the House require it.

Mr. DALZELL. If the gentleman from Tennessee will allow me, I wish to make perfectly clear the position that I take in reference to this matter. My contention is that all these claims that are within the jurisdiction of the House in the first instance, not sent to a committee, may be disposed of in Committee of the Whole; may be sent to or may be withheld from the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman Act. I concede that it is within the power of the Committee on War Claims, when it has obtained jurisdiction of a war claim, to determine whether it shall go to the Court of Claims or not, when it has jurisdiction of the matter.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit me to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania this question: Does he propose by this rule to take away the right of a member introducing a bill of having it referred to the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not understand that to be the purpose of the rule.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then, if a bill goes to the War Claims Committee that committee, under the provisions of the Bowman Act, would have the right to refer it to the Court of Claims.

Mr. DALZELL. I have already said so, where the committee has jurisdiction. They may send it to the Court of Claims under such circumstances.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to make this suggestion? If the rule proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is adopted it would have the result of requiring the consideration of these claims twice in the Committee of the Whole. They are submitted to the Committee of the Whole in the first instance, to determine whether or not they shall go to the Court of Claims, and then, when they come back from the court, if they require an appropriation of money from the Treasury, they would have to be considered again in Committee of the Whole, which does not occur with reference to any other class of bills, so far as I know.

Mr. DALZELL. If that be true, I think that is a very strong argument in favor of the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, it seems to me to be a very strong argument against it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not understand why the gentleman from Pennsylvania should make that remark. The only object of the Bowman Act was to provide loyal citizens of the disloyal States of the Union who had furnished supplies to the Union Army during the war a tribunal in which they might have their claims examined and passed upon.

Now, the gentleman says there is reason why they should not be so considered. I can not see why the gentleman should desire to place the loyal people in the disloyal States in that position. That may be the policy of the gentleman, but it has not been the policy of Congress since the passage of the act providing for the 4th of July claims, or what is known as the 4th of July bill, passed in 1864. On the contrary, they have permitted these claims to be paid for twenty years, and they were paid without going to either branch of Congress, having been adjudicated and paid in the Departments.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not care to enter into the question of the policy of the law——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the provision of the Bowman Act prescribes that—

> Whenever a claim or matter is pending before the committees of the Senate or House of Representatives, or before either House of Congress, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or the House may cause the same, with vouchers, papers, etc., to be transmitted to the Court of Claims, etc.

This gives jurisdiction to the committee or to the House. The House lays down the rule that before a committee may do so and so—the House committee—that the Committee of the Whole shall consider it. Inasmuch as the law gives the House jurisdiction, it has merely the right to say through what channel the claim shall go before it goes to the Court of Claims. It seems to me that the proposition is so clear that it needs no discussion, and how there can be confusion in the minds of gentlemen with reference to it I do not understand.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Has not the committee, under the Bowman Act, irrespective of the action of the House, the right to send the claim to the Court of Claims?

Mr. HENDERSON. The rule of the House requires that the House shall first submit it to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then, can a rule of the House violate a statute of the United States?

Mr. HENDERSON. No, sir; it does not and can not, because the House in dealing with these claims has a perfect right to give jurisdiction to the Committee on War Claims or to withhold it. We prescribe under the law the means by which these claims shall reach the Court of Claims. The law gives the House jurisdiction to that extent, and in my judgment there is no clearer proposition than the right of the House, under the law, to do exactly what is contemplated by the amendment of the rules.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then, as I understand your contention, by denying jurisdiction to the Committee on War Claims you defeat the intention of the law?

Mr. HENDERSON. No, sir; the gentleman misunderstands me. This simply gives concurrent jurisdiction, and the House exercises it under the law, and makes the channel through which these claims shall reach the Court of Claims. It is simply a proposition to submit these claims to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule to determine whether the claim shall go to the Court of Claims or not. It does not deny jurisdiction and does not affect the statute in any way. It is simply a protection in the interests of the public Treasury and in favor of a general consideration of all proper claims.

Mr. RAY. Let me make this suggestion. When a claim comes into the House in the first instance, the House has exclusive jurisdiction; and these bills do not go to the Committee on War Claims except by the consent of the House.

Therefore, this House can prescribe the condition under which it shall go to the committee, and when it goes to the Committee on War Claims we have only surrendered a part of our jurisdiction over it, and the jurisdiction obtained by the Committee on War Claims is limited by the rule which this House sees fit to adopt and prescribe. Therefore, we can adopt this rule without any violation of the Bowman Act whatever.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says we do not propose to take away——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON] is recognized.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of very great importance to my people, and I want the ear of the members on this side of the House. The Congressional district that I have the honor to represent has more pensioners in it than any other in the United States of America. In proportion to our population we put more men into the Union Army than any other Congressional district in the United States. We furnished the Union armies that came down to East Tennessee under Burnside and under the other Federal generals millions of dollars' worth of commissary and quartermaster stores. We supplied Burnside's army for many months out of our smokehouses and our corncribs, our stables and our fields, and for a very large part of the supplies that we thus furnished to Burnside, which saved his army from being starved to death or captured by Longstreet—for a very large part of the supplies thus furnished the loyal men of that country to this good day have never been paid a solitary cent. When this Bowman Act was passed the object of it was to give the loyal men of East Tennessee and other loyal sections of the country an opportunity to prove their claims before a court of competent jurisdiction. Now, in the name of God, in the name of justice, in the name of patriotism, will this House strike down that law under the name of adopting a rule of procedure? Can it be done in that way? Can this House, by the adoption of a rule, repeal a solemn statute passed by the two Houses of Congress and signed by the President? This amendment undertakes to do that. I hold in my hand the Bowman Act. How does it read?

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever—> a claim or matter is pending before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or before either House of Congress, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or House may cause the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the Court of Claims of the United States, and the same shall be proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt.

Under the first section of this act, just read by me, when a bill to pay any of these claims of my constituents was referred to any committee of this House, that committee could, on its own motion and without the previous consent of the House, refer the claim to the Court of Claims, which was empowered to find the real facts and report them to Congress for its action thereon. Then the claim had to go before a committee again, and then before the Committee of the Whole, and then had to pass the House, and then go to the Senate, where nearly all of these same steps had to be taken again, and then to be signed by the President or passed over his veto. All of these various courses of procedure had to be observed before the bill could become a law and my constituent paid the money so long due him by this great Government which he had befriended thirty years ago in her hour of need. Surely these are ordeals enough, and many too many. But now the Committee on Rules proposes to add yet another ordeal, and that is to compel every claim to pass through the Committee of the Whole before it can even have a chance to go to the Court of Claims, although the Bowman Act expressly provides that "any committee of the Senate or House" may send any claim it chooses to the Court of Claims without asking anybody's consent.

I do not see, Mr. Speaker, how any impartial man can think that this proposed amendment to our rules does not conflict with the Bowman Act. This act authorizes "any committee" to refer a claim, and the amendment proposed forbids a reference by any committee until the Committee of the Whole first authorizes such a reference. In other words, the proposed amendment forbids any committee to exercise the power conferred on it by the Bowman Act unless the House in Committee of the Whole allows it so to do.

The Bowman Act expressly authorizes either a committee or the House to refer a claim, thus showing that they are to act independently of each other—concurrently, as the lawyers say; and this House has no more right to forbid a committee to refer a claim than a committee has to forbid this House, and to undertake to do so is a violation of a solemn law passed by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President.

Now, can this House, by adopting a rule, say these claims shall not be sent to the Court of Claims until they have first been passed upon by the Committee of the Whole? It can not be done. A statute of the United States can not be repealed in that way; and if it could be, I appeal to the men on this side of the House to do justice to the loyal men of the section that I represent. Can you not trust a solemn court of the United States to pass on these questions and say whether this great Government of ours owes the humble men of East Tennessee and other sections of the South, loyal men who stripped themselves naked and actually starved their families in order to uphold the flag of their country and maintain the cause of the Union? Are you willing to say that the Bowman Act, passed for the benefit of these men, shall be repealed by a simple rule adopted by this House, solitary and alone? In the name of patriotism, may God forbid that the people of the loyal sections of the South be thus treated in the house of their friends.

The Union men and women of East Tennessee furnished millions of dollars' worth of supplies of all kinds—provisions, horses, mules, cattle, hogs, sheep, wheat, corn, oats, hay, beef, pork, bacon, lard, meal, flour, and everything needed by the Federal armies operating in East Tennessee—during the war of the rebellion, these armies being often entirely dependent on the loyal men of that loyal region for their means of subsistence, their base of supplies being hundreds of miles away, and communication difficult at best, and often impossible. And for a very large part of the supplies thus furnished our half-starved armies—often furnished, too, at great personal sacrifice and when actually needed for the support of their families—for a very large part of these supplies my people have not yet been paid, although more than thirty years have elapsed since the property was used and the promise of payment by the officers of the Government made.

I call upon the men upon this side of the House, especially those who served in the Union Army, to stand by their compatriots in brave, gallant, patriotic, loyal East Tennessee who stood by you when you came down, and welcomed you with patriotic hands and with all the supplies that we had in our country to keep you alive and prevent you from starving when you were cut off by Longstreet's army from every means of reaching your supplies on the Ohio River. Gentlemen on this side of the House, let the Bowman Act stand. Strike out these italics proposed by the committee and let justice be done to the loyal men of the South who contributed their thousands and tens of thousands of dollars for the relief of the Union Army.

Now, let me say another thing. The supplies that were furnished the Union troops in Pennsylvania during Lee's invasion, prior and subsequent to the battle of Gettysburg, were all paid for without question. The supplies furnished the Union troops in the State of Ohio, while they were pursuing Morgan in his raid, were all paid for without question. But the supplies furnished the Union Army in East Tennessee have to pass every imaginable scrutiny before they are paid for; and now, though thirty years and more have gone by since these supplies were furnished, yet the great Government of the United States, with its 70,000,000 people, believing in the God of justice, praying for the perpetuity of our country, down to this good day has failed to pay the honest claims of my patriotic constituents and other like patriotic men all over the South. In all the record of patriotic valor there can not be found a brighter page than the one that tells of the heroic sacrifices made not only by the men but also by the women and children of East Tennessee in showing their devotion to the cause of the Union during the war of the rebellion, they being willing at all times during that terrible and tremendous conflict to fight. to starve, to suffer imprisonment. and even to die, rather than falter in their loyalty to the Union and the Constitution of their country. On every side of them the Confederate flag floated; but, intrenched in their mountains, as in the great fortress of freedom, they defied every attempt to subjugate them, and from their loftiest crags the flag of the Union never ceased to fly.

Oh, it was an easy thing in those days to have been a Union man in the loyal North and in the loyal West, but to be a Union man in the South, and especially in East Tennessee, was to be a marked man, the aim of slander, the aim of scrutiny, the aim of the guerrilla and the bushwhacker, the aim of the Confederate government, all using every instrumentality to pull down and destroy, with nobody to lend a helping hand or give an encouraging word. Do not go back on that class of loyal people by adopting this amendment, which strikes them down in the house of their friends.

Mr. POWERS. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the scope of this proposed amendment is very much misunderstood by gentlemen who seem to oppose it either by gentle words or by extravagant ones. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON] had very much to say about the loyal men of east Tennessee, and his encomium upon them will not only read well in his own district, but sounds well here. [Laughter.] Nobody questions the loyalty of those gallant men.

Mr. BOATNER. Except when they have a claim.

Mr. POWERS. I submit to him that when he proposes to restrict this House, as a House sitting in Committee of the Whole, from an opportunity to listen to such impassioned appeals as he has just made, he is weakening the prospects of those claimants to recover their just claims. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GIBSON. So much the worse for the Government when it undertakes to do it.

Mr. POWERS. This Government does not propose to do anything of the kind; but we are simply asking that the Committee of the Whole House shall have an opportunity to listen to the gentleman when he appears in behalf of these claimants, and not send the hearing of such important questions to the small number of ten or fifteen who may for the time constitute the Committee on Claims. So that the very ground on which he has based his argument redounds against him.

Mr. GIBSON. We want the Bowman law.

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman should not only be heard by the whole House, but it would be eminently proper that he should have the attention of 70,000,000 people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the real gist of this proposed amendment? It is simply that when a bill is introduced in the House to make compensation to a loyal claimant his bill shall come to us as every other bill comes. There is no Committee on Claims except as the House itself sees fit to appoint one. The Bowman Act makes no reference to any committee of the House by name. It simply says these bills "referred to a committee." What committee? Not the Committee on War Claims necessarily. It is entirely competent for the House to abolish that committee and substitute in its place the Committee of the Whole House. It simply provides that a claim pending before a committee—and this House may as well say that that claim shall be pending before the Committee of the Whole as to say that it shall be pending before a committee of fifteen. So there is nothing in the proposed amendment that trenches at all upon the sanctity of the Bowman Act. It simply provides that another committee shall pass upon the question; and if it be conceded that there is a Committee on War Claims, then it does provide that these claims shall be considered by the Committee of the Whole before they are referred to the Court of Claims. It seems that there is not the slightest embarrassment in this proposed amendment so far as the Bowman Act is concerned.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The Constitution, Mr. Speaker, confers upon this House the right to make its own rules of procedure, and the power thus conferred upon this House by the Constitution, beyond any question to my mind, would make this a lawful exercise of authority. It will be entirely competent for this House, if it chose so to do, to declare in so many words that the Committee on War Claims should make no reference whatever of any claims referred to it to the Court of Claims. I go to the full extent in the opinion that it is not within the power of Congress to curtail even to the slightest degree its constitutional power, which is always vested in the House of Representatives, to pass rules to regulate its own procedure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Bowman Act was never intended to constitute a rule of procedure for this House. Its purpose simply was to create a jurisdiction in one of its own courts to receive, hear, and dispose of such claims as this House might in its discretion choose to refer to it. Gentlemen confound the Bowman Act with a rule of this House. As I have said, it was never the design to create a rule which should govern the procedure of this House. Its sole purpose was reference to the Court of Claims, one of its own tribunals, with the right and authority to hear such claims as this House, in the exercise of its own discretion, may choose to refer to it. I have no contention to make against this as an unlawful exercise of power in this House. I have no criticism to make upon the idea that has been suggested that it violates an act of Congress, but it is well that the House should understand just what would be the effect of this rule if adopted.

It is an effort on the part of this House to nullify, for all practical purposes, the exercise by the Court of Claims of the jurisdiction which the Bowman Act conferred upon it, and the effort will fail of its purpose, because this rule, binding as it will be upon this House, will have no effect upon the Senate, and the result will be that all of these claims will be introduced in the Senate, will go to the proper committee there, and by that committee will be referred to the Court of Claims. So that we are attempting here to adopt a rule whose purpose is to take away the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims by providing no means by which that jurisdiction can be exercised, and yet, as I have said, it will fail of its purpose. Of course, our rules can have no operation in the other branch of Congress, and the result will be that we shall take from our own committee a right which will remain with the Senate committee.

Now, the question is, whether this House desires to so degrade its own committee that it shall not have the power to exercise an authority which the corresponding committee of a coordinate branch of Congress will have power to exercise. If it be a fact that the Treasury is endangered by claims of this kind, the true remedy is to repeal the law; but so long as the Senate of the United States has the right through its committees to exercise this power it seems to me that the House should have the right to exercise an equal power and authority. By adopting this rule we do not prevent the reference of these cases to the Court of Claims. We merely limit the power of our own committee. These claims will still go to the Court of Claims just as abundantly as ever. If any gentleman here thinks that a claim, if it once gets upon the Calendar, will ever be referred to the court through the agency of the Committee of the Whole they will be undeceived when they have served a little while in this Congress. When these claims come back from the Committee on War Claims and take their position on the Calendar that is the end. They will never be heard from again. The effect of this rule, therefore, is intended to be to prevent the reference, under any and all circumstances, either by this House or by one of its committees, of these claims to the Court of Claims. I say again, Mr. Speaker, that while I do not dispute the entire validity of this rule, because the adoption of it is simply an exercise of the constitutional power of this House, the rule will fail of its purpose, and its only effect will be to degrade this body in authority, leaving the evil, if it be one, to still exist in full force.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that there is a great misapprehension in the minds of some gentlemen, and especially in the mind of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] who has just sat down, with reference to what this rule is and what this amendment proposes. What is Rule XXIII, which it is here proposed to amend? It is simply a rule controlling proceedings in Committee of the Whole House or in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. What kind of business alone can be taken up in Committee of the Whole? It must be business that has been reported by some committee of this House and that is upon one of two Calendars, viz, the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole or the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. No business can be taken up in Committee of the Whole except that which has been reported by some committee of the House and is upon one of those two Calendars. Hence this rule does not refer at all to the primary reference of bills.

Bills are referred to the appropriate committees under another rule. But if the appropriate committee, let it be the Committee on Claims or the Committee on War Claims, shall report to this House a resolution or bill providing for the reference of a particular claim to the Court of Claims—and they never do that unless they desire to put in some limitation or some condition which shall broaden the reference and make it different from what it would be under the Bowman Act, because in any other case they can refer the claim themselves without taking the trouble to report it to the House.

Now, the whole object of the proposed amendment to Rule XXIII is to provide that when a bill or resolution by which it is proposed to send a claim to the Court of Claims, and which has been reported by a committee and is upon one of the two Calendars I have named, that bill or resolution, whichever it may be, because the probability is very strong that it will ultimately make a charge on the Treasury, shall be first considered in Committee of the Whole. That is all this amendment to the rule provides. It does not refer to bills in any other condition, because Rule XXIII deals only with the consideration of bills already upon the Calendar which have been reported by some committee of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do I understand the gentleman to insist that after the House in Committee of the Whole has considered a bill and referred it to the Court of Claims——

Mr. DINGLEY. In the cases covered by this rule and amendment the House has not considered it a bill. The bill has been referred to the committee in the ordinary way and gone to the Committee on War Claims or to the Committee on Claims, and that committee report a bill authorizing the Court of Claims to enter judgment in the case or modifying in some way the terms of the Bowman Act so as to give the court larger authority. Now, I say that because that bill in all probability will involve a charge upon the Treasury, it ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole, as other measures involving a charge upon the Treasury are considered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, after the Court of Claims have made a finding upon the case, the bill comes back to the House and it must be considered again in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not necessarily if the court was authorized to enter judgment. In that case an appropriation would be placed in the deficiency appropriation bill to pay the judgment. But if the court has only made findings of fact, then, of course, the claim must come before Congress to be acted upon in view of the findings.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman wants to have bills providing for the payment of claims in the South twice considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, whereas no such rule applies to other bills involving a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. DINGLEY. I want to ask my friend, for he is very familiar with these war-claims matters, whether it is not true that nearly every bill that comes into this House to refer a claim to the Court of Claims and goes upon the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House, is not a bill intended to broaden the authority of the Court of Claims, or to authorize the court to enter a judgment in the case?

I have hardly ever known a bill to be reported to the House that was not of this character, for a reference to the court for finding of facts alone can be made by the Committee on War Claims without coming here.

Now, I take it for granted that if my friend from Tennessee has in his charge a bill involving a claim against the Government—one of the so-called "war claims"—and it must be borne in mind that every one of these so-called war claims has had its day in court and has been rejected by an appropriate tribunal——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Some have not.

Mr. DINGLEY. His object in bringing the bill here is to start the claim afresh and get rid of the statute of limitations. When such a bill comes here the gentleman having charge of it has the right, under the Bowman Act, to place the bill in the box or in the hands of the Clerk, and have it referred to the Committee on War Claims; and that committee may send the bill immediately to the Court of Claims for a simple finding of facts. That is what has been done in thousands of cases.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman mean that that could be done under this new rule?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes; if this new rule should be adopted it will not vary that practice at all—not in the least. This proposed rule has relation only to proceedings in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman from Maine will pardon me—I do not wish to interrupt him—the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] expressly stated that such would not be the effect of this proposed rule.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understood that in the final explanation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania he expressly stated the reverse of that.

Mr. WASHINGTON. We did not so understand him over here.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will state that such is the effect of this proposed rule we have nothing further to say.

Mr. DINGLEY. This rule—Rule XXIII—refers only to proceedings in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, what is the objection to saying that the provisions of this rule shall not apply to War Claims presented under the Bowman Act?

Mr. DINGLEY. No difficulty can arise on that score. Rule XXIII applies exclusively to proceedings in Committee of the Whole; and the Committee of the Whole, as my friend knows, can not take up a bill at all until it is on one of two Calendars; and it must have been reported from some committee; it can not get before the Committee of the Whole in any other way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the gentleman, it seems to me, overlooks the important language of this proposed rule, which says that no claim shall be referred to the Court of Claims until it has been considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DINGLEY. The rule, if amended as proposed, provides that a bill or resolution referring a claim to the Court of Claims—that is, a bill reported from a committee—shall first be considered in Committee of the Whole. The provision applies also to "propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people." But the gentleman would not say that we can not refer a bill involving a tax or charge upon the people to a committee before it is considered in Committee of the Whole. Why, then, should the gentleman make such an inference in the present case? The language here proposed does not deal with bills when they are referred to a committee, but after they have been reported and are upon one of two Calendars. The whole reference is to proceedings in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman from Maine is correct—if that is the only proper construction of this proposed new rule—there will be no trouble on this side of the House, or anywhere else, I imagine.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have been surprised at the opposition raised to this rule, because obviously when a bill is on the Calendar—a bill reported from a committee and one which may involve a charge on the Treasury—it should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

I take it for granted that one reason for bringing in this provision was the fact that we have had heretofore a ruling to the effect that a bill simply referring a claim to the Court of Claims, no matter what the conditions might be, did not require consideration in Committee of the Whole. I say that as such a bill will possibly, if not probably, involve a charge upon the Treasury, it should, like all other bills that may draw money from the Treasury, be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHEELER. If the gentleman will read the Bowman Act he will see that it simply allows to the War Claims Committee the aid of the Court of Claims——

Mr. DINGLEY. Or to any committee——

Mr. WHEELER. To ascertain the facts, so that an intelligent report may be made to the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. But we are not touching the Bowman Act at all. That still stands. This has nothing at all to do with that. I may say, however, with reference to that act (although it is not up now) that I do hope there will be some amendment made to it which will remove from the scope of that act thousands of cases that have once been adjudicated.

Mr. DOCKERY. A good amendment would be to repeal the act.

Mr. DINGLEY. The docket of that court should not be filled up with such claims, as it has been. But we are not dealing at all with that question. I simply say that all that this amendment to the rule provides is, that when any committee reports a bill to this House for a reference of any claim against the Government to the Court of Claims, that bill shall be first considered in Committee of the Whole, for it may involve a charge against the Government, and that is the proper place to consider it. That is all that this rule does.

Mr. WHEELER. I would like to be heard for a moment.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would yield to the gentleman for a few moments.

Mr. WHEELER. I would like to occupy five minutes.

Mr. DINGLEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, the class of persons who are benefited by this Bowman Act——

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not want to yield for a speech. If the gentleman wants to make an inquiry or suggestion——

Mr. WHEELER. I simply ask five minutes to make a statement.

Mr. DINGLEY. All right.

Mr. WHEELER. The class of persons who are benefited by the Bowman Act are a class of very poor people, loyal people, and, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON] who has just spoken will tell you, ninety-nine out of a hundred of them stanch Republicans, and they furnished supplies to the Federal Army when it was sorely in need of them. It seems to me that the Bowman Act has not been fully understood. It does not authorize the Court of Claims to render any judgment upon a claim referred to it, but, quite to the contrary, it specially prohibits the Court of Claims from entering any judgment. It simply authorizes the Committee on War Claims to invoke the aid of the Court of Claims in ascertaining the facts in any claim which becomes a pending claim before the committee. The language of section 1 of the act is—

That whenever a claim or matter is pending before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or before either House of Congress, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or House may cause the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the Court of Claims of the United States, and the same shall there be proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt.

The law then specially provides that the court shall not enter judgment, the language being as follows:

When the facts shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report the same to the committee or to the House by which the case was transmitted for its consideration.

But the law specially provides that the court shall have no jurisdiction, except in cases where the person who furnished the supplies was loyal to the Union throughout the war.

The person who furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom the same were taken as aforesaid, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war.

Let me also say, Mr. Speaker, so far from its amounting to a large sum we have the records showing exactly the character and amount of all of these claims. The reports from the Southern Claims Commission have been printed, and they include every claim that can possibly be adjudicated under this section of the Bowman Act.

Most of them have very small claims, some of them as low as $50 or $100, and very few of them exceeding $1,000.

Now, I do not intend to criticise our friends from the North, but it is nevertheless a fact that the loyal men of the South have been great sufferers under the various laws enacted since the close of the war which affect the South and Southern people.

Any law that has operated detrimentally upon the Southern people has, of course, affected all alike. In very few of the laws has there been any distinction, nor was it possible in many cases for any distinction to be made, between men who adhered to the Union and those who fought in the Confederate army. It is true that in this clause there is a provision that a man who can prove absolute loyalty shall have the right to have his claim passed upon by the Court of Claims, while a man who can not prove that he was loyal throughout the war is debarred from any benefit under this act; but if the rule under consideration is adopted it will practically nullify the provision of the Bowman Act, which was passed for the benefit of loyal men.

The gentleman from Maine was here in the Forty-seventh Congress and recollects the discussion in relation to the Bowman Act. That act was a compromise. Every one of the questions which have been brought up to-day was considered and fully discussed in the House. The gentleman discussed it himself and voted for it, and I believe that every Republican in the House did so. It was, in fact, almost a unanimous vote.

It was not a hastily prepared bill, but was before the House during nearly all of the Forty-seventh Congress, and only became the law on March 3, 1883, the day that Congress ceased to exist. It was amended over and over again, and the section providing that the War Claims Committee should have authority to refer cases to the Court of Claims was incorporated in order that the facts might be fairly and honestly adjudicated, and this was regarded as the most important feature in the law. It was regarded as more important to the Government than to the individual, as it saved the Government from being imposed upon by the committee being compelled to act upon ex parte affidavits.

The gentleman, I know, recalls the spirited debate on this point between Mr. Bowman, of Massachusetts, and General Bragg, of Wisconsin.

The mode of procedure under the Bowman Act has been as follows: When a petition is presented to the House for the payment of money for supplies, it shall be referred to the Committee on War Claims. That committee, before reporting it back to the House, shall have authority to invoke the aid of the Court of Claims, which shall report its findings back to Congress, but no judgment is rendered; they simply report the findings of fact as obtained by the court under the rules of evidence, and return it to the committee, and the committee then consider the matter and make their report to the House.

I want to repeat that in substance the clause of the Bowman Act which is sought to be nullified is nothing more than authority to the War Claims Committee to invoke the aid of the Court of Claims to enable the committee to give fair and just consideration to a claim; and I also ask the gentleman to remember that the Court of Claims is inhibited from considering these claims unless the loyalty of the claimant is first established.

Let me ask if there can be any objection or if any harm can come to the Government by the Committee on War Claims invoking the aid of the Court of Claims before reporting the bill back to the House?

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, I think I have been as patient as the gentleman could wish. Has he now concluded his inquiry?

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman allow me a moment more? I asked leave to use five minutes of the time, and I shall occupy but a moment longer. I desire simply to recur to a fact with reference to a citizen in the district represented by the gentleman from Tennessee, in order to illustrate the operation of laws upon Southern men who served in the Federal Army. A Federal soldier of some distinction, Captain Mosier, of Tennessee, said to me shortly after the war that when Mr. Lincoln issued his proclamation saying that it was not his desire or intention to interfere with the institutions of the South he felt certain he could save his property by enlisting under the banner of the Union. He was one of the first to espouse the Union cause. He rose to the rank of captain, and campaigned from Louisville with Buell down to Savannah under Sherman, and he exclaimed, "Would you believe it, after the war was over, after fighting through it all, when they emancipated the negroes they emancipated my negroes, too?" [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman permit me to offer an amendment at this time?

Mr. DALZELL. Just a word. I want no misunderstanding as to my position. I concede that this relates simply tc claims over which the House itself has jurisdiction, and has nothing to do with claims in reference to which it has parted with jurisdiction. In other words, that it does not refer to Rule XI at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask to offer my amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I must ask for the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not offer the amendment when I had the floor because I understood I should have permission to offer the amendment later. I thought I should have permission to offer an amendment to the amendment. I do not think the gentleman will object to it under the statement which was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. I hope the gentleman will hear it.

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman understands from what has been said that the committee is not deprived of its power to refer.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think my friend will object to the amendment, if he will hear it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let us hear it read, then. I am too good-natured; that is my weakness.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think it is right.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "claim" add "by the House of Representatives."

Mr. RICHARDSON. That will make it conform to the effect of it, as stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the proposition?

Mr. RICHARDSON. My proposition is, after the word "claim," in the proposed amendment, to add the words "by the House of Representatives." The effect of it will be that where any claim is referred by the House of Representatives to the Court of Claims, it will first go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not understand the gentleman. What does he mean by that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why, the gentleman's argument is based on the idea that it is where the House itself makes the reference that it must first be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Tennessee will for a moment consider the natural course of a bill under the rules he will see that it must be so, because the bills are presented to the Speaker and are referred, and they can not go to the Committee of the Whole until they come back from the committee to which they are referred.

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly; it is perfectly clear.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, while that is so, after the Chair, acting for the House, has referred a bill—we will say it is a war-claim bill—to the Committee on War Claims, is it understood that that committee will then refer that bill to the Court of Claims without it coming back to the House?

The SPEAKER. That is a question of law on which the gentleman's judgment is as good as that of anybody else.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think we may settle that as we go along here now.

Mr. DINGLEY. If my friend will pardon me, this is a rule referring to proceedings in Committee of the Whole House. Does not my friend know that nothing can be considered in Committee of the Whole House until it has been reported back by a committee and is on the Calendar?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; I know that.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then what is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. RICHARDSON. But does not this rule attempt to provide that no committee of this House shall refer a claim to the Court of Claims until it has been considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. DINGLEY. It does not say that. There is nothing here that reads that way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If that is true, that is all I desire to accomplish by my amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is no doubt about that. I ask for the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman will not permit my amendment to be offered, then? I take it the amendment is not necessary, anyway, under the construction given the proposed amendment, which may be considered as the construction of the House, then, I suppose.

Mr. HENDERSON. I must ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Rule XXIV, section 2, in the next to the last line, after the words "Committee of the Whole," strike out the words "may also."

Mr. CRISP. What is the amendment? There is nothing in the print which I have before me to indicate it.

Mr. HENDERSON. This amendment is simply to correct a repetition. It is a matter of mere formality, a verbal amendment to Rule XXIV.

Mr. CRISP. It is not italicized, as the other amendments are, and I do not see it.

The SPEAKER. It is merely the correction of a verbal error which was in the original rule.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is to strike out the words "may also" in the next to the last line.

The SPEAKER. There is a repetition of the words "may also."

Mr. HENDERSON. It is merely a question of grammar.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I suggest that there is nothing to vote upon. There is no motion pending, and it requires a motion to strike out these two words.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the point made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. It seems to me that in order to make this vote effective, a motion should be made to strike out the words "may also."

The SPEAKER. That is the proposition which is presented to the House.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I did not understand that. I thought it was claimed that the amendment was printed in the copy of the rules which we have before us.

The SPEAKER. That is the motion. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there any other amendment to be made to this section?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule XXIV by adding as clause 7 the following:
"Whenever a member of either House of Congress dies during the term for which he was elected it shall be in order, in place of special memorial services, for a member to announce the same and to send a resolution to the desk briefly stating the worth and services of the deceased; which, if adopted by the House, shall be printed in the RECORD."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "briefly" as it occurs. If we are to abandon these ceremonies it is not necessary to use the word "briefly" in the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I accept that amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman in charge of the report think it proper to abandon them?

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not consented to it, but I want the amendment in proper shape.

Mr. McMILLIN. It would appear to me that if this House can not take cognizance of the life and character of a gentleman who has died in the public service we are a very busy body.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I think it would be a good deal better to spend our time in the performance of the duties for which we were elected and let the dead bury the dead. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BOATNER. Which amendment?

The SPEAKER. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa has been accepted by the gentleman from New York, and the question is on the amendment as proposed by him. The Clerk will read it as modified.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to suggest as an amendment that there should be leave to print for ten days.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. As that seems to be the wish of the House, I accept that also.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that if this practice is to be abandoned at all, if there is any public exigency that requires that there shall not be a memorial recognition of a man who has spent his life in the public service and who dies in it, I think it would only be an insult to his memory to go through the useless form of printing some things that were never said concerning him. I am not going to object. If the gentleman thinks it proper to take that course, and wants to do it, I will not stand in the way; but it looks to me very much like, if the custom is abandoned, and if we are to pay no regard to the memory of those men who die in the public service, it would also be decent not to inaugurate any mockery in connection with it.

Mr. BOATNER. I want to ask the gentleman if he has not had his sensibilities seriously affected by seeing a mockery of memorial services over a member of the House when not half a dozen members of the House were in attendance, and I will ask him whether he does not really think it is a mockery that ought to be abolished? I think if I were going to die in the service of the country, and knew it, I should make a dying request that these ceremonies should be omitted with reference to me.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from New York, I suppose, will not say that there should not be so much respect shown as makes provision for carrying him to the depot when he is to be sent home, if he were to die here. I will say in response to my friend from Louisiana, Mr. Speaker, that I do not want to treat his interrogatory otherwise than most respectfully, for I have the most profound respect for his judgment and know that habitually he takes the serious and the patriotic side of all questions here. In reply to his inquiry I do not hesitate to say that I have never seen any services in this House in memory of a deceased member that were not beneficial in their character to mankind; and I have seen this House spend its time in a thousand times worse way than in commemorating faithful public service. The trouble with this amendment is that it does not go to the root of the evil. The exercises here are costless and decorous. Let him seek to correct the evil or reduce unnecessary expenses and I will join him cheerfully in it. I have no anxiety in the matter, however, as I do not intend to die here.

Mr. BOATNER. It seems to be an ungracious thing to support the proposition of the gentleman from New York, but I have so often seen memorial services degenerate to mockery that I feel compelled to vote for it. It has come to be the custom to set aside a part of an evening for these services by special order, and when the time is reached for the special order, all except those who expect to deliver memorial addresses take their hats and go away. It is a useless charge upon the public; it is a useless consumption of public time, and it is a mockery except in cases where the distinction of the member who died is such as to command audiences on those occasions. For one I think it is a movement in the right direction, and think that a resolution spread upon the record attesting the estimation in which the deceased member is held by the House of Representatives is a sufficient recognition of his merit and would be all that proper respect could require.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the amendment will not prevail. I think that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] has given most excellent reasons why it should not be adopted. If I understand the effect of the amendment it would be to prevent the delivery of eulogies here upon our deceased members. Now, it seems to me that it is only a decent and proper thing for this House to suspend its ordinary business for a few hours to do honor to the memory of men who have rendered long and distinguished public services upon this floor. I am sure that such an amendment as this would not meet the approval of the country. These memorial services usually take place on a Saturday afternoon after the business of the House has been concluded, and therefore do not really occupy time which otherwise would be employed in legislation. The old Romans had a maxim, memento mori, and it was a sound maxim. It is good for us to pause occasionally in our public duties and ponder upon the solemn fact that we, too, are mortal and that we have here no continuing city. It is a decent and proper proceeding, and I certainly hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. Speaker, these eulogies upon our deceased members are an inspiration to the young men of our country. They not infrequently develop the fact, as in the case of Judge Houk, of Tennessee, that men have risen to the high position of member of Congress in spite of untoward circumstances, in spite of misfortune of birth, in spite of poverty. And in this way I say they are an inspiration to the young men of the country who are surrounded by unfortunate circumstances to rise above the circumstances of their birth. In the eulogies to which I have referred the fact was developed that Congressman Houk, of Tennessee, got his education by the light of a pine torch; that he struggled with poverty and untold obstacles, in spite of which he rose to be a judge of his native State and finally to be a member of Congress, and for many years to represent that State on the floor of this House with dignity and signal ability. They inspire patriotism and love of country, and I believe are worth all they cost.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to this House that after the most eloquent eulogy which was published in the RECORD in commemoration of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Charles O'Neill, by our friend from Massachusetts, Mr. MORSE, I think it would be a great deprivation to this House not to have this practice of pronouncing eulogies continued as each member of the House goes to his long home. But, on the other hand, I think we ought to pay some regard to the remarks of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] on this subject, for it was but very recently that we all burned midnight oil in writing eulogies in anticipation of a prospective event which was liable to occur to that gentleman. [Great laughter.] No wonder what might be the result added new terrors to the meeting. So far as these eulogies generally are concerned, I think that the empty benches of this House have been called upon to weep and mourn often enough, and as that has been the only effect, it seems to me that it would be well to suspend these commemorative eulogies here and let them be addressed to living men at the homes of members rather than to empty benches here. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say only a word. I am in sympathy with the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. I remember that at one time during my experience here the cost of printing the eulogies delivered in a single Congress exceeded $100,000. That is one reason for dropping the practice, but it is not the controlling one. It is a question in my mind whether this amendment to our rules, if it be adopted, ought to take effect during the present Congress, for this reason: The Senate will probably go on, under its rules, continuing to have eulogies delivered and printed—if there should be any occasion for eulogies there. [Laughter.] We have no knowledge that the Senate will consent to this change, and if they do not the effect will be that they will continue to deliver and print their eulogies, while this body will be deprived of that privilege. [Laughter.] It occurs to me, therefore, that the gentleman from New York ought to limit his amendment by providing that it shall not be operative until after the adjournment of this session of Congress, so that the Senate may have an opportunity to adopt a similar rule if it is so disposed.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I think some gentlemen here misapprehend the effect of these memorial addresses upon the public mind. The other day I received a letter from a constituent of my colleague, Mr. HENDERSON, saying that he had written to his Representative for some documents, but had not got them, and asking me to send him an agricultural report, and also some memorial addresses, because, as he said, there was nothing he read with so much pleasure as the obituaries of Congressmen. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The whole country is in about the same state of mind.

Mr. LACEY. Well, I think we ought not to deprive our constituents of such valuable literature. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], which I am not willing to accept, because I think that we ought to establish our own rules without reference to the action of any other body—if the Senators see fit to continue the practice which has prevailed in the past, it is for them to do so, and if we may not give them advice, certainly we are not required to withhold action which we may deem proper for this body until the Senate shall have made a similar reform.

I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that our friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] is always desirous of putting before the people on every suitable occasion the words of truth and wisdom with which he is overflowing, and when his great generosity comes to be understood by gentlemen who have not had the opportunity of witnessing its manifestations in the past they will better appreciate the remarks he has just made.

My distinguished friend in the last Congress, in a memorial address, transformed a venerable bachelor of mature years into a married man with wife and many children. [Laughter.] I need hardly say that this account of the deceased member somewhat disturbed his friends at home, who had always supposed that their distinguished representative at Washington had pursued an entirely different course of life. [Great laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, that mistake was all owing to the extreme generosity of our friend from Massachusetts. His warm heart and kindly feelings undoubtedly led him to believe that every good man should enter into marital relations, and therefore he assumed that so good a man as the one he was commemorating must necessarily have been a man of family. This case illustrates another fact, namely, that the gentlemen who address the House on such occasions generally know so little about the details of the lives of those they eulogize that their addresses would be equally applicable to Peter Jones or John Smith. [Laughter.]

As has been said by the gentleman from Louisiana, on the days appointed for these eulogies, as soon as the order is reached, every man, excepting those detailed to make the speeches, takes his hat and leaves the Hall. There could be nothing more disrespectful toward the friends of a deceased member than such action in this House, and could any of them see it they would wish that no member of their family who might be a member of Congress and die during his term should be the subject of such a proceeding.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman's amendment propose to do away with that portion of the obsequies which is really the expensive portion—the funeral procession and the "wake"—or does the gentleman propose to let that go on?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I am not interfering with that——

Mr. McMILLIN. Then you are willing for that to go on?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. My friend from Tennessee should understand that the provision now under consideration relates to proceedings in this House. The matter to which the gentleman refers comes under another head. I shall be glad to join with him in reducing the funeral expenses of deceased members so that the family might regard them as suitable to his condition in life. But that is not the question now before the House.

Why need more be done for any man who may die while a member of the House, whatever may have been his services to the country, than to have this body stop in its proceedings, take notice of the fact of his death, and by resolution set forth the character of the man and his services, and such a resolution, if adopted by the House, printed in the records, to be preserved in the archives of the Government. No man who may occupy a seat on this floor should desire more to be done in respect to his memory than that. It should be sufficient on the death of anyone now living or of anyone who may already have died, to have the House adopt the simple, dignified method of announcing the fact and expressing the sense of the House as to the character of the man and his services. I hope the amendment will be adopted. It will save expense to the Government and promote the dignity and character of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I can not agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS]. It may be that there is necessity for some reform in these memorial services; but I do not believe we should adopt a proposition to dispense with these services entirely. To simply print a resolution in the RECORD, as here proposed, would be almost equivalent to ignoring the death of a man altogether when he dies a member of this House. His relatives would scarcely be able to find the resolution. It seems to me that when a man has served his constituents in this House a long term of years, or even for a short term, the House can well afford to spend enough time to give suitable recognition of his life and services if death comes to him here while at his post of duty.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has said jocularly that a constituent wrote to him saying that he was delighted to read the eulogies on deceased members of Congress. It seems to me the gentleman from Iowa can not have been quite accurate in that statement. The meaning intended was probably this: A great many young and earnest men have applied to me for these eulogies upon the ground that in them they read the history of struggling young Americans who have made their lives successful. Those who thus apply to me say: "We want to know the history of such men; we want to know something of their struggles." A lesson for the young men of the country, and for the older men of the country, can be learned from reading of the struggles and trials of many of these men in reaching the United States Senate or the House of Representatives. In this way, according to my view, these memorial addresses are often beneficial. In these memorials the poorest boy in this country may stimulate his courage and learn that these men, many of them with surroundings in no way superior to his own, rose to high and honored places in the nation.

I am surprised that a resolution of this kind should come from the gentleman from New York. In the great army of which he was so conspicuous a member, when the most inconspicuous private went down to death, if the army was not in dire conflict—if there was any possibility of taking time to do it—that inconspicuous private was accompanied to his grave by a detail of his comrades with muffled drums and reversed arms, and over his grave a salute was fired in commemoration of his services. It seems to me that this House could scarcely do less in respect to a deceased colleague than observe some ceremony appropriate with reference to one of their associates. If there be a demand for some reform in this line, it is evident to me that the suggestion now made in that direction has not been properly considered. The question ought to be acted on in connection with the Senate. We should not have the Senate pursuing one line in these matters while we pursue another. We should not, in other words, pay less attention to the deceased members of this body than is paid at the other end of the Capitol to deceased Senators. Any reform which may be attempted ought certainly to be well considered. The proposition that we merely pass resolutions does not seem to me adequate.

Some gentlemen make objection to these memorial services because all the members of the House do not stay and hear the eulogies. I concede that this is sometimes the fact. These services are like the funerals which we have at home. If a man is widely known and people feel greatly interested in regard to him there is a larger attendance at his funeral than at that of a less distinguished man. But I have never seen on these memorial occasions in this House anything else than the most orderly conduct, and I think all must be impressed with the solemnity of the occasion during these memorial exercises. Time and again I have remained here when I knew little or nothing of the deceased member, except the history then given of him, and have been interested in hearing that history rehearsed by his friends. Certainly it is not expected that members who are not especially interested should all stay here on such occasions, but there will always be found a goodly number to remain.

It does seem to me that there is not so great a rush of business—there is not such a demand for giving up every moment of our time to legislation—that we may not, as suggested by my friend from Massachusetts, devote so much as may be necessary of Saturday afternoons, or possibly Friday afternoons, to these memorial services. I am not in favor of adopting such a proposition as this now, especially when it would have the effect of cutting out the eulogies of such men as General Cogswell, that distinguished soldier and statesman, our colleague in this House, so much admired and loved by his colleagues in previous Houses. I think the pending proposition has not been well considered, and should not be adopted. I think if there has been a demand, or any necessity of the adoption of such a measure, it ought to be in connection with the action of the Senate, that it ought to be done in an orderly and regular manner, and not adopted in the shape proposed here as an amendment to the rules of the House.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. HENDERSON. I must demand the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a moment to offer an amendment.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Before that, I would like to inquire if the gentleman from South Dakota, when he speaks of the "services of the men on this floor," does not recall the proceedings in the last Congress, where men elected to Congress who never were here at all had as much attention paid to them, and when members on this floor delivered orations on them, as in the case of the most distinguished men in the Republic?

Mr. PICKLER. Well, I am not undertaking to classify the members; but I would not deny any member elected to the House such a distinction.

Mr. HENDERSON. I withdraw the demand for the previous question for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Ohio to offer an amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not wish any debate upon it, but simply to add to the amendment pending the words:

Provided, That nothing in this rule shall prevent eulogies on members of this House who have died prior to this date.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I accept that.

Mr. QUIGG. Is there an amendment pending providing for leave to print?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. It has been already offered.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HENDERSON. Now, I demand the previous question.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the previous question will not be ordered. It is not right.

Mr. HENDERSON. We have shown every indulgence to the members in considering these rules. It is getting along late in the afternoon of Saturday, but I withdraw the request in order that the gentleman from Delaware may be heard, after which I shall insist upon it.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman withdraws the demand, the Chair will first recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG].

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those "young, struggling Americans"—to whom the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] so touchingly referred, and for the suitable publication of whose virtues after death he is so solicitous—and I am frank to say that there is nothing that would add a more acute pang to my feelings in apprehension of that event than to think that things were going to happen about me in this House when I had died which I have observed in the cases of other "young, struggling Americans" who came to Congress, but who had led otherwise blameless lives.

I understand that this business of eulogies consumes from fifteen to twenty days of the sessions of the House. Half a month is spent in listening to obituaries, or, if not in listening to them (because few members do that), in having them read on the floor of the House. There could be no waste of time more objectionable to the members who have died, I am quite sure. And the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] says that it costs a hundred thousand dollars of the public money to pay for the mere printing of these obituaries.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; I said that was the case in former Congresses. It does not reach that sum now, because under the general law the printing is limited—a smaller amount being allowed.

Mr. QUIGG. But what sum or sums will be required if the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Iowa prevails, of giving leave to print on these occasions? That is a very bad suggestion. There is no practice of the House, as it seems to me, more entirely unwarrantable than this habit of sticking into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD things that were never said on the floor of the House. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD ought to be what it was intended to be, a record of just exactly what is said—verbatim et literatim—and of nothing else, and there ought not to be a line in it, or one dollar of expense incurred on the part of the people of the country with respect to it, of things that are not said, and that we know there is no time to say. This practice is a fraud on our constituents in two ways: First, by the pretense that we do things that we do not do, and then by making them pay for the pretense. It is to my mind a very petty sort of vanity that prompts this practice. I hope it will not be continued in any such increasing or objectionable form as is proposed by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not propose the amendment myself, but said I approved of it.

Mr. QUIGG. I hope we will do away with all this nonsense, and if the House wishes to pay its respect to a deceased member it can do so sufficiently under the amendment to the rules proposed by my colleague from New York, which I sincerely hope will be adopted.

We can record upon the House Journal the fact of our respect for him. We can send a copy of the RECORD to his family, and that is all that ought to be done unless the character of the man is such as calls for a public tribute. Then the rule could be suspended for the occasion, as, of course, it would be.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I hope this amendment will not prevail. I have one reason for it that nobody has referred to, and that is, that we consume so much time saying unpleasant things of one another that it constitutes a very profitable exercise to meet on such occasions and say something that is good about one another. [Applause.] If there is no other reason for this than the wholesome exercise of the human mind which is involved in that idea I believe that neither time nor money is wasted. [Applause.] Because, while we remember that we are Congressmen and representatives of the people in this country's legislative body, it is not well for us to forget that we are men—a few feet of organized dirt, endowed with certain strange and often conflicting qualities; acting many times upon motives that are not too high, and making it too frequently a practice to find out all the faults of our neighbors and none of the virtues.

Now, these memorial occasions bring to the surface and to the tongues of men utterances concerning what is good of one another, after they have been spending too much time in spreading before the world what they think is not good of one another. Looking at this thing as a matter of common observation and human philosophy, these memorial services have accomplished some good in this direction; and, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] has well said, it is a profitable time for pause, for reflection; and even though the audience that may be present may not be a large one, influences arise in our minds which better qualify us to legislate for the people, to entertain sentiments of well-ordered patriotism, and to do the duties devolving upon us as representatives of our constituencies better than we should otherwise perform them.

We are not ready for such a radical change, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. HENDERSON. I merely want to say to the House that there is no rule on this subject. The Committee on Rules have not proposed any amendment, and this proposition is brought forward by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS], with an amendment by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will detain the House only for a moment on this question, for I do not wish, in anything that pertains to the rules or the conduct of our business, to appear in any light except as one seeking to promote good government. I realize that there might be some reform inaugurated along the lines proposed here. That there has been some complaint at the method of conducting the funerals of deceased members is unquestionable. How far that has been well founded, or how far it has been ill founded, I will not undertake to say. There has also been some complaint at the amount expended in conducting these funerals. How just that is I will not undertake to discuss, but I want to say that whatever evil there may be connected with this, the rule that is proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS] does not reach any evil. The most expensive part of it he leaves untouched and does not propose to remedy. His amendment does not even pretend to reach that. If we are going to do anything at all, let us do that which is substantial. Let him propose to conduct funerals more decorously or cut off any unnecessary expense and I join him. But these he does not seek to do.

What we should do in this matter depends entirely upon how far we remedy any ill. If this amendment went to the remedy of any great evil, we might afford to adopt it, but it seems to me it does not remedy any ill complained of. It does not do away with the long journey and expensive funeral, but only with the costless part of the proceeding.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. It is a step in the right direction.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask the previous question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to move an amendment. I move to strike out the words which were inserted by request, giving leave to print. My reason is a very simple one, and I can give it in one word.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have refused to yield to several gentlemen around me, because I think we must finish this up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I simply desire to make this motion and to state the reason for it in a word.

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman from Massachusetts and several other gentlemen have requested to be recognized, and I have refused.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I submit my amendment to the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this rule shall prevent eulogies on men who have died previous to this date.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the original amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 130.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. If there is no other amendment to be offered to this rule, the Clerk will read the next.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Rule XXVII, section 1, strike out "No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor"; and also strike out the words "except to fix a day for the consideration of a bill or resolution already favorably reported by a committee on motion directed to be made by such committee, which will require only a majority vote of the House," and insert, after the word "members," the words "voting, a quorum being."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Unless there is further amendment proposed, the Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Rule XXXVI, amend section 2 by striking out, after the words "may assign," the words "two seats," and insert the words "one seat"; after the words "press reporters" insert "and"; after the words "United Press" insert the word "reporters," and strike out the words immediately following, "and one to the Press News Association Reporter"; and after the words "occupation of the same" insert "and the Speaker may admit to the floor, under such regulations as he may prescribe, one additional representative of each press association."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to this rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule XXXVI as reported by inserting, after the word "chair," in line 4, the words "and to the Hall in the rear thereof."

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, the object of this amendment is to introduce the same provision that we had in the latter part of the last Congress, in order that, under such regulations as may be established by the Speaker, it may be the privilege of members to meet the representatives of the different newspapers in the room back of the Speaker's chair. It seems to me that that was a very great accommodation to us all as well as to the members of the newspaper fraternity. It is certainly a most unpleasant thing to be called upon to go into the corridors to confer with the representatives of the press; and there can be no question that our own convenience was greatly promoted by the provision of the last Congress which I propose in this amendment to secure to ourselves.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I want the House to understand the effect of this proposition. It is to allow the newspaper correspondents to enter the doors on the two sides and occupy the lobby of the hall and the parlors. That is the way I understand the amendment. Am I right?

Mr. WANGER. I was not aware that I was off the floor.

Mr. HENDERSON. I supposed the gentleman had yielded. I beg pardon. I had no intention to take the gentleman off the floor.

Mr. WANGER. What is your question?

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand the purport of your amendment is to give the newspaper correspondents the right to use the hall outside and the parlors.

Mr. WANGER. The right to use the hall under such regulations as the Speaker may prescribe.

Mr. HENDERSON. You apply that to those rooms right back of the Speaker's desk?

Mr. WANGER. I do.

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg your pardon. I thought you had concluded your remarks.

Mr. WANGER. Not quite.

I have heard an intimation that it is proposed to secure other rooms in which to meet the representatives of the press, and it may be that there are other rooms which are available for that purpose which would answer as well as these rooms will; but the provision "under such regulations as the Speaker may from time to time prescribe" covers the case. I do not believe that there can be any abuse of the privilege, if it is possible to conceive that there would be any abuse. I take it there was none during the last Congress, and the representatives of the press are gentlemen who will respect the rights and privileges of this House under whatever regulations the Speaker may prescribe, and that there will be a promotion of our own convenience as well as preserving the utmost order and decorum.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the proposition, as I stated when, in error, I supposed the gentleman had yielded the floor, is to allow representatives of the newspapers to occupy that hall and the parlors back of the Speaker's chair. In antagonizing that proposition I know I incur, and those voting as I shall vote will incur possibly, the displeasure of the representatives of the able journals of this country; but I do not believe in this amendment, nor do I think it is right for this House to shirk its responsibility and throw it upon the presiding officer. Let us decide whether we want to share with others the use of those parlors and that hall. My judgment is that it is an unwise thing to do. For the accommodation of members rooms were taken away where I am now pointing—to the left—that were used by the Speaker besides the comfortable room that he now enjoys.

They were taken out and thrown into that large hall in order to give better accommodation to the members of this House. We know perfectly well that any representative of the press desiring to see us will see us, for if there is any strong hand that we are always willing to shake it is the hand that wields the quill, and we will never fail to see a member of the press when he desires it. But, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that that is a spot that should be sacred to the rest and the conferences of members of this body. That was the intention in constructing that lobby, and I believe it should be kept for that purpose. Besides, since we have established a more strict rule against smoking, a larger latitude may be needed in that respect outside of this Hall, and gentlemen desiring to smoke who have hitherto indulged upon the floor may be driven into that corridor to enjoy their cigars. I wish the members of this House to understand exactly what this amendment means, and then they must take the responsibility of determining whether we shall keep those quarters for ourselves, treating them as a part of this Chamber, or whether we shall share them with others.

Mr. QUIGG. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa whether, under the regulation which was in force in the last House, newspaper men had any privilege of entering the lobby except upon the invitation of members?

Mr. HENDERSON. They came in there freely, as I understand.

Mr. QUIGG. The regulation of the last House, as I understood it, was that when a card was sent in by a newspaper man to a member and the member desired to see him he might invite him into that lobby for the purpose of conferring with him. That was a very reasonable rule, it seems to me, and one which was certainly very useful to the members of the House. I do not think the newspaper men care much about it, but I should think the members would.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what regulations were issued. I simply know that members of the press were around that lobby constantly, so that at times you could hardly move around there without meeting some of them. I believe I am warranted in saying further that distinguished gentlemen, representing some of the great journals of this country, are opposed to this amendment. That is my information, and I believe it. At all events, I still adhere to my proposition that that piece of territory out there should be kept sacred for the use of members of this body. When we want to see a member of the press let us go out and see him, as we would go to meet any other American citizen who desired to see us. If I have a right to invite a member of the press in here I ought to have a like right to bring in any other citizen of the United States who may desire to confer with me in relation to his interests pending in this body.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 74.

Mr. WANGER. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER (after a count). One hundred and ninety members are present—a quorum. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected. [Applause.] The Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Rule XLV, strike out the words in section 2 inclosed in brackets, so that the rule shall read:

"1. All documents referred to committees or otherwise disposed of shall be printed unless otherwise specially ordered.

"2. Motions to print additional numbers of any bill, report, resolution, or other public document shall be referred to the Committee on Printing; and the report of the committee thereon shall be accompanied by an estimate of the probable cost thereof. Unless ordered by the House, no bill, resolution, or other proposition reported by a committee shall be reprinted unless the same be placed upon the Calendar."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I want to make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of this report. Under the operation of this rule heretofore, House bills with Senate amendments and Senate bills sent to us have not been printed except by special order of the House. The rule only relates to bills introduced in the House. Now, I wish to say that my experience in considering such bills has been quite unsatisfactory, and I think there ought to be some provision made for the printing of House bills when amended by the Senate, so as to show how they have been amended by the Senate. In that body they print House bills when we send them over there, and the members of the Senate committee having charge of them have the benefit of such a print; but Senate bills and House bills with Senate amendments are never printed here until they are reported to the House by the committee. The clerk of the committee is charged with the custody of the officially enrolled bills, and it is his duty to keep them carefully, and the consequence is that members of the committee have not and can not have free access to them. Now, I think the proper consideration of legislation that progresses that far and is referred to the House committees requires that it should be printed as it goes to the committee, and I trust this rule will be made broad enough to provide for that.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the sole purpose of this amendment is to strike out a provision in the rules of the Fifty-first Congress which is no longer necessary by reason of the passage in the last Congress of what is known as the printing bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not understand from the reading how much of the text was proposed to be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. That portion which is inclosed between brackets in the second section is proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes. The proposition is to strike out that part of the old rule which is now rendered unnecessary by the printing bill, so called.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. This finishes the amendments reported by the committee, and the Chair will now call attention to the other rules. Is there any amendment——

Mr. McRAE (interposing). If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] does not wish to offer the amendment I will move that Senate bills and House bills with Senate amendments be printed, the usual number.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not understand the gentleman's proposition. Probably he did not take in the scope of our amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The difficulty which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] has suggested is this: When a Senate bill comes to this House and is referred to a committee, that committee, under the arrangements which have existed heretofore, must depend upon the engrossed copy of the bill; and there is only one such copy sent. The gentleman from Arkansas suggests that there ought to be printed copies of Senate bills which come here; and I think he is correct in that suggestion.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the printing law provide for this?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does not.

Mr. HENDERSON. I supposed this matter was covered by that law.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It never has been the practice under any law or rule for the House to print bills coming here from the Senate, though, as the gentleman from Arkansas has stated, the Senate rules provide for the printing of House bills which go to that body.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. McRAE. That the rule be amended so as to authorize the printing of the same number of Senate bills when they are transmitted to the House and also House bills as amended by the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suggest that the gentleman reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It seems to me hardly necessary that we should print more than a hundred copies of these Senate bills.

Mr. McRAE. I think there ought to be no objection to this amendment. I am not particular as to the number which may be printed so that enough be printed for the use of the committee that may be charged with the consideration of the bill. I know that in the Committee on Public Lands it has often been the case that when we were considering a bill of great importance there was only one copy in the possession of the committee, and that the officially enrolled copy. In such cases the manuscript copy is in the custody of the clerk, and can not be marked or changed; and when there are sixteen or seventeen members handling it, it is liable to be lost. The committees should at least have a print of the bills they are expected to consider, and these are usually given preference.

Under the arrangements which have existed heretofore we have had no printed copies of the Senate bills coming to the House, or of House bills passed by the Senate with amendments. After a House bill is materially changed by amendment in the Senate, members are often misled by getting the original print. From such causes I have often seen confusion arise on the floor and very great inconvenience in committee in the consideration of important measures. I sought to have adopted in the last Congress an amendment such as I now suggest and to which I hope this House will agree.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will read the amendment:

Of bills which have passed the Senate and of House bills as amended by the Senate when referred in the House there shall be printed 100 copies.

Mr. HENDERSON. This subject was not considered by our committee, but the proposition seems to me eminently wise.

Mr. DINGLEY. In view of the large membership of the House, I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee whether it would not be desirable to have 300 copies printed. These bills coming from the Senate are often of the greatest importance.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas was simply that these printed copies were needed for committees.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think often each member of the House will desire a copy.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I modify the amendment by striking out "100" and inserting "400."

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to propose an amendment to Rule XIV—not affecting the substance, but only the form of that rule. The rule as already passed with the amendment reads as follows:

While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor when a member is speaking pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots—or smoke upon the floor of the House.

Up to that point the language is all right. It continues—

Then, after providing for the enforcement of that clause by the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Doorkeeper, the rule as now amended continues—

Neither shall any person be allowed to smoke upon the floor of the House at any time.

The point I make is that the prohibition contained in the previous words "or smoke upon the floor of the House" is repeated in the clause I have last read, and therefore it ought to be struck out.

Mr. HENDERSON. I shall have to object to going back to make that amendment. The matter has already been considered in committee. We thought we would rivet this thing.

Mr. BRUMM. But you have not riveted it; you have confounded it; that is the trouble.

Mr. HENDERSON. There can not be any confusion about it.

Mr. BRUMM. I will ask any member to read the rule as it now stands and say whether the most ordinary schoolboy could not have done better. I submit that, as it now stands, it is bad English and worse composition.

The SPEAKER. The committee amendments having been disposed of, the Chair will call the remaining rules in their numerical order for other amendments.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word of the second rule, for the purpose of making a single remark to my friend from New York——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to his amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORSE. I am coming to that later on.

My friend from New York [Mr. CURTIS], in his reference to myself during the debate a few moments ago indulged in a little pleasantry at my expense to the effect that I had delivered a eulogy on a member of the House in which I made a misstatement in reference to his family relations. My friend has been led into an error. He got that statement from a newspaper paragraph, and he will find nothing in the eulogy to justify it. The story was a newspaper "fake," pure and simple, and had no basis whatever in fact.

That is all I desire to say, and I withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will proceed to call the remaining rules.

When Rule XXV was called,

Mr. MCMILLIN said: Mr. Speaker, as to Rule XXI—which has not been called.

The SPEAKER. That has been passed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understood that it was agreed to allow the committee's amendment to be first disposed of, and then, if other amendments were to be offered, we could proceed to do so in the order in which the rules were reached.

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order to offer an amendment to Rule XXI, because under the agreement it has been passed over. But the Chair will ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then I misunderstood the order. My understanding was that we would consider the committee amendments first and then go back if other amendments were desired. But my seat is so far back in the Hall that I did not understand clearly what the arrangement was.

The SPEAKER. The understanding was that each rule was to be disposed of where there were committee amendments offered, and then go through the other list and ascertain if amendments were to be offered by any member of the House. Is there objection to recurring to Rule XXI?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to offer an amendment to that rule in lieu of section 2 as reported by the committee. I want to offer the old rule that for very many years was in force in the House as section 2 of the twenty-first rule, and I send it to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill, or amendment thereto, changing existing law, be in order except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee, or any joint commission authorized by law, or the House members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments only in explaining what I believe to be the merits of the proposition.

This is not an experiment, for, with the exception of one Congress, it has been the rule under which this House of Representatives has operated for more than fifteen years—I believe over eighteen. It allows the incorporation into the general appropriation bills of reforms in the law which tend to the reduction of the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, the object of this rule is to enable the House at any and all times, when considering appropriation bills, to retrench expenditures, abolish useless offices, or otherwise perfect reforms in the Government.

Sir, under the rules proposed for the government of this body, if the Committee on Appropriations finds an office that is useless, they can not abolish it. If they find where, by change of law, they could save money, they are not allowed to do it. They are mere figureheads, powerless for good, but may be forced to perpetuate an evil.

To further illustrate, if there is found on the statute book a law for an appropriation which is not necessary, it may still be put in, and there will be no power to amend the law on the part of that committee or that House which is called upon to make the appropriation. I for one have always believed that the House of Representatives ought to preserve its liberty even on appropriation bills to amend laws for the purpose of retrenching expenditures, abolishing useless offices, or so taking advantage of whatever light may fall on the conduct of Government affairs which may enable business to be performed more cheaply than it has been done under former methods. I think it is susceptible of absolute demonstration that the principle of this amendment to the rules which I propose has saved this Government more than $200,000,000. I do not hesitate to say also that I believe that the failure to incorporate it in the rules of the Fifty-first Congress was fruitful of the continuance of unnecessary expenditures and added to the enormous expenditures of that Congress. I believe that if this Congress returns to the methods of that Congress by the rejection of this rule, and the incorporation of the rule under which there was so much of what was complained of as useless expenditure, we may expect to find the same calamities overtaking the same folly. I have therefore offered the amendment in order to give the House an opportunity to judge between the two systems. I have little hope of its adoption. We are in the minority. But whether voted up or down it is right.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House in discussing this proposition. It is not a new proposition, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] says. It was laid aside in the Forty-ninth Congress. It failed of adoption in the Fifty-first Congress, and the rules of that Congress would seem to me to embody the proper practice. It is no function of an Appropriation Committee to do anything but appropriate money. It is no function of an Appropriation Committee to legislate. If this House desires to legislate on any subject, let it be done out in the open in a manly way, in such a way that the Senate and Executive shall have an opportunity to pass upon the legislation unburdened with any duty imposed upon them with respect to an appropriation bill. I trust the amendment will be voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOPKINS). The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am informed by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] that in my reference to his eloquent eulogy upon a distinguished member from Pennsylvania I did him an injustice. I spoke from information which was communicated to the public by a newspaper, he tells me, and not from a careful reading of his oration. If this is true, I have done him an injustice. I wish to withdraw anything in the nature of an imputation that he spoke ill-advisedly or inaccurately of our distinguished friend from Pennsylvania. I had supposed that the references in his oration justified the statement which I made, which I take great pleasure in correcting on the assurance of himself and others that I was misinformed.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry in regard to the last clause in paragragh 2 of Rule XXI, to which we are now addressing ourselves, which reads as follows:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order to any general appropriation bill, or in any amendment thereto.

My inquiry is, whether that clause applies to the committee reporting the appropriation bill, or whether this debars the committee from reporting any amendment whatever to an appropriation bill which changes existing law?

Mr. CANNON. I suppose the same rule applies to the committee, acting as a committee, which applies to the individual.

Mr. PICKLER. Is that the holding of the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the answer of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] satisfactory to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. PICKLER. I should like to have it from the Chair.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is no question pending before the House upon which the Chair is called for a ruling.

Mr. PICKLER. I am making a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair would hold that such an amendment might be offered, but that it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. PICKLER. That is satisfactory. [Laughter.]

Mr. TERRY. I desire to ask unanimous consent to recur to Rule XXIV for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I shall have to object to giving unanimous consent to return to sections that we have already passed over, at least until we get through with the regular order.

Mr. TERRY. You recurred to Rule XXI a while ago.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes; and now there is a request to return to another section. Let us go on under the arrangement, and then we can take the temper of the House afterwards as to unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. We have not passed Rule XXI yet, as I understand.

Mr. HENDERSON. No; we have not.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Then, I offer an amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I object.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. We returned to Rule XXI by unanimous consent, and we have not passed over it.

Mr. HENDERSON. We went back to Rule XXI by unanimous consent, on the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], and we have not yet left it. No announcement has been made by the Chair that we would go to the next section, so I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILSON] is right. We have not left the section yet. I wish it was otherwise, because I want to get ahead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the explanation of the gentleman from Iowa the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILSON] to offer his amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I object. I say we have passed on, because another rule has been called up. A member had risen in his seat and said that he desired to propose an amendment to Rule XXIV, so that Rule XXI had been passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will overrule the objection of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] and will recognize the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Now, I submit to the gentleman from Iowa that this is the parliamentary position of that rule. We were considering Rule XXI, and still on it, when the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] rose and endeavored to secure consideration of Rule XXIV. We had not passed over Rule XXI.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already held that the gentleman from Ohio is in order with his amendment. [Cries of "Read!"]

The Clerk read as follows:

Every bill or joint resolution intended to amend, modify, repeal, or supplement existing law shall contain an accurate reference to the law which will be affected thereby.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Now, Mr. Speaker, that amendment is not offered in any technical sense whatever. I presume every member of Congress is aware of the fact that it is a custom of amending laws, repealing laws, modifying and supplementing statutes of the United States without any reference to the statutes to be affected thereby. This would require every member of Congress who introduces a bill affecting the existing law to state what particular law, what particular section, or what particular part of the law his bill was intended to affect. This matter is of so great importance that almost every State in the United States has a constitutional provision that requires every bill proposing to amend or modify a statute to expressly set forth the entire statute which it is intended to modify or amend.

This proposition does not go to that extent, but it will require such a reference as will enable us when we read that bill to know what law is repealed or modified or affected by it. It may be claimed by some gentlemen here that it will be difficult to draw bills to exactly conform with this requirement. In my opinion a gentleman who can not draw a bill which distinctly cites the act which it is intended to repeal, to modify, or amend ought to get somebody else to assist him to draw that bill correctly. Why should I have to read a bill changing existing law and not know where in the statutes of the United States I can find the law which it is proposed to repeal? The usual method is to provide "that all laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. How would you manage in proposing to change existing law, when the existing law is not statute law at all, but common law?

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. I think it is clearly apparent that this amendment means legislative laws. It can mean nothing else. The common law is law that is applied in the courts, not statutes; but here it can only refer to Congressional action, and that question can not arise. I am not particular about making many remarks on this occasion, but I regard it as a reform which ought to be established by Congress. If it is worthy of constitutional amendments in States, why is it not worthy of consideration by this Congress, and thereby get down to some system which will enable us to know very soon and readily what statutes are on the statute books? [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next rule is XXV. Are there any amendments to be offered to that?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire whether Rule XXIII has been passed under the order?

Mr. HENDERSON. It has been passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I did not understand that the order adopted by the House could have included those portions of Rule XXIII which were not included in the proposed amendment. There was a section of Rule XXIII included in the amendment offered by the committee; but there are several sections of that rule, to one of which I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Georgia will allow me, I would state that Rule XXIII had an amendment to it, which was voted upon, after which the Chair asked if there were any other amendments, and the rule was passed; and under the arrangement made when we made the report that rule can not now be returned to unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I will state to the gentleman from Iowa that my understanding of the order, as originally made, confined it to those amendments that were proposed by the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON. No; not at all. We were first to consider the rules where amendments were offered by the committee. After those amendments were disposed of any amendment to them could be introduced at that time, and after all the amendments reported from the committee were disposed of, then the Speaker was to go over the list of rules not heretofore considered and entertain amendments thereto.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I desire to say that I simply wished to offer an amendment to the second section, which defines a quorum of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will say to my friend that I would have to object, as I have in other cases, until we can get through, and then leave it to the House to determine whether they will follow the order or return.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I will not persist further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore then gave opportunity to offer amendments to Rules XXVI, XXVII, XXIX, XXX, XXXI, XXXII, XXXIII, XXXIV, XXXV, XXXVII, XXXVIII, XXXIX, XL, XLI, XLII, XLIII, and XLIV. No amendments were offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That completes the rules.

Mr. HENDERSON. That completes the work. Now, if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] desires consent to go back, I for one will not object.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Availing myself of the courtesy of the gentleman from Iowa, I will ask consent to return to the second section of Rule XXIII.

There was no objection.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend section 2 of Rule XXIII by striking out the words "which shall consist of 100 members"; so that a quorum of the Committee of the Whole shall be the same as a quorum of the House. The question is an old one, familiar to members who have served here for any length of time, and I do not desire to debate it.

The amendment of Mr. TURNER of Georgia was read by the Clerk, as follows:

In Rule XXIII, section 2, strike out the words "which shall consist of 100 members."

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, in order that we may all understand the effect of this proposed amendment, I will say that under the rules of the Fifty-first Congress 100 members constituted a quorum of the Committee of the Whole, and this amendment proposes to go back to the old system which required a majority of the House to constitute a quorum in Committee of the Whole the same as in the House. It is a question that has been fought over here for a long time, and the committee are in favor of adhering to the rule of the Fifty-first Congress, believing that it will often be found difficult enough to get even 100 members to attend.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. TURNER of Georgia; and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 116.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to propose an amendment to a portion of Rule XXIV.

Several members objected.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, as I am indebted to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] for his courtesy a moment ago, I wish to avail myself of it a little further to try to throw some light on the question whether the gentleman from Arkansas is not entitled under the agreement to have his request granted. I read from the record of what was said at the time we entered upon the consideration of this report from the Committee on Rules:

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk.

In this connection I would like to say, for the information of the House, that the committee wishes, if agreeable to the House, to take up and dispose of the amendments recommended by the Committee on Rules first, and we ask for unanimous consent that the understanding be had that the Speaker shall call all of the rules in their order afterwards, so that any member may have an opportunity to offer amendments and have them considered. That, I think, will be agreeable to both sides.

Mr. CRISP. The proposition is, as I understand, to dispose of the amendments of the committee first?

Mr. HENDERSON. That is the request.

Mr. CRISP. And after that the rules are to be considered as read through, and amendments may be offered to any of them?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that it would be better, perhaps, for the Speaker to call for amendments to each section of the rules, and if any gentleman desires to offer an amendment, that particular section will be read; if not, the Chair will proceed to call the next section, and so on.

Mr. CRISP. That will answer my purpose; and I have no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would ask the gentleman from Iowa whether, under the arrangement he proposes, we would be required to complete the sections that are amended in the report of the Committee on Rules before proceeding to the body of the rules, or whether we would have authority to recur to these sections afterwards, for the purpose of offering amendments, under the plan suggested by himself?

Mr. HENDERSON. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that my proposition was first that the amendments should be considered on the report of the Committee on Rules, and disposed of, as well as the rules touched by them, after which the Speaker, under the agreement, would ask if there was any amendment to be offered to the other rules as they are reached in their order. That will give full opportunity to the House to touch every one of the rules and determine what amendments may be necessary.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then the Speaker asked whether that would be satisfactory.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Yes. I can understand, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Iowa may have understood the arrangement in the way he suggests, but I can also see how other gentlemen may have understood it differently in view of the inquiries made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. HENDERSON. We have proceeded all the way through on my understanding of it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not care to pursue the question further. I am indebted to the gentleman from Iowa for his courtesy and I return him my thanks for it.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I understand that there is still pending the amendment reported from the Committee on Rules which was passed over.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. WILSON of Ohio, pending the motion to adjourn, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 254) in relation to certain nominations to military offices made by Abraham Lincoln as President of the United States, and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ODELL was granted leave of absence for three days, on account of important business.

The motion of Mr. HENDERSON was then agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting the claim of Bridget Lane, postmaster at Summit, N. J., for a credit on account of loss by burglary—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills were reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the House Calendar, as follows:

Mr. STEPHENSON, from the Committee on the Public Lands: A bill (H. R. 3728) to amend section 21 of an act entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1889, in lieu of House bill No. 3199. (Report No. 28.)

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, from the Committee on the Public Lands: The bill (H. R. 1238) granting to the State of Kansas the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation, in said State, for the purpose of establishing western branches of the Kansas Agricultural College and of the Kansas State Normal School thereon, and for a public park. (Report No. 27.)

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON of California: A bill (H. R. 3729) to create the Sacramento River commission, defining its duties, and making an appropriation therefor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. TRACEWELL: A bill (H. R. 3730) relating to claims of laborers, workmen, and mechanics, removing the bar of the statute of limitations, and giving the right of appeal in certain cases—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BABCOCK (by request): A bill (H. R. 3731) imposing licenses upon itinerant musicians in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also (by request): A bill (H. R. 3732) authorizing the attorney for the District of Columbia and his assistants to administer oaths and affirmations—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BREWSTER: A bill (H. R. 3733) to amend the tariff act of August 27, 1894, and to fix the duty on beans—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MORSE: A bill (H. R. 3734) amending an act entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARTMAN (by request): A bill (H. R. 3735) for the relief of certain homestead settlers—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. AITKEN: A bill (H. R. 3736) to provide for the unlimited coinage of silver and gold and to impose an import duty upon foreign silver equal to the difference between its bullion value and its coinage-value—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. TERRY: A bill (H. R. 3737) to regulate and discharge the payment of contracts in any money made a legal tender by law for the payment of debts, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TRACEY: A bill (H. R. 3738) to repeal section 16 of the act making appropriations for the Army, approved July 15, 1870, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3739) for the private sale of public lands in Missouri—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. COBB of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 3740) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which took effect the 28th day of August, 1894—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 3741) to create the Indian Pipestone national park, in Pipestone County, Minn.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. COOPER of Florida: A bill (H. R. 3742) to repeal section 553 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, requiring the district judge for the southern district of Florida to reside at Key West—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McEWAN: A bill (H. R. 3743) for testing the Belduke combination propeller—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CROWLEY (by request): A bill (H. R. 3807) providing for the retirement of employees in the Executive Departments of Government classified service—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: A resolution (House Res. No. 102) authorizing the employment of certain additional employees of the House of Representatives for service in the post-office of the House—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A resolution (House Res. No. 103) providing for a clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. TOWNE: A resolution (House Res. No. 104) directing the Committee on Foreign Affairs to consider and report as to the establishment of a permanent court of arbitration for the United States and Great Britain—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. APSLEY: A resolution (House Res. No. 105) providing for the employment of a clerk to the Committee on Manufactures—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. LOUD: A resolution (House Res. No. 106) of inquiry relating to delay in construction of post-office building at San Francisco, Cal.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. TOWNE: A concurrent resolution (House Con. Res. No. 12) concerning the definite location of the boundary line between the United States and the possessions of Great Britain from Lake Superior to the Lake of the Woods—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the following change of reference was made:

The bill (H. R. 3420) for the relief of C. C. Roberts—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. AITKEN: A bill (H. R. 3744) to correct the military record of David Patterson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MILLER of West Virginia: Two petitions, of Sheridan Donohew, Lewis Brownell, John Gerlach, and 53 others; together with H. C. Showalter, C. K. Pierpont, H. B. Wood, B. F. Ayers, and 410 others, citizens of West Virginia, praying for the passage of the Stone bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. MORSE: Two petitions, respectively, by the Tremont Temple Baptist Church of Boston and the Brookville Baptist Church of Brookville, Mass., against the appropriation of public money for the support of sectarian schools—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. OTJEN: Two petitions of citizens of Milwaukee, Wis., engaged in the navigation of the Great Lakes, asking that the harbor of the city of Manitowoc be improved—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. PICKLER: Petition, in form of resolution, of 500 citizens of late Sisseton and Wahpeton Indian Reservation, S. Dak., asking for free homes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. POWERS (by request): Petition of H. Livingston Rogers and others, first-mortgage bondholders of the Union Pacific Railroad, praying for the passage of a bill therein referred to—to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

By Mr. STAHLE: Resolutions of the Pennsylvania State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, in favor of equitable protection—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEELE: Resolution of the Board of Trade of Indianapolis, Ind., expressing sympathy for the Cuban insurgents, by its secretary, Jacob W. Smith—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 3713—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAFT: Memorial of Porkopolis Wheelmen, in behalf of good roads—to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

THE GOLD RESERVE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of the Treasury; which was read, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Senate resolution dated the 3d instant, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate if the sum of $100,000,000, or any part thereof, has at any time since the establishment of the so-called gold reserve, been actually segregated or set apart from the other currency or money in the Treasury Department, in gold coin, or gold coin and gold certificates, or either, for the redemption of the legal-tender notes and different forms of paper money of the Government; and when and by what act of Congress, giving the title of the act and the date of its approval, said so-called gold reserve was established, and if not established by act of Congress, state by what authority, if any, it was established."

In reply thereto the Senate is respectfully informed that at no time since the establishment of the so-called gold reserve has the sum of $100,000,000, or any sum, been segregated or set apart from the general cash in the Treasury for the redemption of the legal-tender notes of the United States, or for the redemption of any other form of paper money for which the United States is liable. There is no provision of law requiring a separate fund or separate account to be kept, and all moneys received into the Treasury, from whatever source, are deposited in the general cash. The fund for the redemption of United States notes was accumulated under authority of the act of January 14, 1875, which directed the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for such redemption on the 1st day of January, 1879. No specific sum was prescribed, but the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to use the surplus revenues from time to time to sell certain descriptions of bonds to an extent necessary to carry the act into full effect.

In the exercise of the discretion thus conferred upon him the Secretary sold for resumption purposes in 1877 and 1878 United States 4 per cent and 4½ per cent bonds to the amount of $95,500,000 and deposited the proceeds, $96,000,000 in gold, in the general cash in the Treasury. This, with other gold which had been received as surplus revenue, constituted the fund prepared and provided by the Secretary of the Treasury for the redemption directed in the act of January 14, 1875.

The existence of the reserve fund was generally recognized from the time of its establishment, as above stated, and one of the measures adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent its unnecessary depletion was the discontinuance of the issue of the gold certificates authorized by the act of March 3, 1863. This act authorized but did not direct such issue.

Some inconvenience resulted from this discontinuance, and by section 12 of the bank act of July 12, 1882, the Secretary was authorized and directed to receive deposits of gold coin and bullion and to issue certificates therefor; but it was provided "that the Secretary of the Treasury shall suspend the issue of such gold certificates whenever the amount of gold coin and gold bullion in the Treasury reserved for the redemption of United States notes falls below $100,000,000."

No other reference to the reserve fund is contained in the laws of the United States.

Very respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PORTLAND, OREG.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 5, 1895, certain information as to what steps, if any, have been taken by the Department to prepare or procure plans for the construction of a public building at Portland, Oreg., etc.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon subsequently said: A communication came in this morning, in my absence, from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution passed by the Senate at my instance some time since, in regard to a public building at Portland, Oreg. I move that it be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I also ask that the communication be printed in the RECORD. It is an important matter, relating to all public buildings.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the following preamble and resolution, adopted by the Senate on the 5th of December, 1895:

"Whereas the Congress, March 3, 1891, passed a bill, which was approved by the President and became a law, appropriating $250,000 for the purchase of a site and the commencement of the construction of a public building at Portland, Oreg.; and

"Whereas on March 2, 1895, the Congress passed another bill, which was approved by the President, appropriating an additional $100,000 for the continuation of the construction of such public building; and

"Whereas in pursuance of such appropriations the United States purchased from one John McCraken block No. 51 in Couch's Addition to the city of Portland, Oreg., for a site for such public building, and received from said McCraken and wife a deed therefor, dated June 3, 1892, the consideration therefor being $160,000: Therefore

"Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to advise the Senate at his earliest convenience as to what steps, if any, have been taken by the Department to prepare or procure plans for such building and for proceeding with the construction thereof; and if no steps have been taken, then the reasons fully why not, and the cause of the delay in reference thereto.

In response to this inquiry, I have the honor to state that, by an act approved January 24, 1891, Congress authorized the construction of a public building at Portland, Oreg., and fixed the limit of cost of the site and building at $500,000, and by an act of March 3, 1891, an appropriation of $250,000 was made for the purchase of the site and the commencement of the building. By an act of March 3, 1893, the limit of cost for the site and building was increased to $750,000, and the act of March 2, 1895, made a further appropriation of $100,000.

On the 7th of September, 1892, the Department purchased a site for the building, but as yet no drawings have been prepared for the reasons herein stated. At the date of the convening of the Fifty-first Congress (the Congress which authorized the public building at Portland, Oreg.) there were upon the books of this Department appropriations for 163 public buildings, all of which were in various stages of construction. That same Congress authorized the construction of 70 additional public buildings and provided for the extension of 7 marine hospitals at an aggregate limit of cost of $12,916,890.77. The Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses authorized altogether the construction of 12 additional public buildings and improvements to 5 marine hospitals and other structures, at a limit of cost of $5,843,000, making an aggregate of 94 buildings authorized to be constructed and improved, at a cost of $18,759,890.77, which, in addition to the 163 buildings above referred to, make a total of 257 buildings upon which construction operations have been in progress since December, 1889, of which number there are at this time 25 buildings for which no drawings have been prepared.

It has been the general practice of the Department to begin work upon the various public buildings in the order of their authorization by Congress, and under this practice there remain 6 buildings which claim priority over the public building at Portland, Oreg.

Notwithstanding the large number of public buildings authorized by Congress, no increase in the force of the Office of the Supervising Architect has been provided for, although a specific request to the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives was made by this Department on January 22, 1895, that the amount allotted for that office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, should be increased from $200,000 to $250,000, the reason given being that such an increase was necessary in order to enable the Department to employ a sufficient technical force to bring the work up to date. This request, however, was not complied with, and the usual allowance of $200,000 was made.

Since the 6th of March, 1893, this Department has made every effort possible with the limited appropriation allowed by Congress for the support of the Office of the Supervising Architect to expedite the preparation of drawings and specifications for the various public buildings under its control and to take up new work as rapidly as the force would permit and to proceed with the construction of buildings with all possible expedition. The sum of $200,000, which the Secretary is authorized by Congress to use during each fiscal year for the preparation of designs, plans, specifications, and drawings for public buildings, does not exceed the amount of the usual charges of a competent architect for the preparation of designs, plans, and specifications and superintending the construction of a single public building of the first class, and it must be evident, therefore, that the Office of the Supervising Architect must be relieved from a very considerable part of the labor now imposed upon it, or adequate provision must be made for the pay of a sufficient number of skilled employees, or that the work upon many public buildings must continue to be delayed as heretofore.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

BRIDGET LANE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in compliance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 9, 1888, the claim of Bridget Lane, postmaster at Summit, N. J., for credit on account of loss by burglary November 20, 1895, and recommending that authority be granted to credit the postmaster with the amounts mentioned; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 19) for filling vacancy on Board of Regents, Smithsonian Institution; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 60) concerning the completion of the United States court-house and post-office at Mankato, Minn.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States, praying for the enactment of such legislation as shall confer upon the officers of the Medical Corps of the Navy the same status, pay, and emoluments as are now accorded to the medical officers of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Macoupin County, Ill., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I present resolutions of the Louisiana Sugar Planters' Association, representing the planters and manufacturers of sugar throughout that State. The resolutions are in the nature of a petition praying for the protection of sugar and all other American industries. I ask that the petition be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Whereas the Louisiana Sugar Planters' Association, representing the planters and manufacturers of sugar throughout this State, is heartily in favor of protection to sugar and all other American industries: Therefore

Be it resolved, That we respectfully ask that sugar should receive the same increase of duty in the emergency tariff bill as is accorded other articles contained in said bill.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Representatives and Senators and to the chairmen of the Committee of Ways and Means and of the Finance Committee.

I certify the above to be a true copy of a resolution passed at the regular monthly meeting of the Louisiana Sugar Planters' Association held January 9, 1896.

REGINALD AKERS, Secretary.

Mr. KYLE. I present a letter from Vernon Center, Minn., relating to the pension claim of William Brown. I ask that the letter be referred to the Committee on Pensions, to accompany the bill heretofore introduced by me to grant him a pension.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. CALL. I present a paper in the nature of a petition to Congress, signed by L. S. Light, of Reddick, Marion County, Fla., accompanied by tabular statements showing the names of the growers and the number of vegetables produced and shipped, and the gross sales and commissions from net sales.

From this paper it appears that in the year 1895 there were sold 88,333 crates, the gross sales being $92,371.74; that the freight paid was $45,110.93, and the net proceeds to the growers $38,096.65.

The petition or letter with the tabular statement seeks for some regulation by Congress of freight charges on railroad transportation in the interstate commerce of the country. I move that it be printed as a miscellaneous document, and that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

I ask the committee to give the paper immediate and favorable consideration, and to report a bill which will enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate rates in the interest of the people. This statement discloses practically a confiscation of the products of the farm and of the labor and property of the people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and printed as a document, in the absence of objection.

Mr. CALL. I present a large number of petitions from different parts of the United States asking for immediate action on the part of Congress for the recognition of the state of war in the Island of Cuba, and according belligerent rights to the government established in that island by the people of Cuba.

These petitions state that those people are fighting for their independence against a power which for centuries has governed the island with a rod of steel, that they have refused them the commonest rights to which all men are entitled, taking from them property and life without warrant of modern law, and whipping them with the lash of mediæval rule from the monarchical shores of Europe. The petitioners pray that Congress may take immediate action. These petitions are from all parts of the United States, and comprise citizens of every class and every pursuit. I ask that they be printed as a miscellaneous document for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, without objection.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator from Florida desire to have all the petitions printed as a miscellaneous document with the names of all the petitioners?

Mr. CALL. It will comprise a very short space. The petitions are made up principally of names and localities.

Mr. PLATT. The names of all the signers?

Mr. CALL. Yes; the names of the signers. Has the Senator any objection? I see none to it. It is a subject of very great importance.

Mr. PLATT. It is a very unusual request.

Mr. CALL. It may be unusual, but I see no impropriety in it. Certainly there is no subject of greater importance. There are 2,000,000 people lying upon our immediate shores who have maintained for eight months the most heroic struggle for independence the world has ever seen, and who are now being forced to seek relations with other countries in consequence of our failure to give them any kind of encouragement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the rule in a moment.

Mr. PLATT. I do not want to enter into any discussion of the question as to the importance of affairs transpiring in Cuba, but it seems to me that to grant the request of the Senator from Florida is setting an exceedingly bad precedent. Here he presents some twenty petitions asking Congress to take some notice of what is going on in Cuba and to grant belligerent rights to the insurgents. They are numerously signed. I presume there are one or two thousand names. I do not see what object is to be gained by printing them as a public document, and if it is to be done in this case it is to be done at the request of every Senator who thinks that petitions are presented here upon an important subject. Very often we have petitions coming in by the thousands, containing hundreds of thousands of names, upon subjects which are thought at the time to be of exceeding great importance. If an objection will prevent the printing of these petitions, with all the names attached, as a public document, I will enter the objection, or I will move a reference of the motion, if it is a motion, to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Florida will suspend a moment, the Chair will call attention to the rule.

Mr. CALL. I will obviate any further discussion. If there is any further objection to it I will withdraw the request that I made. I wish, however, to observe that the observations of the Senator from Connecticut disparage the influence of public opinion among the people of the United States upon legislation. If there is any one thing important for this body to know it is that the people of the United States, the intelligent, influential people, the men of character, have formed a positive opinion upon any subject. That, in my judgment, is the most important thing for the Senate and the other House to know.

It was for that object that I desired to have the petitions printed, to show that they comprise the business men, the intellectual men, some of them being from colleges, some professors, and some from business men, and that they embody the public opinion of the people of the United States. That, I think, is the most important consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Vice-President will have the rule read, so that we may definitely understand what it is that controls the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have read the rule to which attention has been called.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That when petitions and memorials are ordered printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the order shall be deemed to apply to the body of the petition only, and the names attached to said petition or memorial shall not be printed unless specially ordered by the Senate.—Senate Journal, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, page 280.

Mr. PLATT. This objection of mine does not go to the question of the Cuban warfare or Cuban independence at all; it goes to the matter of the ordinary conduct of the business of the Senate. All these petitions are, with one exception, the same in printed form. Why should we print twenty petitions in a single form as a public document? The request has been withdrawn, and therefore I do not care to say anything more about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Kansas City, Mo., indorsed by members of the Board of Trade of Ardmore, Ind. T., praying for the enactment of such legislation as will give relief to the people who have located in the various towns of the Indian Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SQUIRE presented a memorial of the legislature of the State of Washington, relating to the survivors of the Indian war of 1855 and 1856; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Depredations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial in relation to the survivors of the Indian war of 1855 and 1856 in the Territory (now State) of Washington.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the legislature of the State of Washington, would respectfully represent that many of the early settlers of the Territory of Washington during the years 1855 and 1856, in the protection of the lives of themselves and families, and their property, having to contend against the hostile Indians occupying the country at that time, upon the call of the governor of the Territory freely volunteered to suppress the hostility of such Indians; that while fighting these Indians many valuable lives were lost and much property destroyed; that of those volunteer and early settlers but few now survive; that while the services of the soldiers of the Regular Army during that war were promptly provided for by the Government without diminution of any kind, and they received full recognition at the hands of the General Government for their services, the brave men who volunteered and defended the Northwest Territory from the hostile Indians in the war of 1855 and 1856, responsive to the call of the governors of the Territories of Washington and Oregon, have failed to receive that recognition and consideration at the hands of the Government of the United States to which they are entitled.

That by the eleventh section of the act of August 18, 1856, the Secretary of War was directed "to examine into the amount of the expenses necessarily incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities in the late Indian war in Oregon and Washington by the Territorial governors of said Territories for the maintenance of the volunteer forces engaged in said war, including the pay of the volunteers"; and he was authorized, if in his judgment necessary, to appoint a Commission of three persons to ascertain and report such expenses. That by an order issued from the War Department September 4, 1856, Capt. A. J. Smith, United States Army, Rufus Ingalls, United States Army, late Quartermaster-General, and Lafayette Grover, afterwards governor of the State of Oregon and United States Senator from said State, were appointed a Commission to ascertain and report upon the expenses incurred by the Territories aforesaid.

The Commission met at Portland, Oreg., October 20, 1856, organized a board, proceeded to the discharge of the duty assigned them, and after full investigation and consideration found, among other things, that the aggregate number of troops engaged in this war from the Territory of Washington was 1,896; that the approximate number of troops engaged at any one period was 1,000; and in taking action upon the pay of the volunteers from Washington Territory the Commission—in the absence of any law of the Territory upon the subject—deemed it proper and just to recommend the same rates of pay and allowance as were reported in the case of the volunteer troops of Oregon.

The Oregon statute provided as follows: "Whenever such volunteers are called and received into the service of the Territory * * * each noncommissioned officer and private shall be entitled to receive $2 per day and rations, and $2 per day for the risk of his horse, except for horses actually killed in action, unavoidably lost, or reported unfit for service; in which cases the owner shall receive the appraised value thereof. All commissioned officers shall receive the same pay as officers of the same rank in the Army of the United States: Provided, That commissioned officers shall receive the same pay for the use and risk of horses as noncommissioned officers."

The Commission, upon that basis, found that there is due for troops in the service of the Territory of Washington a total of $519,593.06; and it was further found, in examining into the amount of expenses necessarily incurred for the maintenance of these volunteers, that the total amount due for expenses was $961,882.39.

That said Commission visited extensively both Territories with the view of being fully informed as to the nature and extent of the Indian hostilities—means employed for their suppression, the rates of labor, the prices current for the property furnished for the service, and the facilities and expenses of transportation.

They examined into each distinct department of the service, and filed an exhibit of the total expense necessarily incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities in the late Indian war by the Territorial governors of said Territories, and further found that the expenses for the maintenance of the volunteer forces engaged in said war from the Territory of Washington, including pay, was $1,481,475.45, and for the State of Oregon the sum of $4,499,949.33; and the total amount reported by the commissioners as due the Territories of Oregon and Washington was $6,011,457.36.

That on the 7th day of February, 1860, the Third Auditor of the Treasury reported to the House of Representatives upon these claims, and allowed, under said report, only $2,714,808.55, thus leaving a balance justly due these early pioneers of $3,296,648.81.

Your memorialists respectfully refer you to the report of the Commission above named and the adjustment by the then Third Auditor of the Treasury, and respectfully ask that an appropriation may be made sufficient to cover the claims above set forth as due the volunteers from the State of Washington and State of Oregon during the Indian war of 1855 and 1856; and, to that end, your memorialists will ever pray.

Mr. SQUIRE. I also present a petition of the Business Men's Association of Newport News, Va., calling attention to Senate bill 334, providing for fortifications and other seacoast defenses, and giving reasons for immediate action on the part of the Government in providing appropriations for such defenses.

The petitioners refer to the increasing commercial importance of Newport News, its facilities for the construction of naval vessels, and the accessibility of the harbor and the accommodation it affords for vessels of all classes. They recite the fact that the great interests of Newport News and the surrounding country are dependent upon Fortress Monroe and a sea force for protection, and express their belief that prompt action should be taken to provide proper safeguards.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES presented a petition of the Methodist Episcopal Ministers' Association of Indiana, praying for the enactment of legislation instituting certain reforms on the subject of marriage and divorce; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McMILLAN presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Eighth Ward Republican Club of Detroit, Mich., indorsing the stand taken by Secretary of State Olney in his correspondence with Lord Salisbury and approving the message of the President on the Venezuelan question; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens and taxpayers of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the establishment of an isolated hospital in the block bounded by Bismarck and Princeton streets, Seventh street, and Sherman avenue, in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN presented petitions of 45 citizens of Welshfield, Ohio; of 53 citizens of Solon, Ohio, and of sundry citizens of the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Ministerial Association of Dayton, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of consent, to repeal the divorce law of Oklahoma Territory, to provide a Sabbath law for the national capital, to provide a committee to investigate the labor problem, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. NELSON presented the petition of J. N. True, of Grand Rapids, Minn., praying for the restoration of homestead rights in certain cases; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PRITCHARD presented a petition of 613 citizens of North Carolina and Virginia, praying that lumber be placed on the dutiable list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TURPIE presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Indianapolis, Ind., sympathizing with the people of Cuba in their efforts to achieve independence and establish a republican form of government; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon presented the petition of George Abbott, of Tacoma, Wash., late a private in Capt. L. Smith's Company A, Eighth United States Infantry, praying for the enactment of legislation removing the charge of desertion from his military record; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TILLMAN presented a petition of the Cotton Exchange of Charleston, S. C., and a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Charleston, S. C., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for fortifications and other seacoast defenses; which were referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

Mr. SMITH presented a petition, in the form of resolutions adopted at a meeting of sundry citizens of Plainfield, N. J., in reference to the Armenian troubles, and praying that Congress take such action as will put a stop to the outrages; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WHITE presented a petition of the common council of San Diego, Cal., praying that the harbor of San Diego be given the protection of proper fortifications, and for the establishment of a military post on the United States military reservation of 1,400 acres on Point Loma by the permanent location of at least one war vessel in that harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

He also presented a petition of the city council of Oakland, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the further development of the mining industry in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the board of directors of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation relieving vessels from the requirement to pay State pilots for services not rendered; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Lieut. George W. Walden, of the United States Revenue-Cutter Service, praying for the enactment of legislation granting him 25 per cent of the present sea pay of a first lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of Eliza J. Gray, widow of Isaac P. Gray, late United States minister to Mexico, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by an amendment intended to be proposed to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, and moved that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations with the accompanying report and papers; which was agreed to.

REAL-ESTATE ASSESSMENT IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 3) to extend the time for making an assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia, to report it favorably, without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution was read, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. CALL. That seems to me to be a very important measure to be passed without more mature consideration. However, I shall not make any objection to it on that score.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TARIFF ACTS.

Mr. HALE. From the Committee on Printing I report a substitute for the resolution instructing the committee to have the acts heretofore passed by Congress imposing duties upon imports printed and bound in one volume. I ask for its immediate consideration. Let the substitute be read.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and are hereby, authorized to cause to be printed, indexed, and bound in cloth in one volume all of the acts, as they appear in the United States statutes, heretofore passed by Congress imposing duties on imports, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was the resolution as amended read or the original?

Mr. FAULKNER. The substitute was read.

Mr. HALE. The substitute is what was read.

Mr. MILLS. I offered a resolution of the same kind a few days ago, and had it referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HALE. This is the Senator's resolution changed to a concurrent resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution, which has been read.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the report accompanying the resolution be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

CUSTODY OF MINOR CHILDREN IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. FAULKNER. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I submit a report upon the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], in reference to the law governing the testamentary disposition of minor children in the District of Columbia. The committee has acted in accordance with the instructions of the Senate in ascertaining the law, but makes no recommendation. I understand that the Senator from Maine desires the resolution to lie on the table. Let the resolution lie on the table and the report of the committee be printed.

Mr. HALE. I did not quite understand the Senator. The report is upon the resolution which I had sent to the committee some weeks ago, is it not?

Mr. FAULKNER. It is.

Mr. HALE. And the committee, as I understand the Senator, has collected together and perhaps collated what the law is on the subject here and in different States?

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state that the committee has submitted in its report the law as it has existed and exists to-day in most of the States of the Union, in the District of Columbia, and in England, with all the modifications found in the different States, showing how the act of Charles the Second has been modified by statutory enactment in the United States.

Mr. HALE. But the committee does not report any bill?

Mr. FAULKNER. The committee does not report any bill for the simple reason that there was some division in the committee in reference to the matter, and the committee was of opinion that it was better to submit in a written report the entire law bearing upon the subject, with the laws especially applicable to the District of Columbia, to lay the report before the Senate so that the Senate have the benefit of the law and all the modifications in the States, and if any Senator deems it proper to bring in a measure to modify or change the law of Charles the Second, he can do so by introducing a bill.

Mr. HALE. I am very glad the Committee on the District of Columbia, under the guidance of the Senator from West Virginia, who is a good lawyer, has brought out all the law upon this subject. I am, however, very sorry that the committee did not, as a result of that investigation, come to the conclusion to report a bill wiping away the statute of Charles the Second. I shall certainly prepare a bill to that effect and submit it to the Senate for its action. I should like to have the report printed as a document, and let the matter go to the Calendar, and I shall seek to call it up at some future time.

Mr. GALLINGER. In connection with this matter, and as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I will say that I consented to the report as it has been made. However, my sympathies are entirely with the Senator from Maine in his contention. I believe that such a statute, notwithstanding it exists in my own State, is a relic of barbarism and ought to be wiped from the statute book. The idea that a dissolute and worthless father can will away his child from the mother absolutely, and that the only way she can regain the control and guardianship of that child is to go into a legal controversy, after which the court may possibly remand the child to her custody, it seems to me is not in accordance with the civilization of the age.

I shall be glad to support the bill the Senator from Maine says he will prepare and submit to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed.

PURCHASES OF FORFEITED LANDS.

Mr. McBRIDE. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 43) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof," to report it favorably.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill just reported by my colleague. If the Senate will hear me for a moment, I think I can give satisfactory reasons why this should be done, and why I think there is no objection to the passage of the bill. I ask that the bill be first read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof," approved December 12, 1893, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That section 3 of an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof, be, and the same is, amended so as to extend the time within which persons entitled to purchase lands forfeited by said act shall be permitted to purchase the same in the quantities and upon the terms provided in said section, at any time prior to January 1, 1897: Provided, That actual residence upon the lands by persons claiming the right to purchase the same shall not be required where such lands have been fenced, cultivated, or otherwise improved by such claimants, and such persons shall be permitted to purchase two or more tracts of such lands by legal subdivisions, whether contiguous or not, but not exceeding 320 acres in the aggregate."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If I can have the attention of the Senate I will make a brief statement in reference to the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was the bill reported?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will state. A bill in the precise form of this was reported favorably during the last session of Congress by the Committee on Public Lands of each House, passed both Houses, and went to the President, but was one of the some forty-odd bills which were not signed by the President for want of time. The bill was again introduced by me at the present session, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and has been reported this morning by my colleague with the unanimous consent, as I understand, of all the members of that committee.

The bill in brief is simply this: In the act of 1890 forfeiting certain railroad lands, there was a provision that persons in possession of odd sections of land forfeited should be permitted to purchase not exceeding 320 acres by paying $2.50 an acre to the Government. The Department in construing that act for some considerable length of time under the former Administration held that actual possession was not meant nor required by the act, but that the full measure of the demands of the act were met by fencing and improving the land without actual residence. That was the construction placed upon the act under the former Administration by both the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, and a great number of cases were adjudicated and patents were issued to parties who were in possession of the land by fencing and improving, but who did not actually live on the land. In 1893, some two years ago, the present Commissioner of the General Land Office adhered to this ruling, and he still adheres to it; he still believes that the ruling was right, but somebody in the office of the Secretary of the Interior has placed a different construction on the act, and the Secretary, of course, has approved it, I suppose, perhaps, without giving it any personal attention, holding that it requires actual living on the land. The intention of this bill is simply to correct that construction so that those persons who are in possession by fencing, improving, and cultivating land may receive patents on the conditions named, although they do not actually live on the land. That is all there is in the bill.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Oregon a question?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. From whom did these persons receive their title?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Whatever title they have they have received from the railroad company.

Mr. GRAY. They have bought from the railroad company?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes; and were in possession, cultivating the land. In my own State there are quite a number of persons who have been in possession for twelve or fifteen, and some of them perhaps for twenty years, cultivating the land under the impression that the railroad company would get title and ultimately give them patents; but the company failing to build the road the Government forfeited the land, but made this wholesome provision in the interest of those people. This is a bill purely and simply in favor of those settlers.

Mr. SQUIRE. I simply wish to say that I earnestly advocate the passage of the bill and concur with what has been said by the Senator from Oregon.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MILLS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1481) to amend an act of Congress approved May 12, 1890, entitled "An act for improving Aransas Pass"; also to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act of Congress approved May 12, 1890, granting the Aransas Pass Harbor Company the right to improve Aransas Pass," approved January 22, 1894; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1482) to authorize the Corpus Christi and Padre Island Harbor Company to import free of duty certain materials for the construction of an outer harbor on the coast of Texas; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 1483) to repeal an act entitled "An act for the punishment of certain crimes therein specified," approved January 30, 1799, being section 5335 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GRAY. I intended to ask that the bill might lie on the table, but on reflection I ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It proposes to repeal the section of the Revised Statutes that gave rise to some little debate the other day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 1484) granting a pension to Charles Forster; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1485) granting a pension to Mary Zollinger; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1486) granting a pension to Charles Forster; which was read twice by it stitle, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1487) granting arrears of pension to Theodore W. McCoy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1488) appropriating $6,332.30 in payment of the claim of C. M. Kirkpatrick for paving the street adjacent to the United States arsenal at Indianapolis, Ind.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1489) for removal of charge of dismissal against military record of Lieut. George Murray; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1490) for removal of charge of desertion standing against Samuel French; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PUGH introduced a bill (S. 1491) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 1492) to remove the charge of desertion from John Lyons; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1493) granting a pension to Mary Clare Kelly; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1494) to protect the pensioners of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1495) granting a pension to Hans Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 1496) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Margaret Cahill on the roll of pensioners as the widow of James Cahill, late captain, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1497) to provide for a public building at Cleveland, Ohio; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 1498) to punish the carnal and unlawful knowing of any female under the age of 18 years; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WARREN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1499) to purchase a portrait of Daniel D. Tompkins, late Vice-President of the United States, painted by Jarvis in 1812; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1500) for the relief of William M. Masi, ex-postmaster, and Benjamin Hellman, Lawrence R. Bresnahen, John W. Griffin, George W. Hoyt, and Charles W. Riner, as sureties upon his official bond as postmaster at Cheyenne; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1501) for the relief of Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1502) for the relief of Lorenzo Thomas, jr., and Henry C. Thomas, both of Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 1503) to authorize the creditors of insolvent national banks to elect a permanent receiver, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on National Banks.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (S. 1504) to amend the act approved March 3, 1891, granting the right of way upon the public lands for reservoir and canal purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 1505) granting an increase of pension to Rufus H. Paine; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLANCHARD introduced a bill (S. 1506) for the relief of Holmes & Leathers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1507) for the relief of Henry Ware; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1508) granting a pension to Talbot A. Routon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 1509) to restore homestead rights in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 1510) to pension Mrs. Susan M. Sessford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1511) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Stewart Whiting; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1512) imposing licenses upon itinerant musicians in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1513) to regulate the use of the public parks and improved reservations in the District of Columbia under the charge of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1514) to amend sections 720, 721, 722, and 723 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, in relation to marriages; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1515) to incorporate the Columbia Telephone Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1516) authorizing the attorney for the District of Columbia and his assistants to administer oaths and affirmations; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1517) in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAFFERY introduced a bill (S. 1518) authorizing and directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate all violations of the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and all amendments thereof; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CAFFERY. I desire to direct the attention of the Judiciary Committee to the provisions of the proposed act just introduced by me.

The intendment of the bill is to provide sufficient and adequate machinery to carry into execution the act of July 2, 1890, against monopolies, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade.

I discover that the main difficulty of instituting and prosecuting successfully cases under the act of July 2, 1890, lies in the want of sufficient testimony. The bill introduced by me provides a machinery adequate and appropriate to the obtaining of testimony upon which the Attorney-General or the district attorneys, as the case may be, in the several circuits of the United States can institute proceedings looking toward the prohibition of all such restraints as are denounced in the act of July 2, 1890.

It is known, Mr. President, that the Government made an attempt to reach one gigantic institution, the sugar trust, through a proceeding instituted in the circuit court of the State of New Jersey, and that that proceeding failed. In looking over the report of the case it is plainly to be seen that the failure of the district attorney in that case was largely attributable to the paucity of evidence and the difficulty of obtaining evidence. The provisions of this bill constitute the Interstate Commerce Commission the instrumentality by which the evidence is to be elicited, and that Commission is selected by me for the reason that the members of it are familiar with the investigation of cognate offenses to those denounced under the act of July 2, 1890. I hope this instrumentality will be efficient and adequate in the bill I have introduced.

I direct the attention of the Judiciary Committee to this matter, and hope for a favorable and early report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 1519) to make an appropriation for the improvement of the battlefield at Lexington, Mo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1520) to place upon the pension roll the name of Rhoda Burnham, and to grant her a pension; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEAR introduced a bill (S. 1521) to finally adjust the swamp land grants, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1527) to refund the outstanding United States and Treasury notes with bonds bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMITH introduced a bill (S. 1528) to grant John T. Nagle the privilege of applying for a medal of honor for conspicuous bravery in action while serving as an acting assistant surgeon of the United States Army with troops in the field during the late civil war under the orders of commanding officers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DUBOIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1529) for the payment of arrears of interest on Chickasaw trust funds; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CAFFERY introduced a bill (S. 1530) for the relief of James J. Person and Isabella M. Person; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BURROWS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1531) to provide for the unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the ratio of 16 of silver to 1 of gold, and to impose an import duty upon foreign silver equal to the difference between its bullion value and its coinage value; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1532) to amend section 2306 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to homestead entries; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1533) to provide for the relief of aged and disabled letter carriers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1534) granting a pension to Parmelia Robinson, daughter of Oilver Robinson, who was a private in the Revolutionary army; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon introduced a bill (S. 1535) for removal of charge of desertion from the military record of George Abbott, alias Andrew C. Adams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 1536) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to rehear and render judgment in the case of William Donnelly and Patrick Egan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 1537) to provide for the private sale of public lands in Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1538) granting a pension to Joseph M. Waddell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 1539) granting a pension to Laura Barnes, widow of Thomas J. Barnes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1540) granting a pension to M. W. Linton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1541) granting a pension to Chesterfield Bosford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 1542) granting an honorable discharge to George W. Bowling; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1543) to grant to railroad companies in the Indian Territory additional powers to secure right of way, depot grounds, etc.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GEAR introduced a bill (S. 1544) to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. WOLCOTT (for Mr. TELLER) introduced a bill (S. 1545) for the relief of the legal representatives of A. G. Boone; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

RECOGNITION OF CUBA.

Mr. KYLE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 51) directing the President to accord belligerent rights to Cuban insurgents on certain conditions; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. KYLE. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, empowered and directed to receive such persons as may present themselves, satisfactorily accredited to represent and act for and upon behalf of the Cuban patriots or so-called insurgents of the Island of Cuba, and upon the production of evidence showing that the said Cuban patriots have established a seat of government in any part of said Island of Cuba and that a majority of the native-born residents of said Island of Cuba are actively supporting and defending the same with arms, or are in sympathy with the cause of said Cuban patriots, he shall enter into compact or treaty in the name and on behalf of the United States with said Cuban patriots, through the representatives aforesaid forthwith, to the end that full and complete belligerent rights may thereby be accorded and extended by the United States to said Cuban patriots during the continuance of the war being waged in said Island of Cuba.

REPRINT OF PACIFIC RAILROADS BILL.

Mr. ALLEN. On the 7th of this month I introduced and had referred a bill (S. 1369) directing the foreclosure of the Government lien on the Pacific railroads, and for other purposes, and it was printed under the rule. As the bill is printed there are several errors in it. I ask unanimous consent to have the bill reprinted as I send it to the desk corrected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An order to reprint the bill in its corrected form will be entered.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 291) to amend section 4426 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to vessels propelled by steam, gas, fluid, naphtha, or motor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SQUIRE subsequently submitted seven amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JAILS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PLATT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General is hereby directed to inform the Senate as to the number of United States jails in the Indian Territory; the character, condition, and accommodations of each; the number of prisoners confined in each; the nature of crimes or offenses for which such criminals are imprisoned; whether in any of said jails the hardened and abandoned prisoners are separated from those of youthful age or those confined for misdemeanors; whether occupation of any kind is provided for prisoners; whether any measures of prison discipline or measures looking to the reformation of prisoners have been adopted, and, in general, whether the character and condition of such jails, or any of them, is such as the humane and proper treatment of criminals requires.

SITES FOR COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what amount is necessary to be appropriated for payment of the cost of sites for the purpose of erecting fortifications and coast defenses.

PAYMENT OF COIN OBLIGATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. BUTLER December 21, 1895, as follows:

Whereas it was the purpose of Congress to keep gold and silver coin at a parity by investing the Secretary of the Treasury with the discretion of paying the coin obligations of the Government as they mature in either metal: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, when liquidating either the interest or principal of the Government's coin obligations, to make such payment in gold coin whenever the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold is less than the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver, and to continue to pay in such gold coin until the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold shall be equal to the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver, but when the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold shall be greater than the market value of 412½ grains of pure silver he shall pay said coin obligations as they mature in silver coin, and continue to pay the same in silver coin until the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver shall be equal to the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I ask that that resolution may be passed over informally without prejudice.

Mr. BUTLER. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be passed over informally and without prejudice.

RESTORATION OF PROTECTIVE DUTIES.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, on Friday last when I rose to reply to the criticism of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] the Chair recognized the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. I was thus unable to proceed, and I therefore beg the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments this morning.

The Senator from New York, who in his free lance way is the champion of all the wings, ends, and factions of the Democratic party, and who enjoys the distinction of originating the "I am a Democrat" slogan, misstates, unintentionally of course, Mr. President, the position of my colleague [Mr. BUTLER]. In his speech several days ago on the reorganization of the Senate my colleague said in reply to a question by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]:

I will answer the question with pleasure. I hold my seat by such a cooperation for the simple reason that the party in my State which you belong to got to be so corrupt the people in the State rebelled against its management. Your party could to-day have been in full power in North Carolina if it had stood by its pledges and promises. A cooperation of all who opposed its methods was made, but that combination could not have driven the Democratic party from power in North Carolina if that party had been true to its pledges, true to its promises, and true to its people. It not only deserted the principles of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson, thereby disgusting the great rank and file of the party, but it tried to keep itself in power by stealing and perjury at the ballot box, by ballot-box stuffing and manipulating the returns. This made fair elections, the purity of the ballot box, the overshadowing issue in North Carolina politics.

There is nothing equivocal in this statement over which the Senator from New York can possibly quibble, and it is too plain for misrepresentation. The issue that gave life and success to the political combination in North Carolina, and which ended forever Democratic supremacy in that State, was honest elections. While the abandonment of our people by the Democratic party in the construction of the Wilson bill and their position on the financial question have resulted in large accessions to the Republican party in my State, at the last election it was, in the main, political emancipation that inspired opposition to Democratic abuses and united all who were opposed to Democratic election methods. When the combination was formed neither of the parties to the compact were required to surrender their views in regard to political matters, but each maintained its identity. When the legislature met it was composed of Republicans and Populists, the two parties being about evenly represented, and as a result my colleague was elected as a Populist and I was elected as a Republican.

As a further result of the combination the legislature repealed the unjust election law by the aid of which the Democrats had been able to maintain their supremacy, and enacted in its stead a law which guarantees to each citizen the right to cast his vote and have it counted as cast. The principle involved in our contest in North Carolina was in a great measure the same that resulted in Republican success in the Empire State of New York, so ably represented in this Chamber by the distinguished Senator, and the place that holds the champion of the defunct Southern Democracy now will hold him no more as a consequence of that success. I do not say this by way of exultation. It is fortunate that the sad spectacle does not confront this already distracted country of a discredited Administration without a leader in the Senate. And is not the grave responsibility, Mr. President, enough, that the Senator from New York should pause in the discharge of that momentous service to reconcile assumed differences between my colleague and myself? If impelled by a sense of duty to vindicate that rare jewel consistency, may I venture to ask the distinguished Senator what service has he rendered in that behalf that entitles him to acclaim himself mentor in this school of public virtue? Did the Senator vote with his colleague on the Wilson bill? Is it not worth his while to reconcile the difference between himself and his colleague on the tariff question?

As a matter of history, I know that the honorable Senator did not vote for the Wilson bill, but until an examination of the RECORD I had supposed that he was influenced by conscientious scruples. I had supposed that he was profoundly impressed by what the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] said in a colloquy with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I ask the Secretary to read the report of the incident sent out by the Associated Press at the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

When Mr. HOAR had expressed his convictions that the Finapce Committee did not approve the bill and that most of the men who were to vote for it would, when they did so, violate their oaths to support the Constitution as they understood it, he was asked by Mr. GRAY whether he meant to say that the persons who would vote for the bill would violate their oaths.

"I do," was Mr. HOAR'S blunt answer.

"That is a very remarkable charge for the Senator to make of his colleagues in the Senate," Mr. GRAY remarked, with a tinge of anger in his manner.

"It is a very remarkable thing to do," Mr. HOAR said.

"I repeat that charge as unworthy of the Senator from Massachusetts, and as unworthy of a Senator in this place," Mr. GRAY exclaimed, with increasing anger.

"The Democratic party," said Mr. HOAR, argumentatively, "acquired the confidence of the country in 1892 by a platform which declared that protection was a robbery and a fraud and was a violation of the Constitution, and they have got a bill now crowded with protection. They have put in it new protecting duties. They have put a duty on sugar, which they are going to increase, for protection, and for nothing else. Now, when that is done, does the Senator from Delaware think that I am going to be deterred by a little bluster from him?

"There is no logical escape for a man who says that a duty for protection is robbery and is a violation of the Constitution, and who then comes in and takes an oath that the Constitution as construed by him he will support. He violates that privilege and that oath when he puts into legislation a new duty or increase of an old duty—both of which this does in abundance—for the mere purpose of protection; and when it is well known that they could not pass the bill except with the aid of persons who want those duties for protection."

Mr. GRAY. "Does the Senator think that what he has said is entitled to any better designation than 'bluster' when he charges his colleagues and peers in the Senate with violating their oaths?"

"The Senator," said Mr. HOAR, "is violating the rule of the Senate."

"I leave it to that greater tribunal, the public," Mr. GRAY replied, "as to who has violated the proprieties and the duties which a Senator owes to his constituents."

After some further interchange of remarks in the same spirit, Mr. GRAY made the point of order on Mr. HOAR that he had charged his colleagues with violating their oaths by their action in the Senate. The point of order was overruled.

Mr. PRITCHARD. This was high ground. It put country and patriotism above party, and had this lofty conception of public duty influenced the honorable Senator from New York, I could afford to submit in silence to his harmless criticism of my colleague and myself. But alas for human greatness! When the proposition to put even a higher duty than the McKinley duty on collars and cuffs was offered the resonant voice of the honorable Senator was as silent as the grave. Does it lie in the mouth of the Senator from New York, Mr. President, to preach consistency to others?

Now, Mr. President, the colleague of the honorable Senator voted for the Wilson bill and clamored for the highest protection possible on collars and cuffs, the manufacture of which is an important industry at Troy, N. Y. The two distinguished New York Senators were elected by Democratic legislatures which owed their Democratic majority to election methods like those of Mr. Bat Shea, who now, I understand, is residing temporarily at Sing Sing, counting the hours until his electrocution, and to "Boss" John Y. McKane, who is permanently established at Sing Sing penitentiary. Would it trouble the honorable Senator too much to look after his own tariff infelicities and party incongruities before meddling with affairs in North Carolina?

Speaking in part for North Carolina, I will say to the Senator from New York, in conclusion, that if combination is necessary to complete Democratic defeat in the State in this woeful year of Democratic disaster, it will be effected. My colleague is abundantly able to speak for himself, but I will suggest to the Senator from New York that the difference between them is, that my colleague left the Democratic party because its abuses could not be corrected inside of its organization, and the Senator from New York was kicked out of the Democratic party and branded as a traitor because his opposition to the Wilson bill threatened that hybrid measure with defeat. Between the consistency of my colleague and the self-stultification of the Senator from New York, who still maintains his adherence to the Democratic party, the comparison is no disparagement to my colleague.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I do not know exactly what is before the Senate, but I assume that the rules are so elastic that I may be permitted at this time to notice the elaborate remarks of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], who has just taken his seat.

The Senator has taken considerable time to prepare an elaborate defense of himself and his record. I am not aware that I have said anything which calls for this elaborate defense of himself or of his efforts to make my own record appear inconsistent. I called the attention of the Senate and the country the other day to his rather remarkable speech. He spoke upon the subject of the tariff. I have no doubt he expressed his own views when he said that he favored the reenactment of the McKinley law. He probably has always been a high protective tariff man, for all I know. I have not taken the trouble to look up his long record, if he has one, in that regard.

But I also called the attention of the Senate to the fact that it was only a few days before when his colleague [Mr. BUTLER] had read a lecture to the Democratic party in this Chamber, because it had abandoned the principles of tariff reform by the enactment of the Wilson law. One of the Senators assured us that the people of North Carolina wanted a high protective tariff, and I understood the other Senator to say that the people of North Carolina wanted extreme tariff reform. I therefore, properly, as I think, called the attention of the Senate to the fact that it was utterly impossible for this Congress, potent though it may be, to gratify both Senators or, what is more important, to gratify the people of North Carolina, because we have the assurance that they want two entirely opposite things.

This morning the Senator who represents the Republican part of the combination in North Carolina assures us that in some form or other the Democracy has lost the control of that State, not upon any tariff principles, not upon any great measures on which the two parties differ, but because of some election matters down in that State. I do not know anything about them except what I have heard here. I am not familiar enough with North Carolina affairs to say whether those charges are well founded or not, and they are entirely immaterial to this question. But while advocating a high protective tariff the Senator still gives us the assurance that the hearts of the people of North Carolina beat favorably to the principles of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson. I think well, then, of the people of North Carolina. They favor the principles of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson, and yet they are in favor of a high protective tariff! I can not understand that. It strikes me there is a little inconsistency in that statement.

Beyond that the Senator has seen fit to speak of my own individual record in the Senate and reminds me—I do not know where he gets his information; it may have come by way of the North Carolina Associated or United Press, or some other wire—that I have been kicked out of the Democratic party.

Mr. President, that the Democratic party has met with some reverses in the last two or three years is true, but I think I may flatter myself that I am still a lively member of what there is left of that organization. [Laughter.] I believe after I voted against the Wilson bill the Democracy of New York rather insisted, if I recollect aright, upon my being the candidate of their party for governor, to lead a forlorn hope, and, sir, I responded to the call of my party and made the best fight possible under adverse circumstances, and I should do so again under like circumstances if defeat stared me in the face.

I did vote against the Wilson bill; I gave my reasons for that vote here; I pointed out some little difficulties in the Wilson bill, particularly as to the constitutionality of its features pertaining to the income tax. I am not now going to be diverted into any defense of myself about the provisions of the income tax. It is sufficient to say that I regarded those provisions as unconstitutional. I gave my reasons for so regarding them. I think those reasons were sound. I assail no man's judgment who differs with me. It was a question of law, a question of judgment, a question about which honest men may well differ. I did vote against the Wilson bill, and for those reasons, principally, and I should do so again for like reasons.

The Wilson bill was assailed the other day by the same combination, if I may use that term, because it was a protective bill. I am not called upon to defend the Wilson bill, for I did not vote for it, but I can simply say that I suppose it was a fairly good tariff reform bill when the leader of the Populists in this Chamber, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], voted for it. We have not forgotten that vote in this Chamber. Possibly it was through his influence that the bill was passed. Not only the leader of the Populist party here, but I think I can safely say the leader of the Populist party in the United States thought that that bill was better than the McKinley law, and therefore voted for it, and thus gave it a fair certificate of good character in the direction of tariff reform. Other Populist leaders who come here may want to assail that vote. I do not. Other independents in this Chamber also voted for the Wilson bill.

Mr. President, the Wilson bill in some particulars was not as I liked it, and I exercised my right of voting against it. My distinguished colleague [Mr. MURPHY], who is not here to-day, exercised his right and voted for it. I was not bound by any caucus; it was distinctly understood I was not so bound; and thus I exercised my privilege.

There is only very little difference on this side of the Chamber. We all believe in tariff reform; some of us not to such an extent as others. We are all going to the Democratic heaven, only by little different routes. My friends upon the other side are going in the other direction. [Laughter.]

I did not quite catch what the Senator from North Carolina had to say about the Senators from New York owing their seats in this Chamber to some of the frauds perpetrated by Bat Shea and John Y. McKane. I could not quite catch what he said, owing to the noise in the Chamber. Bat Shea, so spoken of, got into a row a year ago last spring in a local election fight in the city of Troy, which started at a Republican primary. My colleague and myself were both elected years before any such affray occurred. Bat Shea was a Republican. The row occurred first in a Republican caucus in a Republican ward, in a contest between two Republicans running for the same office. John Y. McKane at the time I was elected was a Republican, and marched at the head of the procession which came from Brooklyn at the inauguration of Harrison in 1888. John Y. McKane, through his influence, gave a majority of about 1,500 to 1,600 to Harrison, and about 700 to 800 for Warner Miller against myself. Although it was ordinarily a Democratic constituency, yet it flopped over to the other side, and only returned to its Democratic allegiance a few years ago, after both my colleague and myself were elected. That shows how dangerous it is for the distinguished Senator from North Carolina to accept the statements of somebody else, put them upon paper, and come here and read them off. [Laughter.] So much for that question.

So far as the Democratic party is concerned, we have our differences on the silver question. We have a few differences on the tariff question. The State of New York, while it has been variable in its political fortunes, it is true, when Democracy is in power, is in favor of tariff reform, and its Senators endeavor to carry out that policy in this Chamber honestly and faithfully. I am not here to say that New York wants a high protective tariff and at the same time that New York wants extreme tariff reform, because the two things are entirely inconsistent.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say in regard to the very elaborate remarks of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from New York reminds me of the fact that John Y. McKane was not a member of the legislature when the Senator was elected to the Senate. If the distinguished Senator will read my remarks, he will find that I did not allege that McKane was a member of the senate or of the house.

Mr. HILL. I did not say he was. He was never in the legislature.

Mr. PRITCHARD. The Senator is hard to hold to any proposition. What I was going to say was that John Y. McKane never got into the penitentiary until he joined the Democratic party. That is the fact of which I wished to remind the Senator.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I do not care to be interrupted any further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I also wish to remind the Senator that McKane was sent to the penitentiary in consequence of misconduct growing out of Democratic election methods in the State of New York. That is the point I wish to make. The Senator seeks to evade the force of it by reminding me that some time in the past this man was a decent man and a Republican in the State of New York. We have a great many instances in history where men had a good character, whose character was unquestioned, and in an evil moment they lost their character. I can not help that. I am sorry that he is a Democrat and I am sorry he is in that attitude.

The position I take is that had it not been for the dishonest election methods of the Democratic party the Republican party in North Carolina would have obtained a majority of the votes at every election in that State since the war until 1894. The point I wish to make is that in consequence of corrupt Democratic election methods, similar to the methods employed in the State of New York, the people have been deprived of their rights of suffrage at the ballot box and a minority in North Carolina has been permitted to rule our people.

I do not care to reply to anything else the Senator has said, for he does not attempt to defend his party in regard to the Wilson bill; in fact, he virtually admits that his party has passed a law which is not what it should be. Therefore I do not care to discuss that question one way or the other.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I do not care to reply to anything the distinguished Senator from New York has said to-day, but I wish to make a statement, inasmuch as my name was used by the Senator from New York a few days ago when I was out of the Chamber. The Senator from New York of course did not intend to misquote me, but his remarks as they appear in the RECORD do misrepresent what I said. He quoted me as saying that the people who left the Democratic party and joined the People's Party in North Carolina did it solely on account of the treachery of that party on the tariff question. The Senator no doubt thought I said that, but if he will turn to the RECORD and read my remarks in reply to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] he will see that I made no such statement.

I will state plainly why thousands upon thousands of the people in North Carolina left the Democratic party, and are still leaving it there and all over the country. They left it chiefly on account of the betrayal by that party of the people on the great financial question, because that party which had in the past taught the doctrines of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson on the financial question, as soon as it got an opportunity to carry out those pledges, repudiated them and took up the record and policy of the Republican party where it left off, and began to serve the gold combine. It was the vote of leading Democrats here and in the House of Representatives on that question and the known position of Grover Cleveland, whom that party had nominated for President the second time, which caused the first great break from the party. When that party came to legislate on the tariff question it caused more people to leave it. Why? They had made "the robber barons of the North and the East" their campaign slogan; they had charged that the Republican tariff was a discrimination in favor of the North and the East and against the South and West, and they pledged the people on the stump that if they ever got an opportunity they would stop that robbery and discrimination. When the Democratic party got into power, what did it do? Instead of stopping the discrimination Southern Democrats turned against their own section and their own people; they put the products and the raw material of the South and the West on the free list, and left the manufacturer with his high protection. That caused many more men to leave the Democratic party.

The South and West understand that a certain amount of tariff is necessary. The action of the distinguished Senator from New York and other Democrats in opposing the income tax, followed by the surprising decision of the Supreme Court, makes it necessary to have a very high tariff to raise the revenue necessary to run the Government. There is great incidental protection and bounty accompanying even a tariff for revenue only. Now, shall that tariff be raised, I ask any Democrat on this floor, by giving all the incidental protection to the manufacturers, to the "tariff barons" in the North and the East? You say that your doctrine is a tariff for revenue with incidental protection. Then I ask you in the name of high heaven and justice, why you did not give an equal share of the incidental protection to the raw material of the South and West when you formed and passed the Wilson-Gorman tariff bill? That is your crime in tariff legislation. Whether the Wilson law is better or worse than the McKinley Act is not the question. The rank and file of the Democratic party condemns that party for its wanton betrayal of the people of the South and West by the discrimination against them in the Wilson-Gorman Act.

On those two great questions chiefly, then, the people who have left the Democratic party have joined the People's Party. The cooperation in North Carolina of the Populists and Republicans came because the voice of the people could not be heard at the ballot box on those questions. It came on account of dishonest election methods resorted to by the Democratic party to stay in power in spite of the condemnation of the people, and it was necessary for everybody who was in favor of fair elections to combine to drive that party from power in order that we might have a free ballot and a fair count and get an honest expression of the will of the people. But I would call the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] to the fact that the other Senator from North Carolina stands nearer to-day to the great principles of Thomas Jefferson then does the Senator from New York. I can cooperate with my colleague in principles easier than I could with the Senator from New York. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] stands for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratin of 16 to 1, for honest elections, for a graduated income tax, and is opposed to the further issue of interest-bearing bonds in time of peace. The Senator from North Carolina does not want to further increase the taxes of the people without at the same time increasing their ability to pay. On the other hand, the Senator from New York stands on the opposite side of every one of these great questions. He refuses to vote for any legislation to increase the ability of the people of this country to pay their debts, to pay their taxes, or to live by honest industry. He is opposed to and fights to the bitter end all such legislation.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to ask whether, in the Senator's judgment, the Wilson law as it passed the Senate is better than the McKinley Act which preceded it and which was repealed by the passage of the law?

Mr. BUTLER. I have just stated to the Senate that that is not the question under discussion; but in answer to the Senator from South Dakota I will say that I consider both of those acts bad and unjust to the people of the South and the West; and I do not want to waste time in quibbling between tweedledum and tweedledee, as the old parties have been doing for years, when there is a greater issue to which I wish to call attention. I consider the financial legislation of these two old parties a hundred times more ruinous to the prosperity of this country than the difference between any two tariff bills enacted by Congress.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator allow me one moment further?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. He is old enough in human experience so that when he is confronted with two evils he naturally chooses the lesser. What would he have done had he been placed in the position of the North Carolina senators who preceded the present senators from that State in this Chamber?

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator asks me what I would do if I were loanding between the devil and the deep blue sea. I would not htmp in either direction if there were a chance to stand still. I sujuld shun both evils.

Mr. KYLE. Then the Senator does not wish to give an expression of opinion upon that point?

Mr. BUTLER. I say that the passage of the Wilson bill was a betrayal of the trust put in the hands of the Democratic party, because it increased the discrimination against the people who make the raw materials and in favor of the manufacturers of this country, by taking from the producers of raw materials every particle of protection that they had, while leaving the manufacturers with high protection, and some of them higher protection than they had theretofore enjoyed.

Mr. KYLE. Granting that to be true, had the Senator from North Carolina been in this Chamber at that time he would have been compelled by his vote or his silence to determine whether the McKinley Act should remain upon the statute books or whether the new act should take its place. I wish to know point blank, yes or no, whether the Senator thinks the Wilson law as it passed the Senate is better than the McKinley Act which preceded it.

Mr. BUTLER. I will answer the question by saying that if at any time I am confronted with two propositions and am bound to favor one or the other, I shall use my judgment at the time when the question arises and cast my vote for the lesser of the two evils. I presume that those who were then in this Chamber did that according to their judgment when the emergency was before them.

I have only a few words to say in conclusion. The position of the Democratic party on these two questions, as well as on others, has caused a revolt in the ranks of the party, has caused the men who were taught true Democracy to rebel against false and treacherous leadership.

The Senator from New York says it is hard to satisfy North Carolina. You can not satisfy North Carolina with a gold standard. You can not satisfy North Carolina by issuing more bonds and piling up a larger debt in times of peace. You can not satisfy North Carolina by casting your vote to prevent Congress from taxing the accumulated wealth, the millionaires, and the monopolies of this country while at the same time you place all the burden of taxation upon the poorer people and on the productive industries of the country. You can not satisfy North Carolina by giving all the incidental protection of a so-called revenue tariff to New England and taking it all from the people of the South and West. If it is hard to satisfy the people of North Carolina because they stand for those just principles and measures, then I am proud to boast that my State is hard to satisfy. She asks for simple justice; she demands justice; she will be satisfied with nothing less. As long as Congress legislates only for the benefit of monopolies and the British gold trust, North Carolina will not be satisfied. Until this Government is run on the great fundamental principles of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none," as taught and practiced by Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson, North Carolina will not be satisfied, and her solemn protests will continue to be heard on this floor.

The Senator from New York says he is glad to learn that the people of North Carolina stand for the principles of Jefferson and Jackson. I challenge him to show that the course of the national Democratic party is according to those principles. His own record is the opposite of true Democracy. The People's Party is the only party in this country to-day which represents those great principles of justice and good government. The people recognize this, and therefore the People's Party is daily receiving accessions by the thousands from both the old monopoly-ridden, British-gold parties. The People's Party stands for the principles of true Republicanism as put forward by Abraham Lincoln and for true Democracy as enunciated by our forefathers. On those great questions we stand, and adherents of both of the old parties are coming to us because they believe their parties have deserted those principles.

The people have begun to recognize the difference between party principles and a party name. They refuse to desert their principles to follow a name. They will not follow an agent of the gold combine though he hoists the dear old party banner. Therefore they are repudiating the two old traitorous parties and flocking under the banner of the People's Party, where they can worship the true god of their fathers.

Mr. HILL. The only thing upon which North Carolina seems to be united is the principles of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson. The two Senators from North Carolina do not interpret those principles alike, but nevertheless they are for the principles of Andrew Jackson and Thomas Jefferson. I do not quite understand the two Senators yet. The Senator from North Carolina, Mr. PRITCHARD, when last upon the floor said that North Carolina is Republican, and would have been Republican ever since the war if there had been fair elections; and yet during all that time and until within the last year or so the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, Mr. BUTLER, was a leading member of the Democratic party, and assisted in keeping that party in power in the State by fraud.

I regret that one Senator has seen fit to make this vicious attack upon his colleague. [Laughter.] I am disposed to defend him and to say that I doubt whether the charges made here so easily and flippantly are true. I am rather inclined to believe that there have been reasonably fair elections in North Carolina. As I said, I have not studied the details of the matter, but year after year the Democratic party in that State has won victories upon settled principles, and during all that time the Democratic party has had the voice and the pen and the vote and the influence of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] who has just taken his seat.

Mr. President, I doubt whether North Carolina has been Republican at all since the war. These changes of party fortune come now and then. It is no reflection particularly upon a party that the people once in a while desire a change locally. Undoubtedly there may have been some local causes which have produced changes in North Carolina, as elsewhere, but I firmly believe that when the great contest of 1896 comes around the people of North Carolina will still be for the true, not the spurious, principles of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson, and that they will stand by the Democratic party in that election.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HILL. With great pleasure.

Mr. BUTLER. Then the Democratic party will have to nominate a man who does not stand for the gold standard and a man for whom, I suppose, the Senator from New York will not vote. North Carolina will not cast its vote in the next election for a gold-standard man of either party or of any party.

North Carolina is for free silver, and our people know that the only way to secure it is to put a free-silver man and a patriot in the White House.

Mr. HILL. "Still harping on my daughter." [Laughter.] Every discussion that comes up has interjected into it something about the gold standard. I am pretty well convinced from what I have heard here to-day that North Carolina is not going to be satisfied in the next election. I think that either the Democratic or the Republican ticket will be elected—I hope the Democratic ticket will be—but I am inclined to think from the inconsistent claims made here to-day that it is utterly impossible for either of the great parties to gratify the fickle constituency of North Carolina.

They do not agree upon the tariff. They send two representatives here who tell us what the State wants, and each makes different claims. The Democratic party may sometimes straddle questions, but I do not think we are straddling much upon the tariff, and I hope not with respect to any other question upon which we are called to pass. Let the people of North Carolina fence themselves in, set up in business for themselves, arraign the two old parties as corrupt, establish a little Populist dynasty of their own, and we could then see whether they would fare any better than do the other people of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from New York permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HILL. "Still another Richmond in the field." [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New York can not escape the issue——

Mr. HILL. Can the Senator from Nebraska tell me what is the precise issue?

Mr. ALLEN. I will tell the Senator in a moment. He can not escape the issue by referring to the condition of affairs in North Carolina. I do not know what the condition there is, and I care nothing about it.

Mr. HILL. The condition of affairs there is a little bit mixed, according to the Senators from that State.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New York stated a moment ago that the Democratic party is united upon every issue.

Mr. HILL. Did I say upon every issue?

Mr. ALLEN. Upon every issue.

Mr. HILL. I hardly think my remarks would bear that interpretation. I admit that there is a trifling difference upon the silver question—just a little.

Mr. ALLEN. Can the Senator from New York point out a solitary issue that has come up within the last three years upon which the Democratic party has been united?

Mr. HILL. Oh, yes.

Mr. ALLEN. What is it—on the question of appropriations?

Mr. HILL. Yes; upon the subject of economical appropriations, the party has been substantially united. Upon the great question of State rights and the right of the people of each State to conduct their own elections, the Democratic party has been united. On the great question of tariff reform, it has substantially been united. Once in a while a stray fellow gets out of the party, like myself, but after all the great party is united.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from New York permit me?

Mr. HILL. I am not quite through, but the Senator can proceed.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to state that there was a unanimity upon the part of the Democratic party in the repeal of the election laws, and the Democratic party was supported in that position by the Populists. You have disagreed upon the financial question. There are about seventeen of you on this side of the Chamber who belong on the other side. You have disagreed upon the tariff policy. I remember the Senator from New York distinctly stated in one of his speeches here that the Supreme Court as it would be reconstructed would probably hold the income-tax feature of the Wilson Act unconstitutional and void. What is the issue upon which you have been united?

Mr. HILL. My friend from Nebraska scatters worse than an old shotgun. He started upon the election question, then he was on the tariff, and now he is on the question of an income tax. In a few days from now I hope to have an opportunity, under the liberal rules so properly described the other day by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], to express some opinions of mine upon the income-tax matter. However, I shall not be drawn into that question now.

But I assume, sir, and I repeat, that the Wilson bill, aside from the income-tax feature, must have been a pretty good measure or else my critical friend, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], would not have cast his vote for and given his influence to it. I know that the new Senators who now appear in this Chamber as the true champions of the Populistic doctrines are rather inclined to give the Wilson Act the cold shoulder. But after all the great Populist party will rally around the Senator from Nebraska, and I hope it will, and sustain him in his vote for that portion of the bill. An income tax, Senators will recollect, was one of the cardinal principles of the Populist party. Some Democrats tried to steal it from the Populist party, and I recollect that I called attention to that fact at the time.

Mr. President, there is another thing. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] said that the Wilson Act is a Northern measure; that it absolutely does injustice to the products and interests of the South, and that it protects the New England people. I am not especially called upon to defend the Wilson law, but upon that proposition I am rather a free lance, and possibly can defend it as well as some others who are more committed to its provisions. My friend, the Senator from North Carolina, ought to read the debates in Congress on that bill. Some one should present him with a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1894. He should read the speeches made upon the other side of the Chamber, in which Republican Senators arraigned the Wilson bill as emphatically a Southern measure, by which Southern interests were protected at the expense of Northern interests. I can point out dozens of speeches made upon the other side where Senators expressly charged that "this is in the interest of the South; that is in the interest of the South, and the other thing is in the interest of the South." I think they were wrong. I think they pointed out those instances in the heat of debate, and that the measure, in that respect, is neither a Southern nor a Northern act. It was designed as a bill for revenue, and it now seems that in the effort to get revenue the framers did not provide for quite enough, according to the other side.

We still come back to the question as to what North Carolina wants, a high tariff or a low tariff, a protective tariff or a tariff-reform measure. Upon that question each of the Senators from that State claims to represent the State fairly and impartially, and each makes inconsistent claims.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator from New York?

Mr. HILL. I do not want to take too much time from the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who desires to take the floor soon. However, I will hear the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. In answer to the question as to what North Carolina wants, I will state that she wants a just system of taxation; she wants more money, every dollar a full legal-tender dollar standing on its own bottom, not to be redeemed in gold dollars, and enough of them to maintain the stability of prices. If you will give us that, the people of North Carolina can pay the McKinley tariff or the highest tariff ever passed easier than they can pay a 10 per cent tariff under the gold standard. North Carolina also wants an income tax that will make the wealth of the country pay its just proportion of the taxes of the country. She wants a stop put to these infamous bond issues; she is opposed to increasing taxes and piling up an interest-bearing debt in times of peace; she would rather cut down expenses than increase taxes; she would rather pay debts than to pile them up. That is what she wants. Is it not plain?

Mr. HILL. It is very plain [laughter], and it is very plain further that North Carolina is not going to get what she wants, either from the present Congress or from any other Congress for a great many years to come. The Republican party is not going to surrender to any such demands as those which come from North Carolina. The Democratic party is not. Therefore North Carolina will still have to wail, because it can not be comforted.

The Senator from North Carolina wants to pass an income-tax law. Is there any objection to his passing it if he wants to? Let him introduce such a bill. It simply violates the Constitution; but as our friend, Timothy J. Campbell, of New York, says, "What has the Constitution to do between friends?" [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from New York yield to just one question?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I have introduced a bill proposing an amendment to the Constitution so as to provide for an income tax. Will the Senator from New York vote for it? Let us get the alleged constitutional difficulties to a just and righteous law out of the way. Will he vote for my bill to amend the Constitution in this respect? The people of North Carolina thoroughly understand that justice can not be gotten through either of the old parties, as the Senator has frankly admitted.

Mr. HILL. I shall have to be a good deal older than I am now before I will ever vote for such an unwise constitutional amendment, permit me to say.

Mr. BUTLER. Your party can not hope for a much longer lease of power by pursuing such an un-American and ruinous course. The Populist party is growing rapidly because of just such betrayals of trust. Of course I mean nothing personal. The gold trust and the monopolists control both old parties, and the people are forced to leave them and rally under the banner of the People's Party to fight for their lost rights, their lost liberties, and their lost prosperity.

Mr. HILL. The Democratic party has stood a good deal; it can stand a good deal more, and it will live notwithstanding that the distinguished Senator from North Carolina has left its ranks. It has had adverse times; it will have them again; but I think, sir, that in the future, the near future, too, the grand old party, the party of Jefferson and Jackson, I beg to remind the Senator, will triumph. It has survived prejudice upon one side; it has survived bad advisers upon the other. It is a party which, in my judgment, is necessary to the welfare of this country. It has accomplished much in that respect. It is the party which has always stood in behalf of the liberty of the citizen against the encroachments of power. While we may differ as to some details, upon the main vital questions of the hour the party is substantially united.

The income tax was not a question which either party placed in its political platform in 1892. Every man had a right to vote as he pleased upon the question and be loyal to his party platform. This debate started upon the question of the attitude of North Carolina, and we have now diverged into a debate on the income tax, the tariff, and the silver question. From the looks of things we are going to have the silver bill before us for several days yet, and there will be ample opportunity for any Senator who desires to express his views to do so. Then we shall have up the tariff question, and I desire to hear again what North Carolina wants on the tariff question. I shall wait and listen again with great interest to what the people of that State desire with reference to tariff legislation.

I still think that they want tariff reform—genuine tariff reform. I doubt the statement of one of the Senators from that State that it wants a high protective tariff, and I doubt the statement of the other that it wants an extreme tariff reform bill. It wants a reasonable bill, a fair bill, a just bill. Not a bill in the interest of the North, nor a bill in the interest of the South.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. HILL. I was just about through.

SILVER COINAGE AND COIN REDEMPTION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2904) to maintain and protect the coin redemption fund, and to authorize the issue of certificates of indebtedness to meet temporary deficiencies of revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Finance, on which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I ask for the reading of the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] on a subject cognate to the one that is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution referred to will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN December 31, 1895, as follows:

Resolved, That by injurious legislation by the Fifty-third Congress the revenues of the Government were reduced below its necessary expenditure and the fund created by law for the redemption of United States notes has been invaded to supply such deficiencies of reserve; that such a misapplication of the resumption fund is of doubtful legality and greatly injurious to the public credit, and should be prevented by restoring said fund to the sum of not less than $100,000,000, in gold coin or bullion, to be segregated from all other funds, to be paid out only in the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes; and such notes when redeemed to be reissued only in exchange for gold coin and bullion.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have called for the reading of this resolution because in that movement of the Senator from Ohio there is concentrated the whole force of the attitude of the anti-silver, high-protection Republicans on the political questions that arise in this debate.

It would be a difficult and needless effort on my part to attempt to improve upon the able and conclusive argument of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] in his presentation on last Friday of the views of the Committee on Finance in support of the measure now under consideration. I cheerfully accept that argument as the basis of the observations I have the honor to submit to the Senate, which will relate more particularly to the application of the truths so thoroughly demonstrated by that honorable Senator to existing conditions of serious embarrassment that appeal to Congress for the relief of the Government and the people.

It is not surprising that in our chronic state of party antagonism we should feel disinclined to give precedence to any other considerations during this Presidential year than the political strategy that will most likely result in a party triumph and the rich inheritance of power and patronage that falls to those who capture the Presidency.

Yet, Mr. President, it can not be creditable or pardonable if we put the sufferings of our people out of mind until we have matured the plans and provided the strategy and tactics by which one of the two parliaments of political managers and intriguers which will meet to nominate candidates for the Presidency in the coming summer can probably capture that great prize.

Those parliaments will provide instructions to the Congress of the United States as to the legislation that is to be enacted; but if they can again so cloud their phraseology as to leave the victorious party in a fog of doubt and uncertainty, as is the custom of national conventions, we shall at least have the good fortune to escape from their follies through the meshes of their insincerity and to be left still untrammeled in our duty of providing, by law, for the welfare of the country. If the people, who are really unrepresented in these parliaments of the politicians, have no better guaranty for their protection and relief than their wind-shaken platforms can give, they will be neglected and trampled upon until they will find it necessary "to rise in the majesty of their might" and overwhelm with their power those who sacrifice them to their selfish purposes.

It will either be this, or some day, not too distant to be easily conjectured, one of these conventions will meet after an election to declare that their candidate has been elected, and to swear him into the Presidency. And if this may be done by an assumption of power after an election, why may it not be done as well before the election? France, when her people were as enlightened as we are, did wilder things than these in the name of liberty, equality, and fraternity. I can not drive away the conviction from my mind that the House tariff bill and bond bill were sent to the Senate merely as the component parts of a party platform, to be submitted to the Republican parliament of politicians as the best scheme for party success, and that neither of them was expected to be finally placed upon the statute book as a law.

The bond bill of the House had the ill fortune to encounter a true and sincere majority in the Senate Committee on Finance, who have reported the measure under consideration for the relief of the people and the Government on lines of justice and expediency that have the unbroken proof of more than a century of American experience to sustain this measure. The tariff bill of the House is in a state of lingering illness that seems to be destined to save it from the ax of the headsman who wields the veto. It is imprisoned in the sick bay of the caucus, and seems to have encountered the malady that afflicted the Wilson tariff bill, from which it recovered only by heroic surgery after many days of "innocuous desuetude," but in such shape that its own father did not know it and refused to recognize it. The Reed bill is, indeed, "a bruised reed," that his party seems afraid to trust. Whether the fire in the wool tax, like "the smoking flax," can be quenched, seems to be a question as to whether the water supply of the manufacturers will hold out. I am afraid that the President will not have the opportunity to veto the Reed tariff bill.

I think I can discern in the faltering step of progress in these measures that neither of the leading political parties is satisfied that there is any hope of relief to the country in either or both of them.

There is a serious and respectful attitude in Congress toward the reconsideration of our last twenty-five years of unhappy experiences, and a comparison of that period with the previous eighty years of growth and uninterrupted prosperity, when gold and silver coins dwelt together in unity and their parity was preserved under the laws of nature's God, who was then considered to be as wise as the average Secretary of the Treasury. I welcome this harbinger of deliverance.

It is bound to come, and I feel convinced that it is not far off. The slight apparition of war that recently scared the golden calf into dreadful bleating for the protection of its progenitor, John Bull, has started the inquiry as to how we could afford to fight without gold. The last and hardest blow that we struck John Bull, in the war of 1812, was delivered by Andrew Jackson, in whose honor the Senate adjourned on the 8th of January, and it is doubtful if many of his brave comrades ever saw a gold coin. Silver was the money with which they were armed, provisioned, clothed, and paid, and not much of that. It will be the money that will pay our Army and Navy if war ever again becomes our hard duty. So when the eagle ruffles his feathers we look to his picture on the standard silver dollar and repeat our motto, "In God we trust."

As a part of the programme that came over from the House—the tariff bill and the bond bill—the Senator from Ohio came to the front as the leader of the hosts. His great reputation as a king maker entitled him fairly to this eminent distinction.

The Senator had elected every Republican to the Presidency who had defeated him before a nominating convention save one, and as he is not now known to be a candidate, his remarkable success in electing his opponents in his own party may fail to attend him in the effort he made in the Senate a few days ago in favor of the Reed tariff and the Reed bond bill. The effort of the Senator from Ohio was only an exploit for party success, and was not what the country had the right to expect from his long experience as a leader in financial legislation.

Even his vindictive declamation against the coinage of silver on equal terms with gold goes unheeded by a people who suffer in hunger, asking for bread, while he hurls stones and anathemas against them. His eloquent denunciations echoed and reechoed among the groined arches of a temple that seemed deserted, with no approving voice from the multitudes outside, against whom the doors were closed. The great appeal has gone to the people, and their decree will be no uncertain sound. A vote in favor of this bill will be the law at a not distant day. I will read a very clear statement of our relations to legal tender and other paper money made to the Senate on Tuesday, December 31, by the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. He said:

Manifestly and palpably, then, our greenbacks have been the instruments and not the real cause of gold withdrawals. Had these instruments not existed, others would have been found. The burden would simply have shifted to other shoulders.

Our national-bank notes are, under existing laws, redeemable in greenbacks, or in so-called Sherman notes; in fact, in any legal-tender money. But if the greenbacks and the Sherman notes are retired, are destroyed, then the national-bank notes will become redeemable in gold, and their 25 or 15 per cent reserves and their 5 per cent redemption fund will all have to be made up of gold, and they will have to bear nearly all the gold burden which the Treasury now bears on behalf of the greenbacks and the Sherman notes.

The outward flow of gold can not be stopped permanently either by the sale of bonds to foreign syndicates nor by the retirement of the greenbacks and other Treasury notes. The flow can only be permanently and steadily checked by restoring the ultimate balance of trade in our favor. For years to come Europe must of necessity continue to have upon our stocks, mortgages, and bonds a large credit balance in her favor. This balance we should meet and overcome, not by the shipment of gold, but by the balance of traffic in merchandise in our favor. Our tariff and revenue laws should be so adjusted as to leave us a creditor rather than a debtor nation, with a merchandise balance sufficient to meet and liquidate the adverse credit balance, and with a revenue ample to meet all the expenses of the Government. Ample revenues and a clear balance of trade in our favor can alone stop the flow of gold and effect permanent and substantial relief.

There, Mr. President, is a demonstration that our Government can not escape the wastage of the endless-chain draft upon our gold resources so long as we have any form of redeemable paper issues in existence, except our present form of gold and silver certificates, if we continue to pay gold alone upon coin debts. The Senator argues that our gold supply will be exhausted in a few years by the withdrawal of that metal to meet the annual balances of trade that are against us, and demands the prohibition of trade by the enactment of high tariffs in order to turn the balances of trade in our favor.

The argument fails at this point, that other countries will not take our exports if they are denied the privileges of bartering their productions in exchange for them. Our productions are not like tea, coffee, and sugar, that we do not produce in exportable quantities, but each of our great staples and manufactures is in full competition with those of many countries in all the zones. Our balance of trade would give us no necessary concern if our people and our near neighbors could consume all that we can produce, but they are too poor to consume our surplus, whatever is the cause. We go abroad to find mouths to feed, backs to clothe, and houseless people to shelter.

If all hungry, ill-clad, and homeless persons, even in our own country, had all they really need to bring them up to the standard of their wants created by the decencies of our own civilization, there would be little surplus left of the redundancy of our productions. The want of money creates a surplus of labor by denying to those who are industrious the inducement to work. Unless our manual industries are prosperous we can never have balances of trade in our favor in our commercial dealings with foreign countries. If we are to rely for our financial independence upon selling to other countries more than we buy from them, we shall always be in financial slavery if we refuse to supply our industrial classes with the means of increasing the productions that enter into commerce.

It is very true that at home and abroad the profit of labor engaged in production, when counted in dollars, depends upon the ability of the consumers of our products to buy them at a remunerative price. It is equally true that when money is scarce among the consuming classes they can not take our surplus productions in full measure as compared with their actual wants. Their poverty fixes the price of our productions, not only as to the surplus left after our home demand is supplied, but it measures the price, at home and abroad, of the whole mass of our productions.

It is something even stranger and more cruel than "the irony of fate" that, as to wheat, corn, provisions, tobacco, and cotton, the rich people in Europe have these indispensable supplies priced to them at the rates that paupers can afford to pay for them. We are prevented, as it is said, by our Constitution, from protecting our surplus productions by an export tax, and so we are left at the mercy of the financiers of Europe as to the prices that they and the poor of that country shall pay us for our productions.

Why should the wealthy men of the British Isles, whose country can not feed its people two hundred days in the year, feel interested to enable their poorer classes to buy and consume more of our staple productions, when the increased demand thereby created for them would increase the amount of their personal expenses?

The balance of trade which the Senator from Minnesota seems to rely upon alone to check the outflow of gold from our country will never exist if Europe can prevent it. The way to prevent it, and the only way they can prevent it, is to keep their lower classes so poor that they can not consume what we produce.

Meat twice a week, white bread once in a month, and a cotton garment once in a year is all those poor people can find the money to pay for. If they were allowed to have more money in their reach, they would work very hard to get it that they might feed the stomachs and clothe the backs that God made as parts of the image of His Majesty—man, to whom He gave dominion over all things in the world. Without the use of an adequate supply of money we can not produce and sell, nor can they buy and consume our products, so as to give to this rich country and to our splendid people the balance of trade upon which our financial security as a single gold standard country is supposed to depend.

When gold marks the price of our productions the price must be short, because the supply of gold is short. And the prices must continue to decline as property, production, and population increase, because the increase of the gold supply can not keep pace with the march of civilization. Every year and every day must record a loss instead of a gain, like a leaking cistern. The ruin of such a country is certain and speedy.

The Senator from Ohio is the author of five new measures of finance that have given the people and the Government more trouble in handling the little remnant of $346,000,000 of greenbacks than it did to pay $12,000,000,000 of annual expenditures for the support of the Government and more than $3,000,000,000 of principal and interest of the national debt that we have raised by taxation and have paid in the last thirty years. These measures are the demonetization of silver in 1873, the sequestration of the gold reserve in the Treasury in 1878, the power given to the Secretary of the Treasury in 1890 to preserve the parity between the metals, the power to sell bonds at private sale, and the power to enable private persons, by contract, to dispense with the legal-tender laws in their transactions.

The Senator from Ohio thus emptied the evils of Pandora's box upon the country, and comes forth now as the great leader of the Republican party and of a faction of the Democratic party headed by our President, to vindicate his course.

This Napoleon of finance, as he is admiringly called, was retired to his Elba by the combined efforts of the old Jackson Democracy and the Grant and Logan and Teller and Jones Republicans, and the Bland-Allison Act. He has returned now, and marches his Old Guard to the attack upon the President, who sacrificed everything in his cause. The Senator refuses him the shelter even of the Senate tariff, which he disdained to sign and called "perfidious," but now raises it above his head as a shield and loudly proclaims that it is all-sufficient to relieve the country from all financial embarrassment, present and prospective, and to meet the future demand for gold for shipment to London.

The one hundred days of the Senator's final campaign against bimetallism are nearly up. His Waterloo has been fought and lost. He has not yet reached his rock in the sea. He has not yet embarked on the hospitable Bellerophon. His former great allies, the friends of Garfield and Conkling and Harrison and Quay, stand ready to decree his immolation in the political prison of another St. Helena. It is yet time for the Senator to do what the pride of Napoleon alone prevented him from doing, to his utter ruin. The Senator, instead of relying upon the honor of the British, which is never violated except for gain or revenge, had better seek refuge in America. Instead of trusting his future to British capitalists and Rothschild and Seligman, whom he has greatly enriched, he had better cultivate the love and gratitude of the toiling and suffering millions of Americans who are in poverty and distress and will forgive everything for the sake of peace.

The great radical wrong and mischief that the Senator from Ohio has inflicted upon the country was the gratuitous and unnecessary destruction of silver as primary money—the money of redemption of debts. This destruction, in a constitutional sense, has done great violence to the individual rights of American citizens.

The right of the British subject to contribute by his labor to the volume of legal-tender money of the realm existed in full force when our Constitution was ordained. It had also received the express recognition and sanction of the Articles of the Confederation and of the States in that capacity, and also while they were colonies.

This right belonged to the citizen, and could be fully enjoyed without the consent of any bank or banker, and it had existed for more than two centuries in Great Britain and the colonies. Under the Confederation a majority of the States could regulate the alloy and the value of the coins, but Congress could not coin money. When, under the Constitution, the power to coin money was given to Congress, it referred to striking the coins of gold and silver that were then in use. It referred to both, and not to one of those metals. I am only stating the conclusions that are undeniable, and do not propose to argue the question of their soundness. I suppose that the opinion of Daniel Webster on this subject, which I will now quote, is entitled to as much respect, as a judicial utterance, as any that could be given on this floor to-day. Mr. Webster said:

I am clearly of the opinion that neither Congress nor any other authority can legally demonetize either silver or gold. If one coin can be dethroned as money then the other one can be, and thus the Constitution can be disregarded, yes, overthrown. The command to Congress is to coin money, not to destroy it, to create legal-tender money for the use of the people, and the grant of authority to create money can not be construed to mean authority to destroy money.

This opinion is reenforced by a fact to which little attentino seems to be given—that no such thing as a gold dollar existed or had ever existed when our Constitution was ordained. All coined dollars at that day were silver dollars.

When the framers of the Constitution come to provide for that precious liberty, the right of trial by jury, they fixed the sum in controversy in civil causes which should determine the application of this right at "$20;" thus giving recognition to silver dollars (for there were then no gold dollars) as the measure of a civil right that had been the pride of Anglo-Saxon civilization since the battle of Runnymede. No less distinct was the recognition of silver as a money metal in the prohibition placed upon the States against their making "anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts."

One sentence in section 9 of Article I of the Constitution is full and perfect proof that the power "to coin money" given to Congress in section 8 of the same article is mandatory, and includes both gold and silver without discrimination. The defining sentence in section 9, which relates to the power given to Congress in section 8 of the same article, is as follows: "No State shall coin money," or "make anything but gold and silver coin a legal tender in payment of debts."

Thus, the right of the American citizen to have equal laws for the coinage of the gold and silver bullion which he might produce was an ancient and valuable liberty, which the Constitution did not destroy or abridge, but was designed carefully to preserve.

But our sense of the value and sacredness of constitutional rights is so dulled and obscured by the demands of political parties for those measures that, no matter how, will control the elections that I am quite aware that these arguments are too often addressed to ears that refuse to listen.

The Senator from Ohio, when he first essayed to destroy legal-tender silver money, declared, in 1872, to the great financial authorities of Europe that the American people were in favor of the British policy of the single gold standard of legal-tender money.

If he had any authority for such a statement he has never produced or referred to it, so far as I am informed. I have never heard of any such American declaration. I have heard of many to the contrary. If the Senator, whose opinions have weighed so heavily against our people, can sustain this serious assertion by any facts then existing, it behooves him, now that he is in the humor of taking the world into his confidence, to produce the proofs to support that unfortunate declaration. I do not believe it.

I will not attempt now to measure or describe the evil, wrong, destruction, and misery that has been inflicted upon a great country and a trustful people by the act of the Senator from Ohio in the demonetization of silver. Those evils and wrongs have been described by the present Secretary of the Treasury in language almost equal to the burning eloquence of the Apocalypse, not as a prophecy, but as a narrative of dreadful history, when he said they were worse than war, pestilence, and famine. As the present and the former Secretary of the Treasury are now in league for the final destruction of silver as a money metal, I will leave them to the adjustment of their former quarrels.

The resolution of the Senator from Ohio is plainly intended to indicate the attitude of the Republican party in the coming Presidential campaign. It is not in the least surprising that the Senator from Ohio is assigned to the duty, in advance of the reports of the Committee on Finance on the bond bill and the tariff bill, of stating the main issues on which they prefer to go before the country and of endeavoring to compel the Republicans in the Senate to align themselves upon those issues. He embodies the principles of that party more fully than any living man, and his record will be everywhere accepted as the record of the Republican party.

It is true that his record is a garment of many colors, but in that respect it is in keeping with the varied aspects of his party, which agrees in but one principle applicable to domestic affairs, that of a tariff, such as the McKinley law, levied for the purpose of giving the aid of the tax laws to enrich the favored classes by levying burdens upon those whose necessities compel them to yield tribute to the rich. In his assault upon the legislation of the Fifty-third Congress he specifies the Senate tariff bill as the principal point of attack. In this he has been met and so completely answered and unhorsed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that nothing remains to be said on that subject.

The Senator from Ohio was far more responsible than the minority of the Democrats in the Senate who voted with him for the repeal of his great financial act of 1890. That was the pet of the President and was made a sort of crucial test of true Administration Democracy in the "injurious legislation" of the Fifty-third Congress. That act was, by the averment of the President and the confession of the Senator, a great cause of the panic of 1893, and its repeal was agreed upon by them as the curative measure that would heal all of our troubles.

Instead of that the panic increased, gold rushed out of the country, and the President was forced to sell bonds to recall it.

The Senator has now discovered that the hegira of gold is due to the fact that we are buying more than we sell in Europe, and he advises the country to check importations from abroad, so that the balance of trade will be in our favor. What is to become of the revenue in that case?

The increase of taxes on the people is a matter of slight consideration with the Senator, but the people shiver while he advises that during this cold weather they shall dispense with some of their woolen garments.

Whether it is in the form of bond and mortgage, or in the form of a tax on woolen goods, the remedy offered by the Senator and the President is the same in its effects. They agree that the people shall be taxed in one form or the other to get gold to pay their coin contracts. Whether such taxes shall threaten the parity between the souls and bodies of the people seems to make no difference, so that parity is preserved between the metals described in our contracts by the word "coin."

I am firmly opposed to the repudiation of any part of our national obligations by our Government, and equally opposed to their repudiation by our creditors. If Congress should excuse, as they have never excused, our creditors from the obligation to accept legal-tender silver dollars in payment of our coin contracts, it is indisputably true that in doing this Congress would repudiate a sacred trust, duty, and obligation imposed upon them by a suffering and still confiding constituency. When Congress refuses to assert and enforce a just demand on the part of the people, secured to them by contract, such refusal can be nothing else than a repudiation of the contract.

If the Senator from Ohio had complained of the Fifty-third Congress because it did not demand some information or hint that an issue of two hundred and sixty-two millions of bonds would be demanded to keep the gold in the country, and that our paper currency was to be destroyed so as to make room for the national banks to regulate currency, business, and the price of crops and labor, I would have listened sadly to his "tale of woe." That failure of the Fifty-third Congress was far too melancholy for the Senator's wounded sensibilities. He does not allude to it. As to the manner of putting our bonds on the market, the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] has proven that it was in accordance with a bad precedent set by the Senator from Ohio.

This is another dreadful warning and example which I hope the Senator from New York will reflect upon, and that he will, in his maturer years, remember how dangerous a thing it is for a Democrat to follow a great Republican leader when he is parading the streets of the New Jerusalem, paved with gold and made royal with banners of gold bonds, of which the Senator from Missouri spoke in such a vivid way. Gold bonds have been the chief desire of the Senator from Ohio, and we have learned that it is dangerous to give him all that he wants.

The payment of $500,000,000 in gold is not a very serious undertaking for a Government that has raised and paid out in the thirty years since our civil war more than $12,000,000,000 in current expenses and more than $3,000,000,000 in bonded debt and interest, and whose bonds, exempt from taxation, are still worth 20 per cent more than their face value in gold.

Gold becomes a very cheap commodity when it is compared, in the estimation of the wealthy classes, with bonds guaranteed by the tax-paying capacity of the people of this great Republic that are free from all taxation, local or Federal, direct or indirect.

Such a form of wealth, so thoroughly guaranteed, is the ideal embodiment of the power that intellect, ambition, and the sword have always hitherto concentered in the ruling elements of all the enlightened nations of Europe, and that we are now fastening upon our country. Here is a movement that demands the consideration of every lover of republican institutions. For the increase of its power, it has the assistance of that most efficient instrument of the new order of feudal authority, the power of corporations, which takes the place of entails. The vassalage is the same. Public securities, in the form of interest-bearing bonds, are the foundations of this money power, while banks, like those of France, Germany, England, and the Treasury of the United States, furnish the perfectly safe means of controlling all the profitable industries of mankind, and the debtor Governments furnish, in addition to the profits thus realized, a fixed income of interest provided by the taxation of the people. It is no wonder, then, that the wealthy classes regard a national debt a national blessing, and that they and their political supporters are always eagerly seeking to issue more bonds. Nor should we be surprised that the taxpayers should set their faces like steel against any increase of the national debt in time of peace and without some demand of imperious necessity.

The political parties in this country are now aligned on the one side and the other of this vital policy of issuing bonds to borrow money on a mortgage of the labors of posterity, to pay debts, and to force these debts into premature demands for their liquidation when they need current money. These demands, if they must be paid as they are presented, and as taxation of the people is the only means of paying them, should be taxed upon the present generation. They should not be buried in mortgages to eat up the substance of our children.

The American people have a just dread of mortgaging the power of taxation by the Government, to come upon their children with threefold weight and to increase the power hereafter, in the distant future, of the wealthy classes, who eagerly absorb Government bonds.

Our people are alert and jealous of the aggregation of power in the control of favored classes. They are not ignorant of the evils of the old feudal system in Europe, nor of the fact that ours was the first Government to expel it and to make its reestablishment impossible in connection with land tenures, church establishments, the laws of primogeniture, and titles of rank and nobility. In our Constitution this form of feudal dominion was abolished and virtually destroyed.

We also have political doctrines that tend strongly to support this constitutional programme, such as the equality of all men before the law, and of equal rights to all, with exclusive privileges to none, in view of which we have felt very secure against the establishment of a feudal system in this country in connection with landed estates.

Following our lead, the sword of Napoleon greatly crippled the old feudal system on the Continent, and even in Great Britain, although the Irish people are still the feudatories of English lords. I need not bring to mind the horrors of the feudal system, or its abasement of men into very degraded servitude to the holders of power, in order to make it more odious to true American sentiment. But we must not suppose that the love of power and the self-assertion of the classes who instituted that system of human slavery has died in their bosoms, and that the same motives will not influence them to strive for the same results whenever opportunity is presented to them. The standing armies of Europe are not organized in such dreadful force to keep the peace between the poorer classes, or the middle classes, in the different countries of Europe, nor yet to keep the peace between crowned heads. The real purpose is to compel the obedience of the people to the supremacy of the wealthy and higher classes. When the old feudal tenures were so crippled that the yield of revenue from lands was much reduced, there sprung up in Europe a new feudal power based upon the war debts that Napoleon created, which assumed the control of finance and money, and that power has spread to the United States with all its train of evils, and is the power with which our people are contending to-day.

It is a power that acknowledges no distinctions save those of wealth, and is controlled, in perfect harmony of action and purpose, alike by Jews and Gentiles throughout Europe. We wonder how it is that the rich Jews, like Baron Rothschild and Lord Beaconsfield, are admitted to the nobility and the peerage in countries that despise and persecute their blood kindred. We wonder still more why the nations of Europe, and now this Republic, should find more wealth in the coffers of the Rothschilds than can be counted in the treasury of any Government, and why we should petition them, hat in hand, to take charge of the protection of our National Treasury against our own people.

The wonder ceases when we see that the feudal lords of Europe and America have transferred their holdings from the ownership of lands to national bonds and gold, and that every individual, in perfect harmony of action, moves in concert on the same lines to compel and secure the vassalage of the laborer and taxpayer the whole world over. It is this feudal power, this political combination of the wealthy classes, thus consolidated, that I am contesting with, having a people yet free and their Constitution yet in force to whom I can yet appeal for support.

The magnitude of this conflict will be better understood in the light of the fact that the national debts of the nations of the world, evidenced by various forms of obligation that are interest bearing, amount to $25,498,920,279. Ninety per cent of this vast sum is owned or controlled by the feudal barons of the empire of gold, whose throne is in London. The little sum of $700,000,000, to which we have reduced our enormous national debt, is a diminutive factor in the great sum of national bonds in which the feudal lords of this earth have laid up their wealth.

The Senator from Ohio long since chose his ground on the other side of the line and in favor of this feudal policy, but the people have refused to follow his lead, and they still insist upon being relieved from national debt.

The people of the United States were so outraged by the demonetization of silver that, in the Congress that counted Mr. Hayes into the Presidency, Stanley Matthews, a Republican from Ohio, offered the following resolution in the Senate, which passed both Houses:

Resolved, That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to the coinage of such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not a violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

The yeas on the adoption of the foregoing resolution were: Democrats—Messrs. Armstrong, Bailey, Beck, Coke, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Enstis, GORDON, Grover, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, MORGAN, Ransom, Saulsbury, Thurman, VOORHEES, Wallace, and Withers; total, 23.

The nays were: Democrats—Messrs. Barnum, Bayard, Eaton, Kernan, Lamar, McPherson, and Randolph; total, 7.

This resolution reached to the bottom of the subject. It reserved to the people of the United States the right to pay their bonds and other obligations according to the terms of their contract.

In 1868 the Senator from Ohio went even further than the Stanley Matthews resolution, and, in a letter to a friend, which the late Senator from Kentucky quoted from, in a speech in the Senate, the Senator from Ohio declared the duty of the bondholder to be that he should receive pay for his bonds in the sort of money he had paid for them. I will read from that letter:

DEAR SIR: I was pleased to receive your letter. My personal interests are the same as yours; but, like you, I do not intend to be influenced by them. My construction of the law is the result of careful examination, and I feel quite sure an impartial court would affirm it if the case could be tried before a court. I send you my views as fully stated in a speech. Your idea is that we propose to repudiate or violate a promise when we offer to redeem the "principal" in legal tenders.

I think the bondholder violates his promise when he refuses to take the same kind of money he paid for the bonds. If the case is to be tested by law I am right; if it is to be tested by Jay Cooke's advertisements I am wrong. I hate repudiation or anything like it; but we ought not to be deterred from doing what is right by fear of undeserved epithets.

If under the law as it stands the holders of the five-twenties can only be paid in gold, then we are repudiators if we propose to pay otherwise. If the bondholder can legally demand only the kind of money he paid, then he is a repudiator and extortioner to demand money more valuable than he gave.

Truly, yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

The Stanley Matthews resolution distinctly affirmed our right, under the contracts with our creditors, to pay all of our obligations in silver legal-tender money.

On this point there has been such an exhibition of false pretense of public virtue and so much of dilettanti parade of our high intention to rob our own people rather than give to foreigners an excuse for elevating their noses at their honest poverty that it is all that man's respectability is now worth to admit that he voted for the Stanley Matthews resolution in company with Beck, Coke, McCreery, McDonald, Saulsbury, and Thurman.

I had the honor to cast such a vote, and I am still here to defend its correctness with the Senator from Ohio, who has turned his kaleidoscope to catch the sun of British glory and to please the smiling audience of European oppressors.

The Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] has also joined the hosts who repudiate the coin obligations of our country by his repudiation of those who contend that they are still payable, as they were originally, in gold or silver coin, at the option of the United States.

I am quite willing to be repudiated by these repudiators of the stipulations in all our obligations, whether bonds or currency, in favor of our own country, who would alter the obligation while it is in the hands of a bona fide owner because we suppose that it may benefit our creditors. We have no such right, and this fact is entirely overlooked, it seems, by the Senator from New York.

The Senator from Ohio was deeply engaged in his game of solitaire when he was rudely jostled by the Stanley Matthews resolution, coming from another great Republican Senator from Ohio. In the same session of Congress it resulted in a bill which passed the House for the full and free coinage of silver. That bill was amended in the Senate and resulted in its being carried before a committee of conference, which reported the Bland-Allison law. That act passed both Houses, and was vetoed by President Hayes, and was then passed over his veto.

The Senator from Ohio, who was then Secretary of the Treasury, came to the bold and defiant resolution to defeat the will of the people, as expressed by more than two-thirds of each House of Congress, and to demonetize silver a second time by the use of gold only in the payment of our paper obligations. To do this effectually, he set aside $100,000,000 of gold in the Treasury as a fund for the redemption of our bonds and currency obligations.

If it is conceded, by a very loose construction of the resumption act, that the Secretary of the Treasury had authority to sequester $100,000,000 in the Treasury as a fund to anticipate the demand that might be made for the redemption of the outstanding Treasury notes, it can not be argued, with the least respect for the then recent action of Congress, that he could assume that the word "coin" used in the resumption law meant that gold coin, and only gold coin, should be used in redemption of the greenback circulation. I am just informed by the Senator from Arkansas

[Mr. JONES] that the Secretary of the Treasury has this morning reported that there is no law to require the sequestration of $100,000,000 of gold in the Treasury.

The resumption act took effect on the 1st day of January, 1879. It was enacted on January 14, 1875. It related alone to the redemption of legal-tender notes outstanding on the 1st of January, 1879. It had no reference to our bonded debt. The Stanley Matthews resolution had sole reference to the resumption of specie payments, then about to take place. It was adopted early in 1878. It was followed by the Bland-Allison Act, passed over the President's veto, on the 28th of February, 1878. This act made silver dollars a legal tender for all debts, public and private. The order of the Secretary of the Treasury that the outstanding legal-tender notes (the greenbacks) should be redeemed only in gold coin was a threefold repudiation. It repudiated the coin contract by converting it into a gold contract. It repudiated the law that made these legal-tender notes redeemable in silver legal-tender coin, and it repudiated the action of Congress in declaring that our coin obligations were payable alike in silver or gold coin.

The repudiation would have been none the less distinct if the Secretary of the Treasury had openly declared that he refused to obey the mandate of the statute. To repudiate silver as a legal-tender coin to be used in the redemption of these Treasury notes is no less a violation of the law than would have been the repudiation of gold. Not only so, but it was a defiant and cruel blow at the expressed will of the people, who were then suffering the pangs of a heavy contraction of the currency, which depressed all values to zero and filled the country with tramps who had lost business, employment, and homes—starving wanderers seeking alms in a country filled with abundance.

This repudiation of silver money was unnecessary. There was no public demand for it, and no good could possibly come from it. It was approved only by those who owned or controlled the gold resources of the country and by the national banks, because it increased the purchasing power of that metal by depreciating the prices of all the products of free industry. They saw in the legal-tender silver dollar a noninterest-bearing rival in the market for their usury-bearing paper money, and they declared war against the silver dollar. They refused to receive it on general deposit, and thus backed up the repudiation inaugurated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Secretary of the Treasury became alarmed—at least I hope he was—at the issue of bonds to buy the large pile of $100,000,000 in gold he had determined to put on exhibition in the Treasury to advertise our national solvency, and he began to buy gold from the people with Bland-Allison silver certificates. Here is what Mr. Beck had to say about that novel and interesting policy of the Secretary of the Treasury:

I may observe here that silver certificates are now and have always been a popular currency.

The Treasurer in his last report, page 24, says:

"The issue of silver certificates by Treasury officers in the South and West for gold coin deposited with the assistant treasurer at New York, under departmental circular of September 18, 1880, was discontinued in January last. The amount which had been issued in that manner to the date named was $80,730,500."

The Treasury order referred to reads thus:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., September 18, 1880.

"Until further notice the United States assistant treasurer in New York will pay out at his counter standard silver dollars or silver certificates in sums of $10, or any multiples thereof, in exchange for like amounts of gold coin or gold bullion deposited with him.

"Upon the receipt by the Treasurer of the United States in this city of an original certificate of deposit issued by the United States assistant treasurer at New York, stating that there has been deposited with him gold coin or gold bullion in the sum of $10, or any multiple thereof, payment of a like amount in standard silver dollars or silver certificates at the counter of any United States assistant treasurer designated by the depositor will be ordered.
"JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary."

The Treasurer of the United States in his report to Congress dated November 1, 1880, says:

"The demand for silver certificates under the circular of the Department dated September 18, 1880, authorizing their exchange for gold coin and bullion, has been quite extensive at New Orleans, St. Louis, Chicago, and Cincinnati, and there were paid out at these points during the month of October $3,485,000 in silver certificates for an equal amount of gold coin deposited in the subtreasury in New York."

And in December, 1881, the Secretary of the Treasury in his report says:

"The Department has issued silver certificates at the several subtreasury offices, upon a deposit of gold coin in like amount with the assistant treasurer at New York, and through this means certificates have been issued for nearly all the silver held by the Treasury. These certificates amount to about $66,000,000 and are now outstanding."

That condition of things doubtless rendered the following order necessary, as all or nearly all the silver coin in the Treasury was represented by outstanding silver certificates:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., November 1, 1881.

"Until further notice the exchange of silver certificates for gold coin deposited at the office of the United States assistant treasurer at New York will be suspended, and Department Circular No. 75, of September 18, 1880, is hereby modified accordingly.

"H. F. FRENCH, Acting Secretary."

Subsequently this restriction was removed for a time, and over $80,000,000 of silver certificates were taken, principally by the people of the South and West, in exchange for gold coin. The privilege was finally withdrawn in January, 1885. I ask in view of these facts how it can properly be charged that the people will not use the silver coinage, that they are hoarding gold, that the depreciated paper will soon greatly impair the purchasing power of the poor man's wages, and that we are on the verge of a financial crisis unless we bring all our transactions at once to a gold basis?

It must not be forgotten that all the gold coin deposited for silver certificates became at once the property of the United States; it was not held in the Treasury for their redemption. An equal amount of silver coin took its place for that purpose at once. Men who owned gold all over the South and West, in Louisville, Indianapolis, Nashville, and other places, as well as those cities named in the report, sent their coin at their own expense to the assistant treasurer in New York in order to have silver certificates delivered to them for use as currency at home. Yet during all that time the bullion value of gold in London was at least 15 per cent more than silver, and the country was being periodically alarmed, and Congress advised by our officials that gold was leaving the country, that silver was a degraded standard of value, and that its coinage must be stopped or its weight increased or ruin would speedily be upon us because of its depreciation in the London market.

The facts I have stated overthrow all the speculations of the theorists. Our business men gladly exchanged their gold coin for silver certificates and did not ask any better security for the paper they took than the silver dollar deposited in the Treasury. So far from hoarding gold because of its greater bullion value in a foreign market, they sent it to a distant depository to get the paper we are advised is dishonest money because it is depreciated 15 or 20 per cent below gold in London. I have thus imperfectly outlined the reasons why I can not sustain at this time a policy which seeks to withdraw either our legal-tender notes, the silver certificates, or stop the silver coinage, and I see no propriety in increasing the weight of our silver coin beyond the standard value fixed by law in July, 1870, under and by which all our outstanding bonded indebtedness is regulated. I am convinced that we can no longer look with safety to the national banks to furnish the country with a stable currency.

Now, was there ever a more flagrant case of repudiation without excuse or necessity than when the Secretary of the Treasury refused to pay silver coin in redemption of our legal-tender notes, and bought gold coin with the same money from our people and paid it out to redeem our obligations? All had been done that could be done to drive silver out of circulation and to depreciate its bullion value. It was refused coinage at the mints and legal-tender power by the Senator from Ohio in his act of 1873, and that of itself, without the connivance of Great Britain or any foreign power, was quite sufficient to drive it down to one-half of its commercial value. And yet with the people it was as good as gold, and is as good to-day.

In 1873 Great Britain seemed, so far as the United States were concerned, to have realized its policy of 1816, of compelling the nations that had important commercial relations with that country to come to their standard of money, which had then been fixed in gold. For more than fifty years it had waited to find a body of capitalists in the United States whose interest would be sufficient to induce our Government to adopt this policy of Great Britain. The gold discoveries of 1849 and the war of 1860–1864 concentrated money, bonds, and stocks in the hands of a few, and in the control of the national banks, railroads, and other corporations to a degree that promised British success.

Her plea that gold was the money of the world, and her more specious plea that gold is the money of the rich and silver is the money of the poor, gave a very attractive glow to that theory of the academies that the world can not be harmonious until it has gold alone as the universal basis of the redemption of all contract obligations.

The then Secretary of the Treasury, now the Senator from Ohio, seems to have been under the spell of this hallucination, and he has never recovered from it; yet his activity, which was rewarded with success, in the introduction of this British policy into our financial system in 1873 was not the final doom of silver money in its results.

The people of the United States, as soon as they learned the fact from General Grant, who was belated in this sudden foray, that silver money had been destroyed, rallied to the ballot box and demanded its restoration. Great Britain had been trying, unaided, to hammer down the price of silver bullion for nearly sixty years without success. On the contrary, our silver dollars were worth 3 per cent over gold at the time of their demonetization.

The value of silver bullion began to run down rapidly after 1873; but when the people got to understand the situation, they sent a Congress here in 1877 that, in obedience to their will, did all that then seemed possible to reverse this policy of Great Britain, laid like "a rook's egg in the eagle's nest." With our assistance to help the decline, and the refusal of our Presidents to obey the will of the people, often expressed, Great Britain at last succeeded in forcing down the price of silver by taking from it the rights of coinage in the European States and in India. It could have as easily depressed the price of gold by the same means; but Great Britain controls nearly all the gold-producing regions of the earth, and produces little silver in her vast realm. It follows that the demonetization of silver increases at least twofold the value of her gold products, and she demands that her policy shall prevail. In like manner it increases the value of our securities held in the centers of wealth in the United States, and so the British policy becomes their policy as well.

The segregation of the reserve fund of $100,000,000 in gold in our Treasury has made it an easy matter for the dealers in bullion and exchange to corner the market for gold and to force the Treasury to buy it in order to keep the reserve at its maximum.

We see that within the last few days another tremendous scramble has occurred in the efforts of the people of this country and foreign countries to become possessed of our bonded obligations, and that in that effort this reserve fund is sustaining a very fierce assault, and is being depleted with great rapidity. This reserve fund has been kept up as a standing advertisement to the world that whatever Congress might do or declare, there should be no resumption of specie payments in coin, but resumption should be had only in gold.

With startled apprehension the people have inquired when it was and how it could be that the silver feature of their coin obligations could thus be repudiated with impunity by the ukase of the executive department. The answer has been and is that the Executive holds the veto power and would not and will not permit the power of the people, expressed in Congress, to be used for their relief.

This $100,000,000 dead money has been held in the Treasury since 1878—eighteen years. It has cost the people, in interest, more than an equal amount in that time, and there has been added to it $162,000,000 of principal, with another $100,000,000 now about to be added. Five hundred million dollars would scarcely cover the loss to the Treasury from the mere handling of this repudiation fund, while one-fourth of its capital sum is lost and not one dollar has been redeemed of our legal-tender obligations.

The law that required the legal-tender notes to be reissued and kept in circulation after they had been redeemed was in its effect a suspension of the resumption act of 1875 as to such notes. Notwithstanding this clear indication of the popular will that these notes should not be redeemed in coin, the one-hundred-million dollar fund for their redemption has been kept at the maximum, still, by the orders of the Secretary of the Treasury. These evils would seem to fill the measure of woes which this act of repudiation was capable of engendering; but far from it; the attendant evils are still more severe upon the people and their posterity. Who can compute the losses in the value of crops and productions that have occurred during the eighteen years we have kept all this gold reserve out of circulation among the people and the bankruptcies that have followed the constant depression of prices?

What man of business would be trusted who for eighteen years would keep one-sixth or one-fourth of his active capital in a show window as a proof of his solvency, while the people all knew that it was borrowed money, on which he was paying interest? That is our folly repeated in sight of a scoffing world, and we call it statesmanship.

The credit of a great Republic of forty-five sovereign States, each abounding in wealth, with a debt-paying record that no other country ever enjoyed, must have its solvency tested by a barometer set up in the Treasury, which records the weather and indicates whether the European Jews, or the London bankers, or the syndicate, or the speculators, or the American banks have the control of the finances of the Government of the United States. From time to time our Secretaries of the Treasury fly to cover, like frightened partridges, from tuft to tuft, wherever shelter seems to be in sight, rather than insist upon the terms of our coin contracts.

They fear their enemies much less than they do their friends, and yet when they find themselves enveloped in difficulties from which there seems to be no other chance of extricating them they still appeal to a confiding and an outraged constituency for authority to tax them to buy more gold by the issue of more bonds in order to keep the "endless chain" continually at work.

The Senator from Ohio, when he found, in 1890, that the people still insisted upon their rights and would not be quieted into submission, again got a free-silver bill into conference, and again his inventive powers were taxed to find a way to nullify the silver features of our coin contracts. Again he succeeded—by a new programme that eclipsed all his previous machinations. He ascertained to his own satisfaction that it was within the power of Congress to give to the Secretary of the Treasury the authority, by manipulation, to preserve the parity between the metals of gold and silver. It is not the parity of the legal-tender coins of gold and silver that is to be preserved by the policy declared in the act of 1890. That parity is preserved by the legal-tender laws, and no human effort, aside from the change of those laws, can disturb it.

The Senator from Ohio did not impose this duty, from which the Creator shrank, upon the Secretary of the Treasury by the mandate of the statute. He merely declared that it was the fixed policy of the Government that he should preserve the parity, and left the Secretary to his own devices as to how he should best perform this divine act. He wisely concluded that it could not be done so long as there was any gold and silver money, and he cut the gordian knot by destroying silver as far as he could, and by refusing to it any sort of recognition. To preserve the parity between gold and silver as metals is not an easy task when either metal is excluded from coinage, and the one stands at the maximum and the other at zero.

As there is no comparison in the condition of silver that is refused coinage at the mints with gold that has full and free coinage, the question of the parity between them is simply an absurdity when one is destroyed and the other is coined. This question has thus been decided against silver by the Secretary, and the further consideration of the question of parity is a matter of no importance. How it ever became possible for a Senator to conceive of such omnipotence in a Secretary of the Treasury has given much serious food for reflection among the people of the United States.

This vague hint at the power to preserve the parity between the metals in the act of 1890 was enough to give a pretext to an anxious mind in the direction of paying all our debts in gold coin. It was a prudent and also a plausible pretext for attributing to Congress the repudiation of the silver feature of our coin obligations when its repudiation was a simple negative act that declared a policy. This feature of the act of 1890 was denounced by the Chicago convention as a cowardly makeshift, and the repeal of the entire act was demanded as the quickest and cleanest way of disencumbering the statute book of an evil presence. But when the speculators in gold and investors in bonds considered the prospect of having the gold reserve disturbed and replaced by a better system, they insisted on repealing the silver section of the bill and retaining the parity clause. It is too late now to discuss this in a party sense. I allude to it only to show that no pretext is too slight to enable those who are bent on making money according to the statute, and at the expense of the people's best interests, to justify any attitude they may find it necessary to take.

The Secretary of the Treasury could as easily preserve a common, perfect, and continuous tide level between the waters of the Pacific and the Atlantic as he could preserve the actual parity, commercial or financial, between the metals of gold and silver. As to the coins, the laws create and regulate the parity.

Until the world can do without silver as money in every form it will not answer the common sense of mankind to say that a dollar is sound money in the form of two half dollars, but is unsound money when it is coined in one piece and has 7 grains of pure silver in it more than there is in two half dollars. The Secretary of the Treasury could much more easily answer his own arguments in favor of silver as sound money than he could balance himself on the slack rope of parity and preserve the equilibrium between two silver half dollars and one silver dollar, with the difference between them of 7 grains of pure silver in favor of the dollar. The law, however, finds no difficulty in this.

It is the placing the Secretary of the Treasury above the law and giving him the power to condemn either gold or silver money as the money of redemption that impresses upon this feature of the statute the hideous reproach of epitomizing the odious doctrine of the one-man power. It is still worse to derive this terrible usurpation from a doctrine or purpose stated in the statute which refuses to confer it in direct terms.

The true Democracy of the United States finds a painful reason for criticising the present Administration, because it has sought to preserve and utilize this worst doctrine of the Republican party in order to give to the Secretary of the Treasury a pretext for repudiating the right of the people of the United States to the benefits of their coin contracts.

The Senator from Ohio also aimed a deadly blow at the liberties of the people guaranteed expressly in the Constitution when he provided in the act of 1890 that money declared by law to be a legal-tender can be deprived of that quality by agreement between debtor and creditor.

No Government in Christendom has failed to give to the borrowing classes and the debtor classes the rights that stand for their protection in interest laws, usury laws, and legal-tender laws.

Such a Government would be a nursery of human slavery. Our rights as to legal-tender money are planted in the organic law and are no less sacred than habeas corpus and trial by jury. If these can be set aside by agreement, so as to compel a court of justice to render a judgment in gold dollars, or in British sovereigns, or Russian rubles, or Indian rupees, or in anything but dollars, lawful money of the United States, there can be no limit to the duress and hardship that a creditor can impose upon his debtor. A marshal of the United States can no more sell the property of a defendant for gold coin, under a writ of execution on a judgment for dollars, than he can hang him for the nonpayment of the debt. When the law has given judgment, through a court, upon any money demand, the antecedent contract is merged in the judgment and that judgment can only be expressed in dollars, which means the lawful money of the United States, whatever description of money may have been embodied in the original agreement.

In the act of 1890, and in the repealing act of 1893, this feature is retained, whereby the people are informed that the legal-tender privileges and liberties of the debtor, granted to him by the Constitution, may be sold to the creditor. That although the laws may make greenbacks or silver dollars a legal tender for debt, finding such to be a public policy of the highest importance to the country, yet the people can, by contract among themselves, destroy the legal-tender money of the country, reverse the public policy, and barter their liberties to those who are the masters of their necessities. Such a doctrine is not known to any civilized country.

But the "cowardly makeshift" of 1890 and the craven makeshift of 1893 both contain this principle or provision, and hundreds of millions of contracts have been made with reference to it, as if it was sound constitutional law.

Congress, under the limitations of the Constitution, is the agent of the people and the States. Its trusts are sacred and limited. None of them are purely discretionary. When a contract is made on behalf of the people and is concluded by the delivery and acceptance of the obligation, it is as much beyond the power of Congress to change it, to the detriment of the people, as it is to revoke or change a grant of lands, once it has been perfected, or a pardon after it has been signed. Our bond contracts read as follows:

This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt, approved July 14, 1870, amended by an act approved January 20, 1871," and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of May, A. D. 1881, in coin of the standard value of the United States on said July 14, 1870, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof, at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, payable quarterly on the 1st day of February, May, August, and November in each year. The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes and duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

Extract from face of United States 4 per cent bond:

This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, amended by an act approved January 20, 1871, and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1907, in coin of the standard value of the United States on said July 14, 1870, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, payable quarterly on the 1st day of October, January, April, and July in each year. The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

This contract is certainly irrevocable until Congress, with the consent of the holder, has changed it. For a Secretary of the Treasury to interpolate the word "gold" before coin, so as to make it read "gold coin," would be a void and criminal act. It is only less than this where the Secretary repudiates the term of the contract which empowers the Government to pay in legal-tender silver coin of the standard value of the United States on the 14th of July, 1870. In these bonds we go behind the act of 1873, which demonetized silver, and agree to pay in silver coin of the standard value of 1837, if that shall be our preference. But for this act of repudiation, all would have been well with us. The present Administration, feeling and acknowledging the just reproach of having followed a bad example of its Republican predecessors, comes to Congress with threats as well as implorations, and asks us to change the coin obligations in our bonds and convert them into gold obligations. We have not the power to do that. If we had, it would be a cruelty to our posterity that only cowardly peoples ever impose upon their offspring.

The one hundred million bonds now on the market have thirty years to run. That is the life of a generation. There are not ten men here who will live to see the maturity of these bonds. At 4 per cent, they will, without compounding the interest, grow to $220,000,000. Should we double the difficulty of payment to our posterity in order to quiet the regrets of the present Democratic Administration for having followed the bad example of Republican Administrations in the repudiation of our coin contracts?

For whose advantage is it that we have kept up this vain and idle show of one hundred million in the Treasury for eighteen years? It has not been for the benefit of foreign holders of our bonds. Their interest has been paid to them from another fund. This fund, called the "gold reserve," is only for the redemption of our legal-tender notes, none of which are held abroad or could be there redeemed. All this agony over the gold reserve has been suffered in order to promote the sort of paternalism that a nursing mother gives to her baby, in favor of the bond-holding and bullion-speculating classes in the United States. It has been mothers' milk for the innocents who deal in stocks and bonds, in futures, puts and calls, monopolies and corners, and for foreign investors in our corporations, who earn profits, interest, and dividends under the shelter and privileges of our laws and out of the necessities of our people, and then tax them to borrow gold that their income may be shipped to Europe and converted there into their domestic money.

The Senator from Ohio says that the balances of trade are against us and must be paid in gold. If that is so, it is not because we produce or export less in recent years than we did formerly. It is because the gold policy in Europe, which is but the policy of the feudal age repeated in different form, has deprived those people of the ability to consume our surplus productions except at pauper rates. But, whatever is the cause, is it the business of this Government to furnish gold to pay balances of trade? When did that sort of paternalism become a part of the creed or practice of the Democratic party? When England and France find that gold is leaving them to pay foreign balances of trade, they raise the rate of interest and stop the outflow. We tax the people to raise gold to facilitate the outflow and refuse to pay our debts in silver according to the contract, because the foreign creditors of our merchants demand gold of them.

No man knows what is the approximate amount of the stocks and bonds of our corporations that are held abroad. We know that it includes every variety of stocks and bonds created in this country, and their name is legion.

We know that bonds of our corporations are seldom sent abroad for hypothecation unless they are accompanied with equal amounts of the stocks to be held as collateral. These stocks are voted in the corporate proceedings and draw dividends if any are declared.

The foreign money that comes here under such conditions comes as an investment, and if the investors came with it they would consent to collect their dividends in the money earned by their companies. Then we would have no trouble in paying them. But they do not come here and use our greenbacks, Sherman notes, and silver certificates as the resident stockholders use them, and we are required to repudiate our coin contracts to raise gold to keep them in a good humor and to maintain our respectability in their eyes and in the eyes of the snobs at home who worship them and barter their wealth for titles for their daughters which the Constitution forbids their fathers to receive.

It is these feudal princes, at home and abroad, now united in the control of the empire of gold monopoly and owing their highest allegiance to the shylocks of Europe, that object to any plan for breaking the endless chain that has become such a terror to this Administration.

If the wheel that carries this chain continues to revolve, the Treasury crank by which it is kept in motion will grind out an increase of our bonded obligations that will amount to $1,000,000,000 in the next three years, at the rate at which it has progressed in the last two years. This, added to the remaining war debt, including the greenbacks, aggregating more than $1,000,000,000, will throw the country back to a worse condition than we were in at the close of the civil war. Does this dreadful prospect, this certain fate, alarm the bondholding princes of the houses of Rothschild and Belmont? They rejoice, indeed, in the return of the old regime, the new phase of the feudal power and the vassalage of the people!

The threats of the President that the wheel that carries the endless chain shall continue to revolve and the renewed diligence of the Secretary of the Treasury in grinding out bonds bring dismay to the people, who are ready to cry out, "Tax us, tax us to buy gold to destroy the paper money on which our industries depend. We will make bricks for you without straw; but do not turn our children over to the gold princes as feudatories, to become their vassals and slaves when their fathers have passed away."

The present condition of our country as to indebtedness, finance, and taxation is a state of prostration, almost of despair, in which the will of the people, the votes of their representatives in Congress, and the injunctions and mandates of the Constitution are all in turn silenced and nullified by the will of a single man. What one man has done to shelter wealth from taxation by a judicial sentence will never be forgot while a record remains of the eloquent expressions of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The President declares that our coin contracts are only and exclusively gold contracts, and vetoed a bill demanded by the people to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury because his approval of such a measure would be an admission that silver is a money metal.

He demands that Congress shall change all our coin bonds and other contracts into gold contracts by express statute so that when they mature our children shall have no excuse for demanding from the bondholding princes the right to pay them in silver. We have that right, and the President demands that we shall surrender it on pain of having the wheel to run with increasing velocity that drags the endless chain through the heart of the country. One word—an honest, sincere, and just word, the word of truth—uttered by the President would relieve the country of these terrors. That word would be, "The rights of the people, as they are expressed in their obligations, must and shall be preserved."

Such an utterance would be even as potent and would be welcomed with as much honest joy by the people and is as necessary to the salvation of the country as was the thrilling, trumpet-toned proclamation of Andrew Jackson when he declared, "The Federal Union; it must and shall be maintained."

But our Jacksons are mute, and the "triumphant democracy" go about the streets in weeds of mourning. The voice that might save us is hushed in adoration at the altar of the golden calf.

The happiness of our people and their love of the independence of our country and its honor, according to the standard raised in 1776, and confirmed in 1823, has been intensely realized and expressed in the truly American declarations of our Chief Magistrate within the present month.

That standard of honor and duty is not accepted in Great Britain; neither was the standard of 1776, which gave to the name of "rebel" a distinction, when it is connected with a struggle for the right, that I love to enjoy.

We do not measure American questions by British standards, either of honor, justice, or duty, and the people are humiliated when our national money standards, established in laws approved by Washington and Jackson, are hauled down by our modern Presidents because they are not approved in London, and are not permitted to be again established without the consent of Great Britain.

The Senator from Ohio built the wheel that moves the endless chain that carries the wealth of our industry and property into the coffers of the wealthy bondholders of the world, and is now ready to pour another $100,000,000 of the earnings of the people into that cold and deadly vortex.

The wheel and rack of the Spanish Inquisition was scarcely less deadly in its martyrdom of free religion than is this wheel and chain in the Treasury of the United States to the prosperity of free industry. If its movement is not arrested by some benevolent word—and only a word is needed—from the class that is now possessed of the exclusive privilege of controlling the money supply of this country, the people will crush out the political parties that are now pandering to these cruel exactions and will drive them from power.

The debt of Great Britain gives the common people no concern, because if it was ever paid some other device would be substituted for it that would impose upon them equal burdens in some other form. The feudal power, which the upper class cling to in whatever form it may exist, and is most lucrative and agreeable to them, will never be relinquished while that monarchy exists.

Only a Republic deriving its powers of government and the methods of its administration through the will of the people often expressed can prevent the crystallization of money and monopoly into some combination that will place the industrial classes under the dominion of accumulated capital.

The people of the free Republics dread a national debt as a foe to their prosperity and liberty, while the ruling classes in a monarchy consider a national debt as a bond of union and strength for the state, because they hold the debt as creditors, and gather their profits entirely from taxation of other people.

The anxiety to own our bonds that are free from taxation, on which the interest is collected in gold at 3 per cent, has grown into such a mania among the rich people of the United States that they run over each other to get the chance to buy them.

It is the only property in the United States that is really sought after as an investment, and the longer the bonds have to run the higher the premium ranges above their face value in gold.

The power lodged in these bonds to depress prices by increasing the purchasing power of the gold they represent at the enormous premium of 20 per cent and their freedom from all taxation make them the most complete embodiment of class despotism that human ingenuity has ever invented. When we extend their redemption to longer periods, or indefinitely, they will go still higher and the moneyed classes will, as they have often done, torpedo the people and the markets with panics until they consent to the issue of bonds to absorb all of their net earnings as they accumulate. This is the destiny to which we are drifting with blinded eyes and ears that refuse to listen.

In 1817, at the close of the Napoleonic wars, the national debt of Great Britain, English and Irish, was £840,850,491, or about $4,204,252,455. This debt, funded in bonds and exchequer bills, is to-day the foundation of the wealth of the ruling classes in Great Britain. They are payable at the pleasure of the Government, which means that they are never to be paid. We speak of Great Britain as the great creditor country without recalling the fact that she is more largely in debt than any other Government. We could easily have pursued the same course of indefinite extension of our national debt, and could have saved to this generation an enormous outlay of money and energy by casting the burden upon posterity. The advocates of this plan have not been numerous, but they are still very powerful and terribly dangerous to American liberty. They have hungered after increase of national debt as Abraham hungered for a posterity. The great masses of wealth recently piled up in new estates that have astonished mankind have grown in this country upon the fertile soil of the national debt.

But the patriotic people, who feel that they are entitled to a posterity as free and independent of personal vassalage as their fathers were, have demanded and will still demand with an emphasis that will yet be respected that the national debt shall be paid, and that the country shall be rid of this monstrous octopus. All patriotic Americans value the liberty of their children above the shackles of the wealthy classes, and they demand that a feudal aristocracy shall not hold bonds, reenforced by taxes, for which their labor and all they possess and all their children may possess is mortgaged, but they shall be compelled by self-interest to invest their wealth in productive industries that will give employment to human labor. Pay the bonds, and the wealth of the country will seek investment in property that is productive. So long as we issue bonds we lock up the wealth of the country and prevent investment in property. The issue of each $1,000,000,000 of bonds will decrease the productive capital of this country by $2,000,000,000.

The present premium on our bonds is boastingly referred to as an indication of the wealth of our country, when it is in fact a mark of the unproductive character of our property and industries as compared with the power of gold. If lands would produce a certain income of 3 per cent above all taxes, repairs, and improvements, the value of real estate in this country would be increased by a sum that is almost incalculable, and the material prosperity of the country would be more attractive to all classes of laboring men than the gold and diamond mines of South Africa.

As it is, all our property is shrinking in value from year to year, while our debts remain unpaid, with accumulating interest. In Alabama, which has rich and varied fields of industry in active operation, that are yielding the most useful productions, the shrinkage in the value of taxable property for two years past has exceeded $30,000,000 per annum. In other Southern States the per cent of shrinkage has been still greater, and it has gone on in arithmetical progression until beautiful towns have been abandoned, and in many places elegant houses for business and residences have been turned over to any person who has chosen to occupy them. All this and far worse than I have the time or ability to describe has been brought upon the people of the United States by centering the whole financial power of the Government and the people, first, to collect gold to ship to foreign investors in our corporations, to pay them their interest and dividends on stocks and bonds that are the creatures of our State laws, not the laws of the United States; and second, by the monstrous wrong of destroying one-half of the money of the people, with which they might have been able to bear these grievous burdens.

Nothing but the marvelous, yes, truly miraculous wealth of our natural resources, aided by the courage, virtue, skill, and industrious thrift of the best population on the earth, could have saved us from utter ruin under the oppressions of the ruling powers, whose greed for gold has stricken with death every human sympathy. In the cruel waste of the homely earnings of honest industry, which has virtually enslaved all labor to new and heartless masters, the old feudal spirit has found its permanent dominion in our midst. It has come to a sincere and patriotic people, and, appealing to them in the name of the honor of our country, has told them that they must waive their rights under their coin contracts to pay their debts in silver because the knightly lords of finance in Europe—the Rothschilds, the Seligmans, who used to sell cheap clothing in Alabama, and others of the great brotherhood of money changers—would think ill of us and call us names if we refused to pay the commercial balances of trade in gold which have been created, if at all, by the denial of proper food and clothing to their own miserable subjects.

They turn to us, who are defending our people against this wrong to the present generation, which, if we shall fail to arrest it, will harden into chains upon our children, and accuse the Almighty for having hidden silver in the mountains of Colorado and the Senators from that State for desiring to direct the labor of their people to its production. In the meanness of a sordid spirit they conceal the fact from the world that Colorado produces more gold also than any other State in America. With frantic declamations of woe these prophets of evil warn us against the awful chasm at the bottom of which we shall find all our financial system if it shall be hurled down to a silver basis. That is the basis on which the Senator from Ohio, when he was Mr. Hayes's Secretary of the Treasury, placed $80,000,000 of the Treasury gold reserve which he had established without authority of law, when he bought it from the people at par with Bland-Allison silver certificates. And yet no damage but only good came from that largest sale of silver for gold at par that was ever made in America.

Silver, at par with gold, not held in parity by some velvet-handed Secretary of the Treasury, but by the mighty grasp that placed both metals in their cradles of quartz rock in the beginning, has bought and paid for almost every acre of public land east of the Mississippi River. It has furnished the sinews of war in all our conflicts with foreign nations as the most reliable source of financial strength. These wars, that gave us all of our vast possessions except Alaska, were fought on the now degraded plane of the odious silver basis.

If I have a debt to pay, or an article to purchase, or a family to provide for, a physician to employ, or a loved one to bury, I find that our legal-tender laws do not compel me to climb the golden stairs into the elect presence of the syndics and crowned princes of finance to beg them, as our Secretary of State begs them, for a little gold to meet my necessities.

The silver basis, which we now have, is a good basis for all of our domestic needs, and if others need gold to assist their foreign operations there is no justice in making our own people pay all their debts in gold, at half prices for labor and crops, merely to allow the merchants, shipowners, railroads, and bankers to handle our production more to their satisfaction. For a people to become alarmed at falling to a silver basis when they are already upon it in all their vast commerce at home, is a species of nightmare that people should not be called upon to endure in their waking hours.

If Mr. Cleveland and the Senator from Ohio had told the people frankly in 1893 what was their real plan of finance, they would have said that it was their purpose to bring the country to the single legal-tender standard of gold coin and to use the powers of the Executive in leading them in the bonds of party allegiance to this fate, while they were being flattered to hope for and to expect better things. If they had then told us that their real purpose was to destroy all redeemable paper money issued by the Government, except national-bank notes, and to leave it to the pleasure or interests of those banks to enlarge or diminish their circulation to suit their own purposes, and also that it was their purpose to sell gold bonds to enable the gamblers in stocks, the banks, the merchants, and our corporations in the control of foreign stockholders to have exceptional prosperity, and, finally, to redeem the issues of the national banks in gold, they would have driven every sound Democrat in the United States into an attitude of open hostility to such a plan, even if it had cost them an additional censure of "party perfidy and dishonor."

When this bill has passed the Senate and has gone to a conference committee, if such should be its history, it may turn out that the people will be permitted to purchase the restoration of their full constitutional right to have the coinage of silver placed on the same legal footing with the coinage of gold at the mints. The price to be paid for this boon, that will rid us of an evil that "is worse than war, pestilence, and famine," will not be too great, whatever it may be, if it does not stain the honor of the people.

If such an arrangement should also divorce the Government, as a Government, from the banking business, that return to sound principles would be worthy, if need be, and if it must be, of great sacrifices.

The outstanding greenbacks represent the part of the war debt that has not been already paid or funded in our bonds, and it must be paid at some time. It has been kept in circulation to prevent a harsh contraction of the currency, and only for that purpose, and has been changed, so far as that could be done by Executive action, from a coin obligation to a gold obligation.

I for one would be willing to fund those obligations in gold bonds if silver certificates are issued dollar for dollar to take their place in the volume of currency as they are retired, and if the silver to secure their redemption is supplied from the coin and bullion in the Treasury, and from the free coinage of silver under the principles of the act of 1837, approved by President Jackson.

I have observed with pleasure that the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, who reported this bill, has heretofore, in the Fifty-third Congress, offered a bill much to the effect of the suggestion I am now presenting. His bill provided for the issue of coin bonds to redeem the greenbacks, in connection with the free coinage of silver and the issue of silver certificates in lieu of the greenbacks so redeemed. That is the just view to take of the matter, and it would remove every difficulty that is now in the way except the pride of opinion that a long and painful controversy has raised to the distinction of a national question, or folly, as we choose to think about it. No American shall drive me from his side by slight considerations when we are trying to unite our efforts in the honest service of our country.

If we must make mutual sacrifices in order to render effective service to the people, we have the great example of our fathers to guide and assure us, when they made many compromises of their most inveterate convictions in order to lay down safe foundations for our Constitution, which is the ark of our safety and the covenant of peace which binds together the hearts of all true Americans.

If it is necessary, in order to bring our country back safely to the conditions that existed prior to the destruction of silver money in 1873, that the chasm shall be bridged with gold bonds, I will vote for them, but I will not vote now or at any time to throw our people into the gulf that a way shall be smoothed for a triumphal procession of Jews or Gentiles, native or foreign, over the wreck of their fortunes and their hopes.

As to the bonds to be issued for that purpose, without changing the tenor of any other obligations, I will vote for their payment in gold upon the condition that the other provisions I have mentioned are incorporated in the act.

The present bill, with slight alterations, furnishes a plan upon which, for the sake of peace and harmony, I would vote to ingraft such an amendment.

I do not believe such a provision of law would be wise, just, or necessary, but I would vote for it for the sake of the reconciliation of my countrymen, and in order to divorce the Government from the banking business, and above all because it would destroy all excuse for the further issue of bonds by causing the rupture of "the endless chain."

While that chain inflicts its exhausting and disastrous effects upon the country we can only sink deeper in debt with each succeeding day. The rate of this submergence is but little less than that which piled up the national debt while the civil war was at its worst.

The power to stop it is so simple and just that the people stand in mute silence and astonishment that the President does not adopt it. It is to apply the honest declaration of the Stanley Matthews resolution to the interpretation and payment of our coin obligations, to pay them according to the agreement.

Such a declaration of our purpose, even without the free coinage of silver, would at once cause every holder of our obligations to become as active, firm, and strong in lifting silver into legal and commercial parity with gold as they have been energetic, unjust, and malevolent in decrying this money of the Constitution and of the people. Then "the stone which the builders rejected" would be lifted on their willing shoulders and set in its high place as "the chief stone of the corner."

We have another power that our Supreme Court has affirmed in cases that have arisen on the reciprocity clauses of the McKinley tariff law, which, if it was exerted, would not only lift silver to par with gold here and in Europe, but it would speedily cause New York to take the place of London as the commercial clearing-house of the world. A discrimination in our tariff laws by which we would give a drawback or remission of, say, 10 per cent of the duties on imports in favor of all countries that admit silver to coinage at their mints on equal terms with gold, or that extend the privilege of free coinage to silver bullion the product of our mines, would draw the trade of all silver-using peoples to our ports, and they number nearly two-thirds of the population of the world.

But such a result would not be agreeable to the Rothschilds, the Seligmans, or the Belmonts, and that is quite enough to deter any modern Democrat or Republican from attempting so bold a scheme. An amendment to this effect on the tariff bill, whose low state is now giving such deep concern to the doctors and the hospital nurses of the Republican caucus, would bring it forth in such strength and beauty that the American people would embrace it with fond affection.

But, I must turn away from these flattering hopes. Congress, as it is now constituted, has not the power to assert the rights or wishes of the people against the veto power of the President, who has never intimated a truce, even, in his campaign for the British gold policy. It is our duty to omit no effort to record the voice of our people, whatever may be the opposition, or the cost of the sacrifice, and to turn again to them for support.

It may be that, in the Republican or Democratic parliaments of politicians that are to meet very soon, the voice of the people may be heard pleading at least for release from the thraldom of the endless chain invented and wrought by the Senator from Ohio, and one of these parliaments may give attention to their demands. Failing in this, the people will stretch their mighty limbs for a march to deliverance, before which European syndicates and their American agents will fly into outer darkness, where they belong.

Mr. BUTLER. I think it is too late to proceed further to-day with the discussion of the bill which is now before us, but with the permission of the Senate I should like to take the floor now with a view of addressing the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from New Hampshire kindly allow me to ask unanimous consent to pass a little bill for my colleague, who is away, he having been called out of the city?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will yield if it leads to no debate.

Mr. HILL. I think it will not.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; I yield.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAMER MIAMI.

Mr. HILL. Without displacing the pending bill or interfering with the right to the floor of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up the bill (S. 628) to provide an American register for the steamer Miami.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from New York whether the Committee on Commerce have approved the bill.

Mr. HILL. They have reported it unanimously.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HILL. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire whether it is not advisable to have an executive session. There is one postmaster that a member of the Senate has telegraphed here he would like to have confirmed.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not in order, let me remind the Senator from New York, to make such allusions in open session. There are reasons why it is desirable that the Senate shall adjourn at this time. Unless the case is one which will not admit of delay, I decline to yield.

Mr. HILL. It is the case of a Democrat. He is very anxious, but I suppose not quite so anxious as our Republican friends, and therefore we shall have to yield to the caucus.

Mr. CHANDLER. We had thought at one time we should soon welcome the Senator from New York to that caucus; but the case is hopeless now.

Mr. HILL. I am inclined to agree with the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLANCHARD in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 14, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. H. M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

ARMENIAN SUFFERERS.

Mr. MORSE. I desire permission to have read at the Clerk's desk a resolution which I have drawn on the subject of the Armenian outrages. Mr. Speaker, the blood of the dead and wounded, the starving, and the dying Armenians cries out to heaven and appeals to our common humanity throughout the wide, wide world. I am overwhelmed with letters, petitions, and memorials upon this subject from my constituents. I am sure it is high time that this Government should make some expression on this tremendous subject, upon this appalling crime of the nineteenth century.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that a resolution prepared by himself shall be read to the House.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. And be published in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. COX. Then I object.

Mr. MORSE. I do not ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks simply to have it read.

Mr. COX. In that case I think there is no objection.

There being no objection, the resolution of Mr. MORSE was read.

Mr. MORSE. At the suggestion of a number of members on this side, I now ask that the resolution as just read be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LOUD. I object.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 650) to incorporate the Post Graduate School of Medicine of the District of Columbia; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and are hereby, authorized to cause to be printed, indexed, and bound in cloth, in one volume, all of the acts, as they appear in the United States statutes heretofore passed by Congress, imposing duties on imports, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House.

HIGHWAYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. This day being set apart by the rules for the consideration of District business, I desire to call up the bill (S. 30) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," approved March 2, 1893.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 17 of the act approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. That said court in special term may certify to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia for decision there, in the first instance, any question of law that shall arise during any proceedings in said court in special term under this act. Any party aggrieved by the final order or decree of said court in special term fixing the amount of damages, or the assessment for benefits as to any parcel of land, may take an appeal to said court of appeals, and shall be entitled to a bill of exceptions as in civil cases triable by jury, and said court of appeals may affirm, reverse, or modify the order or decree appealed from: Provided, That said court of appeals shall consider only questions of law arising on such appeal. From a final judgment of said court in special term under this act, distributing the damages among contending claimants, any party aggrieved may in like manner take an appeal to the court of appeals, which court in such cases shall consider both questions of law and fact. Any appeal under this act to the court of appeals shall be taken within twenty days after the making of the final order or decree appealed from, and not afterwards, and shall be subject to the laws and rules of court regulating appeals to said court of appeals. Cases arising under this act shall have precedence in said court over all other cases, except criminal cases, and the decision of said court of appeals upon any question arising under this act shall be final: Provided, That from any judgment or order of said court of appeals involving any question as to the constitutionality of this act or of any part thereof, any party aggrieved may, within thirty days after such judgment or order shall be entered, appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Said court shall determine only the questions of constsitutionality involved in the case, and shall have power to make such special rules and regulations applying to appeals under this act as may be proper to bring such cases to a speedy hearing and determination."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the Senate on the 12th day of December last. It is important that it receive prompt action in this House. In order that the measure may be fully explained I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HULICK], who made the report in this case.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, it is very important that this bill amendatory of the act providing a permanent system of highways in the District of Columbia outside of the cities therein should be passed at once. It has already been passed by the Senate—on the 12th of December last. The object of this amendment is to declare expressly to what court appeals from proceedings under the original act of 1893 will lie. When that act was passed there was no court of appeals in the District of Columbia, and it was provided that the supreme court of the District, which holds general and special terms, should, at a special term therein provided, have jurisdiction of proceedings under the act. After a plat should be made of the outlying territory it was to be reported to the court in special term; that court would then call a jury to hear testimony and make report of its findings as to damages.

Pending that measure a bill was introduced in Congress creating within the District of Columbia a court of appeals. After the introduction of that bill and before its passage this act of March 2, 1893, was adopted, providing for an appeal from the supreme court of the District of Columbia sitting in special term to the same court sitting in general term. There is now a doubt in the minds of the court and members of the bar as to where appeals lie—whether to the District court in general term or to the court of appeals. The bill now before us for consideration expressly provides that such appeals shall lie to the court of appeals instead of the general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. Provision is also made for appeal from the appellate court of the District on constitutional questions to the Supreme Court of the United States. The original act provides that the judge sitting in special term may certify up any question of law or fact to the supreme court of the District of Columbia in general term. A doubt is raised whether such appeals should go to the District court in general term or to the court of appeals. This bill provides expressly that such questions shall go to the court of appeals. It is important that this amendment be adopted at once, because proceedings have been already begun before Mr. Justice Cox, sitting in special term, and a verdict was rendered a few days since upon which a judgment is not to be rendered until some action is taken by Congress upon this bill, so that parties litigant, or any other parties in interest, may know exactly to what court appeals will lie.

Mr. McMILLIN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HULICK. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. This bill, I understand the gentleman to say, provides for appeals in certain contingencies to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HULICK. Yes, sir; after the case has been passed upon by the court of appeals the question may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it provided that as a prerequisite of the appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States the case shall have the ordinary jurisdictional characteristics as to the amount of money involved, etc.?

Mr. HULICK. No, sir. The original act of 1893 providing for a general system of highways outside of the city of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, places no limit to the amount involved.

Mr. McMILLIN. What I wish to get at is, if you do not require a jurisdictional qualification as to the amount involved, and required under the present law, will not the effect be to fill the Supreme Court of the United States with petty lawsuits growing out of these transactions?

Mr. HULICK. I can not say as to that; possibly it may have that tendency. The statute of 1893, to which this bill is an amendment, has no provision as to the amount involved, but any party in interest can appeal from the special term to the general term.

Mr. McMILLIN. That I do not object to; but what I wish to ascertain is, whether under this provision as now reported there is not danger of crowding the Supreme Court with cases involving these small amounts.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The law is not changed in that respect.

Mr. HULICK. I think there is no danger of that. The court is authorized to hear all cases, however small the amount may be, which are carried up, and any party may carry up his case on appeal, in which he has an interest, without reference to the amount involved.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I understand this refers to street-opening cases?

Mr. HULICK. Exclusively.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. That is, cases arising under the law of eminent domain?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Under the law passed March 3, 1893.

Mr. HULICK. A special act.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. But is not that act a law under eminent domain?

Mr. HULICK. No, sir; a special act providing for street extension in the District of Columbia outside of the city of Washington.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. That is, for laying out streets, etc.?

Mr. HULICK. Yes, sir; and for assessing damages.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. How many appeals are allowed now under the existing law?

Mr. HULICK. Under the law of 1893 one appeal lies from the special term, in which the case is originally heard, to the general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. There now it ends. If, however, a question of constitutionality is involved under this amendment, when the officer shall attempt to enforce the judgment of the court of appeals a party in interest can go to the Supreme Court of the United States by an appeal alleging that the act or some part thereof is unconstitutional. Therefore, this amendment makes clear the right of the party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to determine the constitutionality of the law.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Where does the case go originally, before a special term of the District court?

Mr. HULICK. Before a judge sitting in special term of the supreme court of the District. Where the case is certified to a special term of the court, it takes jurisdiction and empanels a jury of seven residents of the District, a majority of whom may report a verdict of damages or on other matters affecting the rights of the parties. An appeal is then made to the court——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. To what court?

Mr. HULICK. To the court in general term, as the law now provides.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Then you have originally a trial by jury?

Mr. HULICK. Yes; by a jury of seven.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Then it goes to the court in general term?

Mr. HULICK. Yes, sir; under the act of 1893; and the object of this amendment is that the case shall not go on appeal to the supreme court of the District in general term, but to the court of appeals for the District.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. From the special term?

Mr. HULICK. Yes, sir; it will go from the special term to the appellate court.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Why should you do that?

Mr. HULICK. Because at the time of the passage of the act of 1893 there was no court of appeals in the District.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. But is there not a general term now?

Mr. HULICK. It does not go to the general term at all.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. But is there no general term?

Mr. HULICK. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Then why not appeal from the special term, affirming the finding of the jury, to the general term, instead of to another appellate court?

Mr. HULICK. For the reason that we have a court now provided expressly for appeal cases. In the case of an appeal from the court in special term to the court in general term the judge who heard the case in special term sits with the other two judges in general term and hears the case over again, a practice that does not commend itself, but now, as there is a court of appeals, it is doubtful whether that court would have jurisdiction or not under the act of 1893. But this amendment expressly provides that appeal shall go to the court of appeals. I know of no reason why it should not go there. It is an independent court.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. But why should there be an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. BABCOCK. That is only on constitutional questions.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does not that lie now?

Mr. HULICK. No, sir; it does not. A party in interest who is not satisfied with the verdict or judgment of the inferior court can not now go there and raise the constitutionality of the law, and that is now proposed to be done. It is a very grave question whether the original act of 1893 is constitutional.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. HULICK. Most certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. I had an apprehension that if there was no restriction on the right of appeal in these damage cases to the Supreme Court of the United States that we might load up the docket of that court with an unnecessary amount of litigation involving small amounts; but I find upon examining a copy of the bill which has been handed me that the appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States is provided for only to test the constitutionality of the act.

Mr. HULICK. That is all. The gentleman has properly apprehended it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is any other question——

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I should like to have the gentleman explain one part to me. The first proviso on page 2 is:

That said court of appeals shall consider only questions of law arising on such appeal.

In line 17 the court is authorized to consider both questions of law and of fact. I wish the gentleman to explain the difference between those provisions, and when one is applicable and when the other.

Mr. HULICK. The court of appeals is a special court, provided by the act of February, 1893, probably a few weeks later than the act of 1893 that provides for a general system of highways outside of the city. The proviso to which the gentleman refers is:

Provided, That said court of appeals shall consider only questions of law arising on such appeal. From a final judgment of said court in special term under this act, distributing the damages among contending claimants, any party aggrieved may in like manner take an appeal to the court of appeals, which court in such cases shall consider both questions of law and fact.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then, am I to understand that upon the general question there is no appeal as to questions of fact, but that when it comes to divide the proceeds between contending claimants there can be appeals in every direction?

Mr. HULICK. That is correct. In other words, the original act in regard to the assessment of damages is a matter to be determined in the special term of the supreme court of the District, and the parties in interest have no standing in that court, except under the order of the court to come in and determine the question of the amount of damages; but when they appeal to a higher court the question is to be determined between contending parties who may have a right to that distribution. If there is no contention between parties as to the ownership and the right that they have in the judgment that is entered in the special term, then they get an order for their money; but if there are two contending parties who claim the amount awarded by the court, that question can be taken on appeal to the court of appeals, and there the court can determine the right between parties which is not determined in the special term of the District court.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman one question. Why do you give no right of appeal on questions of fact, or the amount of damages?

Mr. HULICK. Well, the parties are all in court, before the court and jury in the special term.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes; but suppose the finding there is inadequate? Suppose the damages awarded are not sufficient, then is there to be no appeal? As I understand it, the judge at special term confirms the finding of the jury, and then the appeal lies only on questions of law. Is that right?

Mr. HULICK. No, sir; I think the act provides another appeal.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There is another appeal.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The general term, in proceedings under the law of eminent domain, can then set aside the amount of damage where it appears that the amount that has been allowed to A is less than the amount allowed to his adjoining neighbor.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. They can do that.

Mr. HULICK. I refer you to page 2, line 5, of the bill:

Any party aggrieved by the final order or decree of said court in special term fixilng the amount of damages, or the assessments for benefits as to any parcel of land, may take an appeal to said court of appeals, and shall be entitled to a bill of exceptions as in civil cases, triable by jury.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. And provided that said court of appeals shall consider only the question of law arising on said appeal if the question of damage award is not a question of law.

Mr. HULICK (reading):

From a final judgment of said court in special term under this act, distributing the damages among contending claimants, any party aggrieved may in like manner take an appeal to the court of appeals, which court in such cases shall consider both questions of law and fact.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. That is where the question is as to the amount to be distributed between the landlord and the tenant, but not as to the amount of the claim on the whole.

Mr. HULICK. I think the gentleman has stated it correctly.

The SPEAKER. If the House would like to hear the discussion gentlemen will please cease conversation. It is impossible for the House to hear.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULICK. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Is not this the same bill that the Judiciary Committee of the last House had before it and reported favorably?

Mr. HULICK. I am not advised upon that point, but I think not. I think this bill was prepared by the counsel representing the District since the beginning of the condemnation proceedings now in progress before Mr. Justice Cox. There is a hearing going on before the special term of the court. A verdict or report of the jury has been rendered, and this bill seeks to remove all doubt on the question of appeal.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This is simply a bill for the correction of the administration of appeals wherein the bill which fixed the process of litigation in this district was deficient?

Mr. HULICK. To repeat what I have already said——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Answer the question. Is not this simply a bill to correct an error that was made in the other bill?

Mr. HULICK. Not an error, but rather to remove a doubt existing under the act of 1893, which provides for appeal from the special term to the general term. This amendment expressly provides for appeal to the court of appeals.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I understand that.

Mr. HULICK. After the enactment of that act of 1893 there was a court of appeals provided for, and there is a doubt in the mind of the bar as to whether it is still governed by the act of 1893 or goes to the court of appeals. This act removes that doubt.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The court of appeals, which has been created since the law of 1893, does not provide the machinery for getting these cases into court?

Mr. HULICK. It did provide for appeals. There are two provisions authorizing an appeal under this act of 1893 from the special to the general term. This now expressly states that these cases under this act of 1893 shall be appealed to the court of appeals.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is practically the same bill that was before the Committee on the Judiciary in the last House. It was considered very fully by that committee, which heard different members of the bar of the District of Columbia upon the subject, and the committee reached the conclusion unanimously that this bill ought to pass. It was reported and put on the Calendar, but was never reached. It is practically the same proposition.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. HULICK. With pleasure.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman tell the House from what fund these judgments are to be paid?

Mr. HULICK. They are all to be paid from the funds of the District of Columbia. The United States in these cases does not pay a dollar.

Mr. HEPBURN. The United States does not pay anything?

Mr. HULICK. Not under the act of 1893, as I understand it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, will the gentleman tell us the estimated amount that under the act of 1893 will probably be paid for the extension of these streets?

Mr. HULICK. That would only be guesswork.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is believed to be in excess of $5,000,000.

Mr. HULICK. Much greater than that, I am advised.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then, ought not the whole act to be repealed rather than be tinkered with?

Mr. HULICK. That is a matter for the consideration of the gentleman and for the House. That question is not before the House at this time. There are proceedings of condemnation now pending, and the verdict is not yet opened. The court is waiting for action here.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is an expenditure of a quarter of a million dollars involved in one little section, is there not?

Mr. HULICK. Oh, yes; possibly more than that.

Mr. BRUMM. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. In the first place, how are the juries that assess these damages selected? Are they selected from a panel drawn annually as jurors are usually selected in civil cases in other courts?

Mr. HULICK. No, sir.

Mr. BRUMM. Then how are they selected?

Mr. HULICK. Section 10 of the original act provides that—

When any right of way is to be condemned under this act said court, in special term, shall cause a jury of seven jurors, disinterested men, not related to any person interested in the proceedings and not in the service or employment of the District of Columbia or of the United States, to be summoned by the marshal, and shall administer an oath or affirmation that they will, without favor or partiality to anyone, to the best of their judgment, determine such questions, etc.

Mr. BRUMM. That answers my question and shows that the jurors are to be summoned by the marshal.

Mr. HULICK. They are to be selected by the court and summoned by the marshal.

Mr. BRUMM. Yes; but the marshal selects them practically. Now, in the bill under consideration the proviso does not allow the court to have any jurisdiction over matters of fact, as, for instance, the amount of damages assessed, even though they may be assessed at ten times the proper amount. The jurors are selected by the marshal of the District, and the court has no jurisdiction to regulate the assessment, whether it is too high or too low; but afterwards, when there is a dispute between the parties who are to receive these damages, the court is permitted to have jurisdiction. Now, what sense is there in denying to the court jurisdiction when the damages are first assessed and then allowing the court jurisdiction when the men who are to receive the damages quarrel among themselves?

Mr. HULICK. The gentleman is discussing propositions that might properly arise if the question of the enactment of the original law or the question of its repeal were before the House.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, if the original bill is wrong, why not amend it by striking out this proviso and allow the court to have jurisdiction over the amount of damages as well as over questions of law? You allow the marshal to draw the jury, but an assessment made by those seven men can not be appealed from, no matter how excessive it may be, no matter how much it may have been "set up." Now, it has been said that in the District of Columbia there have been combinations formed in regard to these matters, and probably there has been more of such combining, and even more rascality, in the matter of assessments here than in any other place of which we have knowledge.

I think therefore that anything looking toward an investigation or inquiry into the amount of the damages assessed ought to be made as broad and liberal as possible.

Mr. HULICK. The enactment of this amendment will not interfere with action on the lines suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRUMM. No; but it ought to remedy these defects.

Mr. HULICK. Then you ought to prepare a bill expressly for that purpose.

Mr. BRUMM. No; that is not necessary. Let us strike out this proviso and let the court have jurisdiction both of the law and the facts. Your proviso is that the court of appeals shall consider only questions of law. Now, strike that out and let the court have jurisdiction over the facts as well as the law.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, if any other gentleman desires to ask questions in regard to this bill I shall be glad to answer them if I can. The measure is an important one which concerns the interests not only of the city, but of the people generally, and it is to be followed by a very large expenditure of money; but in view of the present investigation it is important to have some action of the House on this question now, and the adoption of the amendment proposed will not interfere in any way with other action hereafter upon the suggestions made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he makes this proposition: That, without regard to the propriety of the original act of 1893 or its provisions, we ought to proceed this morning to amend the existing statute because some particular case is in the hands of Judge Cox?

Mr. HULICK. I only mentioned that fact as a reason having some weight why this bill should be considered at this time, and if there are no valid objections to this amendment, I think we ought to consider this measure without delay. Of course, if there are other amendments that are important to be acted upon now, it is for the House to consider them.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the purpose of this bill is only to provide a system of appeals, to provide how they shall be taken and where they shall be taken.

Mr. HULICK. That is all.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It does not undertake to correct the act of 1893 in any other respect?

Mr. HULICK. No, sir; except that the act of 1893 does not provide for an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. This bill provides, in addition to what is contained in the original act, for an appeal from the special term to the court of appeals and from the court of appeals on constitutional questions to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The bill does not treat of any other subject than that of appeals?

Mr. HULICK. None whatever.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And the reason of asking the passage of this bill is that, under the act to which it is supplementary, it is doubtful to what court appeals should be taken, and this bill proposes to set that question at rest?

Mr. HULICK. That is it, precisely.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is all there is of it?

Mr. HULICK. I have already stated that that is all there is in it. The bill does not propose to modify or amend or enlarge any of the rights of the court or of the parties in interest in this investigation.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The bill does not undertake to correct or change the act of 1893 in any other respect?

Mr. HULICK. As I understand, it does not.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not see any objection whatever to the passage of the bill, and I call for a vote.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ASSESSMENT OF REAL ESTATE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call up the resolution (H. Res. 25) to extend the time for making assessments of real estate in the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the time fixed for the return of assessment by section 7 of the act of August 14, 1894, providing for an assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, extended to the first Monday in April, 1896, as to the real estate in the present limits of the city of Washington, and that the time for returning the assessment of real estate in that portion of said District outside the present limits of the city of Washington be, and the same is hereby, extended to the first Monday in September, 1896.

SEC. 2. That the time fixed by section 9 of said act for the meeting of the board of equalization and review be, and the same is hereby, postponed until the 1st day of September, 1896, so far as it refers to that portion of the District of Columbia outside the present limits of the city of Washington, and the said equalization and review shall be finally completed on or before the first Monday in November, 1896.

Sec. 3. That section 4 of the act entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1877, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to make the whole tax levied under the assessment of that portion of the District of Columbia outside the present limits of the city of Washington herein provided for, due and payable on the 1st day of May, 1897, instead of one-half on the 1st day of November, 1896, and one-half on the 1st day of May, 1897, as by existing law: Provided, That these amendments shall not extend beyond the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], who made the report in this case.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe this bill is on the Union Calendar, and if the point is made it will have to be considered in Committee of the Whole. I ask unanimous consent, however, that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does the bill appropriate any money?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It simply extends the time for assessing real estate in the District.

Mr. HEPBURN. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will make a brief statement, after which perhaps the gentleman from Iowa will not press his point. As I have just stated, the bill simply extends the time for completing the assessment of real estate in this District. The committee find that the act passed during the last Congress providing for this assessment does not allow sufficient time for the completion of the work. Therefore they have asked this slight extension. The measure is recommended by the Commissioners and unanimously concurred in by the committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw my objection.

There being no further objection, the House proceeded to consider the joint resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This bill is a very simple one. During the last Congress an act was passed providing for a new assessment of all real estate in this District. The Commissioners have found it impossible to complete that assessment within the time limited by the existing law, and they ask a brief extension of time, so that the work may be completed.

Mr. DOCKERY. An extension from what time to what time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. From January 1, 1896, until the first Monday of April, 1896.

Mr. TERRY. Does this bill in any way affect the old question between the District of Columbia and the street-railroad companies with regard to assessments and payment of taxes?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all.

Mr. HULL. Will not this bill postpone the collection of the taxes on property in the District of Columbia for a year?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir. The last section provides that the act of 1877 be amended—

So as to make the whole tax levied under the assessment of that portion of the District of Columbia outside the present limits of the city of Washington herein provided for due and payable on the 1st day of May, 1897, instead of one-half on the 1st day of November, 1896, and one-half on the 1st day of May, 1897, as by existing law.

Mr. HULL. But it postpones the time for the collection of taxes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It makes all taxes collectible as stated in that section.

Mr. HULL. Has the District government revenue enough to carry on its business in spite of this postponement?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir. The Commissioners are entirely satisfied with this bill.

Mr. HULL. Does not the presentation of such a bill as this emphasize the necessity of a general law for equalization of assessments, instead of having these applications brought here from time to time for a special assessment and equalization?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Possibly that idea may be emphasized by this bill, but it does not touch that question.

Mr. DOCKERY. This bill, as I understand, will not operate so as to require the Government of the United States to advance any money to the District of Columbia?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in drawing this bill as reported, under the direction of the committee, I was led into an error by reason of a clerical mistake in the letter sent to the chairman by the District Commissioners. That error consists in striking out in the seventh line of the bill the words "Monday in April, 1896," and inserting "day of May, 1897." The bill as read at the desk by the Clerk, in the form in which it was originally introduced, is entirely accurate. I therefore ask the passage of the bill in that form, and not with the amendment reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOPKINS). Then the gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill as read by the Clerk be substituted for the bill as reported from the committee?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That would possibly be the best way of disposing of the question.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HOPKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3537) making appropriation for payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I desire to raise the point of order against one of the provisions of this bill—that is, the last provision, which changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done on the second reading of the bill when the section is reached for consideration.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations, which has reported this bill, has very little to offer in explanation of its provisions. The bill practically appropriates the amounts required by the estimates of the Commissioner of Pensions. There are only a few material alterations or changes in the appropriations from the amounts estimated by him. The amount estimated by the Commissioner to pay the fees of examining surgeons was $800,000, but it appearing from the report that only $750,000 have been expended during the last fiscal year, the committee thought it advisable to reduce the amount to $750,000 which is the amount carried by this bill for that purpose. The amounts, for instance, for stationery and for fuel were reduced to some extent, but not in any particular degree.

The first amount carried by the bill, $140,000,000, is the same amount that was appropriated for the last year. The Commissioner of Pensions estimates that the pension roll has now about reached its maximum limit, and that there will be no further increases in the amounts necessary to pay pensions hereafter, but on the contrary, he estimates that there will be a decrease from now on. There has not yet, however, been a sufficiently perceptible decrease to authorize and justify the reduction of the amount of the appropriation of last year, and so the committee agreed on the amount which is provided for this year, which is, as I have said, just the amount estimated by the Commissioner of Pensions.

The committee have reported two amendments to the bill, which will be found on page 2. These amendments apply only to the act of June 27, 1890, and do not refer to any other of the several laws applicable to the granting of pensions.

The first amendment provides that where any application has been rejected under the act of 1890, and then subsequently a new application is filed in the case and the case prosecuted to a final adjudication and the pension allowed, that the date of the payment of the pension shall begin with the filing of the first application, provided that the disability for which the applicant is pensioned existed at that time. Under the present law, where a soldier, a soldier's widow, or his minor child files an application for a pension, and that claim is rejected and the case closed, and again in two or three years another application is filed and the pension is allowed—under the present law the applicant begins to draw pension from the date of the filing of the second application. Now, this amendment provides that if the applicant is pensioned for the same cause set forth in the original application, and the cause existed at that time and was overlooked and the case disallowed through the fault, perhaps, of his own testimony, or of the pension agent, or the Commissioner of Pensions, or through some of the Departments, that he should not suffer by reason of that, and therefore the pension is dated back to the date of the first application.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a single question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does it refer to any case of rejection except where the case is rejected on account of informality or some defect in the testimony? Suppose it is rejected on the merits of the case?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This amendment, I will say to the gentleman from Maine, has no reference to any rejection except the rejection or dismissal of the case because of some defect or informality.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is what I supposed—that it applied only to that particular class of cases.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is all. It does not apply to a case where there has been a full hearing of the case and the case is finally rejected because it was not deemed meritorious, but only to those cases where there is a substantial defect in the application or some informality in it. I may say that the committee considering this bill were pretty generally of opinion that the amendment ought to pass.

Mr. PICKLER. Suppose the second application is defective, then what?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, I should suppose that that same rule would apply until he files an application that is not defective; because until he does that, legally speaking, he files no application whatever, and until he files an application which is neither defective nor informal he is not to be prejudged by any mistake which may have been made by the clerk, or the scrivener, or the agent who wrote it for him.

Although I am not the Commissioner of Pensions, and the consideration of that act may be susceptible of very serious changes as you change Commissioners of Pensions, yet I will say that if I were the Commissioner of Pensions I should hold that the applicant was entitled to the benefit of this amendment no matter how many defective applications he made.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to know whether or not the gentleman, in his experience, has come across cases where the proof has apparently been all that was required to establish the case, and yet the application has been rejected and the intimation made to the pensioner to file a new application, when the pension has been immediately allowed under the new application, apparently for the purpose of cutting off the arrears. I should like to know if the gentleman has had any experience of that kind?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] that personally I have had no experience of that kind.

Mr. STEELE. Well, I have.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Because I have not had many cases; but I have heard and read of numerous instances of that kind. That, however, is a mere criticism of the Pension Commissioner.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. Whether in the case of officers' widows, where they have proved up their claims so that the examiners have reported in favor of them in the Pension Office, so that the field examiners have reported the claim as proven up to the satisfaction of those officers, and where the examiner having the case in charge has certified it up as being made, that some unknown influence has given this officer the direction to reject the claim, and then the applicant asked to file a claim under the law of June, 1890, because under the proof the amount of pension allowed will be $12, under that act, instead of $21 or $30, or whatever the sum might be under the old act? Has the gentleman had any experience of that kind?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Let me ask the gentleman if he means that the pension application rejected had been applied for under other laws than the act of June 27, 1890?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, this amendment would have no relation to any other act of Congress except the act of June 17, 1890. I have heard of cases such as the gentleman suggests, but as to their correctness or authenticity I am not able to say. The purpose of this amendment, however, Mr. Chairman, is to prevent any difficulty of that kind occurring again in cases where pensions are applied for under this particular act.

Mr. LACEY. Why not make it broad enough to apply to all acts as well? This act is certainly not one that we should favor so much as the old law, which refers to disabilities contracted during the war.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That might be very properly done. The fact is, however, that under the old laws, the act of 1862 and the various other early acts pertaining to pensions, there are very few applications now. All that were entitled to pensions under those old laws were pensioned some years ago, and nearly all the applications now pending, or that will be received hereafter, are under the act of June 27, 1890.

The next amendment, Mr. Chairman, is one that I think will meet with the approval of the House.

Mr. PICKLER. Before the gentleman leaves the other, knowing the construction given to pension acts over at the Pension Office, I think it would be as well to have this as definite as we can get it. This reads as follows:

Provided, * * * a new application shall have been or shall hereafter be filed, and a pension shall hereafter be allowed under such claim, such pension shall date from the time of filing the first application; Provided, That the evidence in the case shall show the disability to have existed at the time of filing such first application.

Now, if a disability is shown to exist the last time that was not alleged in the first application, is it the intention that the applicant shall be pensioned for a disability that did not appear in the first application at all?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. PICKLER. Does it not so read?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not so understand.

Mr. HAGER. If the disability existed it does.

Mr. PICKLER. The language is—

Provided, That the evidence in the case shall show the disability to have existed.

Now, suppose it did exist, and that is shown, but that it was not alleged in the first application?

Mr. HAGER. This covers that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not think, if the gentleman will allow me to say so, that a careful examination of this act would entitle the pensioner to the pension from the date of the first application——

Mr. PICKLER. We must make this very plain.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (continuing). When the first application did not disclose the disability for which he was pensioned.

During the fiscal year 1897, in expending this appropriation, whenever a claim for pension under the act of June 27, 1890, has been, or shall hereafter be, rejected, suspended, or dismissed because of any defect or informality in the application, and a new application shall have been, or shall hereafter be, filed, and a pension has been, or shall hereafter be, allowed in such claim, such pension shall date from the time of filing the first application, provided the evidence in the case shall show the disability to have existed, or to exist, at the time of filing such first application, anything in any law or ruling of the Department to the contrary notwithstanding.

When we reach the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule, for amendment, a word could be put in there to save all question of that. If the gentleman will bear it in mind, we will do so.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman a question in line of the question asked by the gentleman from South Dakota, whether he has made any estimate of the amount that will be necessary and the necessity for a large appropriation arising under this section. Have you made an estimate as to the amount of the allowances which will be made in the next fiscal year by reason of this legislation, of the amount of money that will be required to pay the pensions for the time intervening between the first and the last allowed pension?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The committee did take that into consideration, and it was not thought necessary by the committee to raise the amount beyond the estimate.

Mr. SAYERS. I will suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the report of the Commissioner of Pensions shows that about $138,000,000——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not quite $138,000,000.

Mr. SAYERS. Not quite $138,000,000 were expended during the last fiscal year in the payment of pensions. Without any special information as to what increased expenditures would be incurred on account of this new legislation, it was supposed that the difference between the expenditure of last year and $140,000,000 would meet this increased expenditure. Is not that correct?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is correct.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman from Texas state his basis for that supposition? In other words, was the Commissioner called upon to make an estimate before the committee?

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know. I am not a member of the subcommittee on the pension appropriation bill; but I believe the gentleman from Kansas, who had charge of the bill in subcommittee, can give you the information.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the interrogation, the committee desires to say that at the time these amendments were put in the proposed bill an inquiry was made of the Commissioner of Pensions as to the second amendment, by direction of the committee, and he replied in that connection that he was unable to make an estimate, and that he could not give any definite information as to what the effect of that would be. As to the first one no inquiry was made by the committee; and while I am on the floor answering that suggestion I wish also to attempt to answer the last inquiry of the gentleman from South Dakota.

The first section of this amendment is intended mainly to cover the character of cases which I will explain. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] made an inquiry a moment ago in regard to the experience of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I will say to him in reply that I have had frequent experiences of the character he names, where an application has been made for a pension and after pending for many months has been rejected. Under the law of 1890 the ruling of the Bureau has been that if no additional evidence was filed and no further steps taken to revive the application, after the expiration of ninety days the pensioner would be compelled to file another application in order to revive his claim. Then, when the time came that the Commissioner of Pensions allowed the pension, he dated it from the date of the last application, in that way depriving the pensioner of the advantages that he might have had if the disability existed at the time of the first application.

In reply to the gentleman from South Dakota, I will say that it was the purpose of the committee to make that section in spirit reach to this extent: That if the disability for which the pension was granted existed at the time of the first application the pension should date from that time; so that the pensioner, by this practice of the Department, should not be deprived of the advantages of his first application if the evidence showed the disability for which he was pensioned existed at the time of his first application. That was the intent and purpose of that provision, and if it does not cover the ground it should cover it. But you observe that it refers only to applications under the law of 1890. Comparatively few cases arise under the old law. Many of you are doubtless familiar with the fact that under the present rulings of the Department the former rulings of the administration of the Bureau by Commissioner Raum were reversed, and it was held under this latter ruling of the present Commissioner of Pensions that the law of 1890 was intended to reach only those incapacitated for manual labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support.

Commissioner Raum held that under that law it was not necessary that one should trace the disability to the service, and that when application was filed showing the disability, in the determination of the degree of disability he would follow the old law up to the extent of $12 a month. Under this recent ruling the first thing to be ascertained is whether the disability prevents the earning of a living by the applicant by manual labor. If it is determined that the disability does not interfere with his making a living by manual labor, that then the party applying should not be entitled to a pension. In other words, under the ruling of the Bureau at this time, if a man has lost an eye it is held that that does not interfere with his making a living by manual labor; if he has become deaf in one ear that that does not interfere with earning a living. Still it may be that in the pursuit of his vocation it may materially and perhaps absolutely deprive him of the power of earning a livelihood; and it was with a desire to cure these defects in the expenditure of this money that this provision was put in the bill.

Mr. HERMANN. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas, as he seems to have given special attention to this particular portion of the subject, and inasmuch as it will become a very important one as we proceed, whether he has ascertained from the Department the number of first applications which were rejected and which will necessarily come up for consideration in estimating for an appropriation?

Mr. BLUE. I have not, and neither has the committee.

Mr. HERMANN. So that you can not even approximate the amount of money that will be necessary to appropriate for this particular purpose?

Mr. BLUE. No, sir, I can not; but in that connection I will say that an examination of the report of the Commissioner will show that a board of revision has been created, and that under the investigation of that board and the law of 1890, as governed by the newly established rule, somewhere near 100,000 pensions were affected in one way or another, either by having been cut down or dropped or in some other way, but the committee should understand that this provision is to apply only temporarily during the expenditure of this appropriation.

Mr. HERMANN. In connection with a reference made by the gentleman to the discrimination between cases under the act of 1890 and cases under the old law, I will ask him whether he does not think that this section discriminates to a certain extent as against payments under the old law whose applications were rejected and subsequently reopened; in other words, does he not think that an application made under the old law should receive the same favorable consideration that he proposes to give to applications made under the act of June 27, 1890?

Mr. BLUE. In regard to that I will say that the committee felt some little delicacy in regard to amendments of this character, and desired to be as cautious as possible and to propose only those that they thought would be likely to meet the general approval of the House. So far as the other cases are concerned, as I said a moment ago, they are comparatively few in number, but if the House sees fit to amend the bill so as to include all of them, I do not know that the committee will have any objection.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to one or two matters, and I should like to have about ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the time for offering amendments has not yet arrived.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not want to offer an amendment, but simply to discuss the general subject somewhat with a view to an amendment to be offered later.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Full opportunity for offering amendments will be afforded later, and I shall be glad to give the gentleman plenty of time, but we desire now to go on in the regular way.

Mr. GIBSON. Very well. I prefer to speak in my own time.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that the real reason for the amendment suggested by the committee arises from two constructions which have been placed by the Pension Bureau on the law of 1890. In the first place, the Bureau holds that the only date permissible under that law for the commencement of a pension is the date of the application; and secondly, that the written application must be filed setting up the specific disability under which the claim is made. It therefore follows that if the application does not specify the actual disability that is shown by the testimony, that application must be rejected and a new one filed, and the pension must begin from the time of the second application. Now, it is proposed to correct that by allowing the applicant to file an amended application setting forth clearly his disability and allowing the pension to run from the date of the first application, provided the testimony shows that the disability did actually exist.

Mr. SAYERS. The provision incorporated in the bill is intended, is it not, to cover a practice which already exists in the Department?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Unquestionably. In concluding the observation I was making, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the law originally was that a pension should be granted if it appeared that the claimant suffered from any disability, either physical or mental, not the result of his own vicious habits. I submit the proper construction of the law would be to allow the granting of a pension without requiring the setting up of any specific disability, and in my view the amendment should go even further than is proposed by the committee of which I am a member. The amendment that should be made, I think, is that whenever a person files a written application stating in general terms that he is suffering from some disability, either physical or mental, which is not the result of his own vicious habits, and which interferes with his ability to obtain a living by manual labor, the pension should be granted; leaving it to the testimony to show the precise nature of the disability. However, it was to improve the methods of the Department and to meet some of the objections which are made by a technical Bureau adverse to the soldier that this particular amendment was recommended in the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. I would ask the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER], in view of what he said in reference to the action of the Bureau in this matter, whether the Bureau is not doing the very thing which this provision contemplates.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Oh, no!

Mr. SAYERS. I understood the gentleman to say just now that the Bureau in allowing a pension upon a second application dates it back to the first application.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Oh, no; it does not, except in one class of cases—where the disability which was informally set out in the first application is in the second set out in technical language, or where the disability is such as could readily have been taken for the disability originally set out. Only in that class of cases does the pension date back, under the present practice, to the date of the first application.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, the second amendment, and the only remaining one reported by the committee, has reference to the applications for pension made by widows of deceased soldiers. Under the act of 1890 a soldier's widow applying for a pension is obliged to prove to the satisfaction of the Pension Department that she is without other means of support than her daily labor. The committee thought this provision of the law should be modified, and has reported an amendment—not in the sense of an addition to the existing law, but directing how the money which we appropriate shall be distributed. This amendment provides that—

> During the fiscal year 1897, in expending this appropriation, it shall not be necessary for a widow, in establishing her claim to a pension under the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, to prove that she is without other means of support than her daily labor: Provided, That before she shall be entitled to a pension under the provisions of said law she shall prove that her net income does not exceed $500 per annum.

Under the law as it now exists a soldier's widow can not get a pension without first proving that she is a pauper. She must show that she has no means of support whatever except her daily labor. If her husband left her two or three thousand dollars, or a little house and lot which merely affords a shelter for herself and her children, she is barred from obtaining a pension, although her husband was not under any such bar in reference to his application.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether the Department has not required in every case that the soldier's widow when applying for a pension shall show that she was living with the soldier in lawful wedlock—that she was his lawful wife? In other words, has it not been necessary under the practice of the Department for a widow to show, in the first place, that she was lawfully married to the soldier; that she was living with him as his wife; that she raised his children, and that at his death she was lawfully his widow? And after all this proof, has it not been necessary for her to show that she never had a divorce?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes; and that she never had an opportunity to marry another man! [Laughter.] The Pension Department has required proof of a great many absurd and ridiculous things; and none more ridiculous than in this particular. I must say, however, in justice to the present administration of the Pension Office, that the ground for criticism of this kind has existed for some time. The construction of the pension laws as adopted by every Pension Commissioner has been narrow. It is the most ridiculous thing in the world to call upon an old gray-headed woman with married sons and daughters, who, with her, belong to church, to prove that she was not living with the father of those children without being formally married to him. That is simply one of the many ridiculous and absurd things which are required to be proved. Another is this requirement that the widow shall show she has no visible means of support. If she is supported by a son or a daughter or by the church—no matter how her support may be derived, if she has any visible means of support, that fact is made a pretext for declining to grant her a pension. The provision inserted by the committee, which we deem a reasonable one, is that it shall not be necessary for a soldier's widow to prove that she has no means of support except her daily labor, unless she has an income exceeding $500 a year. I do not think they ought to limit it to that. There are some women, the wives of soldiers who served in the late war, who, if their husbands died, would find it a very inconvenient thing to attempt to live on $500 a year. It all grows out of the way the pension is regarded.

In the examination of Judge Lochren, the present Commissioner of Pensions, he stated in his testimony before the Committee on Appropriations that the pension is a mere charity or gratuity granted by the State at its own will—granted by the sovereign power—to be withheld at will or withdrawn at any time it shall see fit and proper. I believe the soldiers who took part in the late war have regarded it otherwise. I believe a pension is a sacred right—a vested right, belonging to the soldier and growing out of a contract for which due and valuable consideration passed to the Government of the United States years ago, and that it is not a mere charity or gratuity to be doled out and repealed, withdrawn or changed, to suit the will or legal construction which is passed upon it by any administration or party in charge of that Department of the Government. It belongs to him as a matter of right, and he is as much entitled to it for his present disability as a member of Congress is to his salary. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the committee deemed it best not to modify this law so radically as to startle anyone, but to at least give the widow of the soldier an opportunity to secure a pension after proving her right to it without the necessity of proving that she was a pauper. The examination of the testimony that will be found accompanying the report of the committee shows that there were 104,000 cases—and I make this statement in response to some questions which have been asked by some member, I do not now remember who—that there were 104,000 cases considered during the last year with a view to changing the pensions they are now receiving. My colleague on the committee [Mr. BLUE] spoke of the difference in the construction of the act of 1890.

You all remember that the act of 1890 was passed during the late Administration preceding the present one. That was a law which added a great many cases to the pension roll. The intention of the law was to pension every disabled soldier without regard to the origin of the disability. Stated in as few words and as concisely as I can state it, the purpose and intent of the law was to pension every soldier without regard to the origin of the disability if it was lawful. The first construction of the act was given to it when it came before General Raum, then the Commissioner of Pensions. He decided, in his construction of the act, and issued a general order to that effect, that in considering the rate of pension to be allowed in those cases under the act of 1890 the rate of disability should be considered the same as if it was of service origin. In other words, a soldier applying for a pension should have it adjudicated precisely as if the disability for which he applied was incurred during the war—that is, up to the extent of $12 per month—the law limiting it to that.

For instance, if a man lost a leg or an arm in a thrashing machine in the last five years, and applied for a pension under the disability act, and had it allowed, it would give him a rating up to $12 a month, or the rate he would have gotten had he lost a limb in battle up to that extent, because, of course, under the act it could not go beyond that sum. The intention of the law, in other words, was to allow a pension to the fullest extent warranted by the law. The law says the time has come in the history of this war, and the history since the war, when every disabled soldier shall draw a pension without it being necessary for him to prove that he incurred the disability in the war. Mr. Lochren, when he came into the office of Commissioner of Pensions, and Mr. Bussey and Mr. Smith—Mr. Bussey, I believe, having retained his position, and being Assistant Secretary of the Interior under a former Administration—decided that there was an error made in the construction of the act, and therefore they reconsidered something like 104,000 cases——

Mr. NORTHWAY. If the gentleman will allow me to make a correction, they reviewed all of the cases under the law of 1890—104,000 last year and 108,000 previously.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have said that this was in the last fiscal year, when 104,160 cases were considered. In 4,149 cases the pensioners were dropped from the roll as not disabled for manual labor in any pensionable degree. For instance, if a man was pensioned for the loss of a leg or an arm under the act of 1890, he was dropped from the roll because he was not disabled from the performance of manual labor to any pensionable degree according to this ruling.

In 2,279 cases the pensioners were dropped as not entitled under said act of June 27, 1890, and were restored and previous pensions granted them under the general law, which I will venture to say in every instance was a smaller pension than they were receiving under the act of 1890.

Mr. MORSE. I guess that is true.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not know that anybody testified to that, but I will venture that assertion without any fear of serious contradiction.

In 20,359 cases the rate of pension was reduced, and in 77,373 cases in which further evidence was filed the pensions were continued at the former rate. The difference in the construction between these two laws by these two Commissioners of Pensions has made all this trouble in reference to pensions of which we have heard so much during the last three years.

Therefore I say it all grows out of the definition to be placed upon a pension. We hold, or at least I hold, and I believe a majority of this side of the House hold, that a pension is the consummation of a contract; that it is something which belongs to the soldier as a matter of right, and that it should not be disturbed when once it has been allowed him, unless the most plain and apparent fraud is established by the verdict of a jury.

I have only, Mr. Chairman, to refer to the different amounts of money appropriated in former years, which I will do in a very brief way, and then leave the bill for such consideration as the committee may deem proper to give it.

In 1894 the total amount appropriated was $166,831,350. It has been reduced, therefore, something in the neighborhood of $25,000,000 up to the present time. If no laws are passed increasing the payment of pensions and adding to the pension roll, the next fiscal year—not the one for which we are now appropriating, but the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898—will, in my judgment, see this roll reduced to considerably below $140,000,000.

Provided, That before she shall be entitled to a pension under the provisions of said law she shall prove that her net income does not exceed $500 per annum.

Does that apply to widows of Mexican and Indian wars as well as to widows of the late war?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That only applies to widows applying under the act of 1890.

Mr. HARRISON. It makes a distinction between the widows of different classes of soldiers?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes; as I understand it, it only applies to widows applying for pensions under the act of 1890. As I understand it, the widows of soldiers of the Mexican war apply under a special law.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman regard the contract between the Government and the soldier as any different in the different wars?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not at all. I think it is the subject of a very proper amendment, if the gentleman desires to offer it.

Mr. BRUMM. The only difference is that the soldiers of the Mexican war are better provided for.

Mr. MOSES. I am opposesd to any pauper clauses; but at the same time the law requires Mexican soldiers, although of the average age of 75 or 80 years, to prove that they can not earn a livelihood by manual labor, and also that they are paupers, in order to receive $12 a month. Would you have any objection to doing away with that pauper clause in that act and to adding it to the amendment here?

Mr. BINGHAM. As I understand the law, the pension given to soldiers of the Mexican war is a service pension. All you have to prove is that the soldier served sixty days.

Mr. BRUMM. It is a service pension.

Mr. PICKLER. And in the Indian wars only thirty days' service.

Mr. MOSES. But under the act providing for soldiers of the war of 1812, which is a service pension, they receive $12 per month. The pensioners of the Revolutionary war receive $12 per month; and we have established the precedent of allowing $12 per month as a service pension. Yet these old men, survivors of the Mexican war, must prove that they are paupers, and although they are 80 years of age they must prove that they can not earn a livelihood by manual labor in order to receive $12 per month.

Mr. BRUMM. You are entirely mistaken.

Mr. MOSES. I am not mistaken.

Mr. BRUMM. They draw their pensions the moment they show they were in the service for sixty days.

Mr. MOSES. I know what I am speaking about. They draw $8 a month as a service pension; but they can not draw $12 per month unless they swear that they are paupers, and Southern men do not generally swear to any such thing.

Mr. GROUT. If I may have the attention of the gentleman, he is mistaken in saying that the regular service pension is $12 a month. The service pension is $8 a month.

Mr. MOSES. I say the service pension allowed to the survivors of the war of 1812, and all other wars except the Mexican war, is $12 a month.

Mr. GROUT. Eight dollars a month, as I understand it, is the usual service pension, and the Mexican soldiers receive $8 a month; but when they show they are dependent upon manual labor, then they can draw $12 a month.

Mr. MOSES. I understand that the amendment which we are considering is not to require these widows to prove that they are paupers; and I say, let us not require these old Mexican war soldiers to prove that they are paupers.

Mr. GROUT. We are not talking about the soldier; we are talking about the widows in this connection; and I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will not consent to any amendment whatever in that way.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The difference between the case of a widow under this law and the Mexican pensioner is that under this law the widow has to make proof that she is a pauper before she gets a pension, while the Mexican soldier gets his pension as a service pension.

Mr. MOSES. I want to do away altogether with this idea of pauperism. The State of Georgia gives more to Confederate pensioners than any other seven of the Confederate States. To the widow of any Southern soldier who was killed we give a pension, even if worth half a million, and I am opposed to all pauper laws in regard to pension legislation.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I am not sufficiently familiar with the provisions of the laws that my friend from Georgia referred to to answer the question, but I only want to say this, that we, who represent the survivors of this war, only want the same pension and the same privileges and the same immunities that have been granted to others in other wars heretofore.

Mr. MOSES. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state that the proposition I have made is one that was unanimously agreed to by the last Congress, without a dissenting voice.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me to ask him a question before he retires? How much does the State of Georgia give to its Confederate soldiers?

Mr. MOSES. About $800,000 per annum to soldiers and widows.

Mr. PICKLER. We give to Union soldiers in Georgia $483,569.98.

Mr. MOSES. Yes; they are all leaving your country and coming down there.

Mr. PICKLER. They are good citizens.

Mr. MOSES. That is right; and they are all turning Democrats when they come there.

Mr. PICKLER. There will never be a rebellion when you get them there.

Mr. LACEY. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to line 12 and line 14 of page 2. I am afraid from the manner in which that is drawn that a hostile construction might be put upon that amendment as you propose it, and it would be held to apply only to cases where, during the time that this appropriation was being expended, claims should not have been rejected. Now, let me suppose a case. A case is rejected in 1893. Afterwards, when the claimant has filed all the evidence, he is in the same condition in 1897 as in 1893; but because of a defect in filing the first claim, failing to assert, for instance, that the disability was not the result of vicious habits of the soldier, the original application was rejected altogether. Now, should there not be inserted, between the words "has been," the words "at any time," and in line 14, after the word "application," also the words "at any time"; so that if the application has been rejected before 1897, and before this appropriation in 1897 falls in, it would also cover all these cases?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The difficulty is that that would make it subject to the point of order that it is new legislation.

Mr. LACEY. If it is new legislation, why would not the same objection apply to the amendment you offer?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The committee thought it would not. The committee thought in the language in which this paragraph was drawn it would not be subject to that criticism.

Mr. LACEY. Nine cases out of ten that this amendment would be applied to, are cases where the rejection has been prior to the enactment of this limitation.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I fully agree with you, but for the fact that it will be subject to the point of order.

Mr. LACEY. If this is subject to the point of order, let us pass to the next paragraph. It also provides that during the fiscal year and the expenditure of this appropriation a certain law shall apply.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. What is to prevent the Commissioner of Pensions, in determining the cases of widows' pensions, from limiting the payment and allowance to the period covered by this appropriation?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. By that time we hope to have a Commissioner of Pensions who will not think of misconstruing the law. [Applause on the Republican side.] The force of public opinion will be such as to prevent anything of that kind again.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to offer the amendment I have suggested in lines 12 and 14 and to take the chances on the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. When the time comes we will be glad to give the gentleman an opportunity.

Mr. BLUE. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that when the time comes when this amendment can be offered the gentleman can offer the amendment for general legislation, and if the point of order is not made, let the matter then be determined.

Mr. LACEY. I remember that in the last Congress Mr. Hatch of Missouri, as chairman of the Committee of the Whole, overruled a much more important point of order than this would be, and I think we are rather more favorably situated in that respect now than we were then. [Laughter.]

Mr. ERDMAN (to Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE). How many widows' pensions will this affect?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I can not answer that question.

Mr. ERDMAN. Is not the number in the neighborhood of 100,000?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Does my colleague mean to say that there are 100,000 applications for widows' pensions not allowed?

Mr. ERDMAN. I speak of the number of applications made and not granted because the widows were not dependent.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, my colleague asks me as to the number of widows who will be affected by this amendment, which provides that it shall not be necessary to prove that they have no other means of support. I am unable to answer that question. I do not know how many cases this amendment will affect, but whether the number be 1 or 100,000, the amendment ought to pass. [Applause.] This country is in a pretty bad shape financially, I will admit; it could not be much worse; but the time has not yet come, and the prospects are that it will not come in the future, when we can not afford to pay the widows of the soldiers who put down the rebellion. [Applause.]

Mr. ERDMAN. Another question. Do you provide any appropriation for the payment of these additional pensions?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, sir. The answer to that question is found in the inquiry of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. The official reports show that nearly $138,000,000 of the amount appropriated for pensions for the last fiscal year was expended. The Commissioner of Pensions insists on $140,000,000 for the current year. We thought that if possible the $1,500,000 that would be left unexpended of the amount appropriated last year would perhaps cover any additional payments that might be required under the operation of this amendment.

Mr. ERDMAN. Then, if you are mistaken about that, your purpose is to trench upon the funds set aside for the pensions of the soldiers in order to provide for the widows?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not at all. If it should become necessary we will do what our friends on the other side have done repeatedly—provide for a deficiency; and there will be no soldier and no soldier's widow left unpaid when this fiscal year ends. [Applause.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] for twenty minutes.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment which I intend to offer at the proper time.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, what provision is there for time on the other side?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There is no arrangement as to time, but if there is anybody on the other side who desires to address the committee at this time, I do not suppose there will be any objection.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, are we not now in general debate on this pension bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. PICKLER. So that any member who gets the floor will be entitled to an hour.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. We are in general debate, and I think we had better run along in that way until we ascertain how many gentlemen desire to address the committee on this bill. I do not wish to enter into any arrangement as to time just now, but I do not think there will be any difficulty.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have an hour, though I probably shall not occupy it all.

Mr. DOVENER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] whether there is any division on this subject—whether there is any "other side"; and if so, which is "the other side"?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There may be some gentlemen who desire to speak in opposition to this amendment.

Mr. DOVENER. Well, I simply want to know who are "the other side," because I have taken for granted that we were all in favor of pensions.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have read the amendment which I have sent to the desk, so that it may be incorporated in my remarks, and then after the general debate I will at the proper time offer the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the conclusion of the present bill the following:

"Provided further, That during the fiscal year 1897 in expending this appropriation no pension shall be reduced, suspended, or dropped except for fraud in obtaining the pension, which fraud shall be established by the verdict of a jury of the United States circuit or district court of the circuit or district in which the pensioner resides, either by indictment or issue framed in the civil branch of the court, at the relation of the Attorney-General of the United States, of which the pensioner shall have notice and appear and plead as in other cases, except where title to said pension has ceased to exist under provisions of law. A certified copy of the indictment or issue, and the proceedings, verdict, and judgment, shall in all such cases be forwarded by the clerk of the court to the Commissioner of Pensions free of cost."

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. GRAFF. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I am not offering the amendment at this time. I have merely asked to have it read as a part of my remarks. Mr. Chairman, I have had this amendment read to this committee not for the purpose of precipitating discussion, but for the purpose of fulfilling one of the important pledges that I made to those constituents who supported me in my Congressional district at the election held last fall. It seems to me that as compared with measures calculated to enlarge and make more liberal the present pension laws, permitting those who are now seeking pensions to obtain them more readily, this measure is higher in importance, because it gives to those who are already honestly and honorably upon the rolls some security of remaining there. It is a matter of general importance and a subject of general discussion among the 900,000 widows and soldiers who are now upon the rolls. Nor is it necessarily unrepublican, Mr. Chairman, to put a rider upon an appropriation bill. A part of the history of the Republican party is connected with a rider which was placed upon an appropriation away back in antebellum times for the purpose of preventing the use of United States troops to aid lawless invaders in the Territory of Kansas who sought to force slavery upon that Territory. That case affords an instance of rider legislation which certainly can not be condemned and is entitled to much praise.

Grave conditions make excusable heroic remedies. This amendment has been carefully drafted along the very line of the two amendments which have been submitted by the Committee on Appropriations, and is no more subject to criticism as interfering with or changing or modifying existing law than the amendments affecting widows' pensions, and that providing that pensions shall date from the date of the original application. This amendment has been so drawn that by its terms it simply limits the conditions under which the appropriation shall be expended, and is confined in its effect to the fiscal year for which this appropriation is to be passed.

I am proud of the methods of the legislation of this House during this session, so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned. The anomalous condition caused by Democratic legislation and Democratic policy has thus far been met by emergency legislation. Emergency legislation as I believe and as I think the people of this country will feel, is not only excusable and defensible, but is indeed praiseworthy where there is a necessity for immediate action, and where the emergency legislation is commensurate with the needs of the hour.

We have passed thus far as emergency measures a bond bill and a tariff bill. These two measures were for the purpose of restoring confidence in commercial circles. I have now sent to the desk an emergency measure, the object of which is to restore confidence to 900,000 anxious but honest and honorable veterans upon the pension roll, who are apprehending—and not without good reason for their fears—an attack from an unseen source. The bond and tariff measures were passed because permanent legislation was impossible. This emergency policy operates, Mr. Chairman, very much like a porous plaster. It is administered by the Republican party at this time to the anatomy of the Democratic Administration to cure political ænemia. It is going to be a little painful to them, but we hope that the two emergency measures already passed will create a healthy circulation, although they may draw the dark red blood to a painful congestion at the point where the remedy is applied. While I did not approve the bond bill, and did approve the tariff measure, both were passed to restore and maintain the public credit, and it is hoped they will have that effect if they become laws.

The amendment I present is to restore and maintain the national honor and fulfill our sacred obligations.

It is a well-known fundamental principle of law in all courts that a final judgment can not be set aside except for fraud. That principle obtains in every tribunal having judicial powers. Not only that, but the burden of proving such fraud rests not upon the person in whose favor the final adjudication is had, but upon the person who attacks it. This principle applies not only in law, but on the chancery side of our courts; it is operative in all forms of procedure, whether in common law or a code. And it is further a universal principle of law that when you seek to set aside a final adjudication by a charge of fraud, the inquiry does not go so far as to permit a retrial of the issues. The only point of inquiry to which the court will direct its attention is the question whether the particular fraud charged is established. Not only this, but the universal rule of pleading is that when a final judgment is attacked upon such a ground, a general charge of fraud is not sufficient to entitle the court to institute an inquiry, but the particular charges must be laid with specific certainty. These principles, fundamental in their nature, are every one of them violated under the mode of procedure adopted in the administration of the present Commissioner with respect to stopping pensions. These are rules which would govern a controversy over a Texas broncho worth $15. Is there any reason (and I appeal particularly to this side of the Chamber) why it shall be considered presumptuous for a man to demand the same rights concerning his pension that he has concerning all other property?

The whole trouble, as intimated by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] arises from the particular theory which may be adopted concerning pensions. One theory of construction is that a pension is a simple gratuity; the other is that it is the payment of an honest debt. I adopt the same construction as my friend from Pennsylvania—that a pension which has been granted is as solemn an obligation as a bond in writing. And the consideration is the reverse of the Shylock bond. The obligation there was to render the pound of flesh. In this bond the conditions are reversed: the consideration is the past relinquishment of flesh and blood and life and health. [Applause.]

When a party called upon to construe pension laws takes the position which I am just advised the present Commissioner took, that a pension is simply a gratuity which the Government has voluntarily offered to the recipient, the irresistible ground for him to take to be in harmony with that position would be that a strict construction would follow as against the recipient. But if the opposite theory is taken, that a pension is a vested right, then the irresistible conclusion follows that such a construction of the law should be adopted as to facilitate, not to prevent, the payment of the honest debt which the Government owes.

The Commissioner of Pensions, while he has treated me personally with the greatest of courtesy, and while I would not personally attack him, possesses too much judicial power for any executive officer. There is not a single tribunal in the United States having nisi prius powers that has as sweeping a jurisdiction, deals with as many people and as important interests, as the man who sits at the head of the Pension Bureau. I say, whether the Commissioner of Pensions was inimical to pensions or not, that it is unfair to place in the hands of any man an arbitrary right or power to pass upon such important cases, especially after the pensioner has applied, produced his evidence, and obtained a final adjudication of his claim on the merits of the case so presented. There the case ought to rest.

As an instance I have but to refer, Mr. Chairman, to the notification that is sent out to the pensioner when information is given that an inquiry is to be instituted in his case. There is nothing in the law at present which prevents the Commissioner of Pensions from putting a pensioner to the trouble and expense of an inquiry on his own arbitrary and unreasonable decision. No man ought to be driven to the necessity of a retrial or a rehearing of his case or the anxiety of again going over these old rights and reproducing evidence unless there is something substantial that has come up which justifies the necessity for such a reinvestigation. In that investigation every member here knows that no fair notice is given to the pensioner, who is simply told that his pension will be dropped unless he furnishes testimony to the contrary within sixty or ninety days. All of God's mercy can not sweeten a heart which has no outlet, but I have been endeavoring—I say this especially to my friends on this side of the House—to meet this question not from the standpoint of generosity or patriotism, but to measure it by the cold but just rules of the law.

Here is a man who is put upon an inquiry concerning a vested right simply by the arbitrary notice of an official that his pension is to be dropped unless additional testimony is offered within a limited time; and yet, contrary to all rules of pleading, the Commissioner is not bound to put into the notification the point on which he desires this investigation or on which investigation what additional testimony is wanted. The Commissioner is not even compelled to comply with a requirement that would be necessary in a court of the most inferior jurisdiction of the land and concerning the smallest amount. Not only that, but he is called on to produce testimony within sixty days to rebut what? He knows not. What kind of a trial would a man think he would be subjected to were he required, by any known rules of procedure, to rebut testimony of which he was absolutely ignorant?

Even the members of Congress here, who enjoy privileges which no one else enjoys over in that Pension Office, go there and are assured blandly that they have a right to examine papers; but many of us have gone there to examine papers and found them in the hands of the Commissioner on the opposite side of the desk, and received our information filtered through his construction of what they contained. If, then, a member of Congress, who has the privilege, which I am now exercising, of protesting against this policy in the Halls of Congress, can obtain no better treatment than that, what can the poor pensioner, who is a thousand miles from the administration of the office, obtain in the way of information as to the testimony which he is called upon to rebut? Not only that, but the present Commissioner was called on by myself and by other members on this floor, whom I have heard talk of it, to be allowed to inspect a report made by a medical board concerning the standing, rating, or nonrating of a pensioner who had applied, and we were told we could receive the information, but it was upon the strict limitation that we were upon our honor not to reveal the contents of the verdict of that medical body to the pensioner, the only man who was interested in it! Measured by the strict rules of law, would you consider your rights safe if you had to go to the judge, or, still worse, to the attorney on the other side, for the purpose of obtaining the evidence to be used in court on which your rights were to rest, and receiving not only the construction that he chooses to put upon it, but limiting that knowledge to your own bosom and not being permitted to recite it to your client?

Mr. Chairman, if there is any one principle which is embodied in the constitution of all the States in the Union it is that all the private citizens of the State have an unlimited right to view all public records, and that is supplemented by the still further and undisputed doctrine that every litigant has a right to view all pleadings, evidence, depositions, and other documents submitted in support of the testimony on the opposite side of the case. There is another legal principle violated by the present policy. Suppose you were bound to submit important rights and the determination of a case, when you are not only not permitted to know what the testimony of the other side is, but on testimony given by witnesses whose names you were not permitted to know and whom you have no privilege and opportunity of cross-examining.

The right of cross-examination obtains in the giving of testimony in all courts, whether civil or criminal, whether the testimony is taken in open court or by deposition. The animus of the witness is thus obtained, as well as the reasonableness of his story, his means of knowledge, and all the other valuable details which are elicited by a cross-examination in the interest of truth.

The time of Mr. GRAFF having expired, by unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. PAYNE, it was extended fifteen minutes.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, there need be no fear on the part of the members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that this emergency proposition will in any way interfere with the passage of a permanent law containing similar provisions.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. PICKLER. I want to say to the gentleman that I think he will find that every member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions is in favor of any proposed pension legislation on any bill where it can be enacted.

Mr. GRAFF. I believe that, and I want to say to my friend the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], that in private conversation with him before the introduction of this amendment he gave his hearty indorsement to its passage.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there can be no difference of opinion in regard to the propositions thus far laid down. I desire to occupy the time of the House concerning the wisdom of the remedy by a reference to the United States court. It may be said in reply that the district attorneys in the various Federal courts have the power to institute wholesale charges against pensioners. What limitation is there on the Commissioner at the present time to prevent his instituting the same sort of a wholesale charge, covered by the cloak of secrecy and without that measure of responsibility which follows upon an open, daylight investigation which the district attorney would incur for improper or unwise action? It is well known that the judicial powers are more safely confided to those departments of the Government which are peculiarly judicial in their functions than to any administrative officer under the name of discretion.

A certain amount of discretion must be necessarily allowed every administrative officer, but this goes a great way beyond any reasonable definition of that word. The practical effect of this amendment, if ingrafted upon this bill, would place upon the district attorney in each of the districts the burden of responsibility, if he did not take the precaution, as every wise and able prosecutor takes it, to make a preliminary examination of his case before he files it in the court. It would be necessary even if he did not want to do it. He would have to make an investigation into the facts in order to legally draw his information or indictment. He would have to draw it with a great deal more legal certainty than this order of notification. He would have to establish fraud under all those well-founded principles of law to which I have adverted.

Those of us who are lawyers of any experience in Federal courts know that while the Federal courts are under the law bound to adopt the procedure under the laws of the State in which the district is situated, yet on account of their independent position they adopt that flexible construction of those laws of procedure which make the Federal courts at once a terror to the guilty and the security of the innocent. If I were an innocent man under indictment for an alleged crime there is no court in the land where I would more gladly submit my rights than in a Federal court properly organized. It is well known that the judges who sit upon the bench are divested of partisan interest and bias as much as any man on the sod. It is a well-known fact among lawyers that when a prejudiced man, filled with partisanship, is chosen to go upon the bench he leaves behind him, in a way that is surprising to his former associates, that partisan bias which has been a part of the warp and woof of his character before.

Remember that the provisions of this law do not add a dollar to the expenditures of this Government. They do not make the necessary appropriation a cent larger. This law can not be called extravagant, because it calls for the appropriation of no new money. It simply demands the security of those who are already drawing pensions.

I do not make the appeal from a partisan standpoint. I would place the veterans who are honestly upon the roll above the reach of the criticism and whim of either the Republican or the Democratic party. I will say, however, with regard to the Democratic policy of writing letters to Democratic postmasters throughout the United States for the purpose of finding out if a witness who has testified in favor of a pensioner is disreputable and thus affecting the rejection of the testimony upon the report, either sworn to or otherwise, by the postmaster away out in the West, or away from the capital, that that policy is infamous.

I think that witnesses who, under the cover of secrecy which they invite, stab a neighbor by condemning and vilifying the character of a witness who has furnished testimony in favor of a pensioner—that the fact that they seek the protection of the Commissioner by having their letters withdrawn from the files, so that there can be no examination, shows that those fellows ought to have somebody to vouch for them. As to the general policy of this Administration toward pensions, as to the proposition that this Administration has not treated the soldiers fairly in reference to their application for pensions, I might enter a plea of res judicata to that.

There was a trial of that issue, among other issues, in 1894, and we are now entering into the fruition of that verdict; and we will complete it in 1897. [Applause on the Republican side.] It seems that this hanging up of pension claims is a part of the general policy of the Democracy, not so much that they are against the soldier as they are against any sort of commendable action. They seem to have a sort of conception that the noblest sentiment in man is niggardliness instead of action and achievement. It seems that they prefer timid inaction to courage, because courage carries with it responsibility. They hesitate to meet the needs of a great nation, because they must needs make appropriations. They leave our rivers and harbors unimproved and unprotected; they do not inaugurate an active policy of internal improvements; they meet none of the great possibilities of a growing Republic, because they must appropriate money with which to do it.

I want to refer gentlemen on the other side to a book of rules which needs no amendment. I commend to them, not only as their guide in this House, but outside, that rule wherein the doctrine pertaining to stewardship is correctly given in the parable of the talents, wherein the Lord gave unto one of his agents, who was a Democrat, only 1 talent, and he gave to a Republican 10 talents. [Laughter.] The Democrat, remembering his Democratic policy and notions, "was afraid and went and hid the talent in the earth." The Republican, with the 10 talents, went out and made other 10 talents, and when they came back to report the man with the 1 talent said, "I knew thee that thou art a hard man," which, in effect, is the position of the Democratic party toward the people, saying, "I know that you are narrow enough to be deceived by such so-called economical policies"; "I knew thee that thou art a hard man," and therefore "I hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine." On the contrary, the Republican, who had the 10 talents, yielded up 20 to the Lord; and the Lord said unto him, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord." [Laughter.] And he said to the Democrat, with the little, measly, dried-up, rusty 1 talent, "Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath 10 talents; and cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." [Laughter and cry of "Amen!"] Now, the only Republican perplexity is what we shall do with this single rusty Democratic talent. We can manage the talents which are our own by original gift and honest acquirement. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, we have just heard from the gentleman from Illinois as to his views on this pension legislation. Now, in reference to the particular amendment which he advocates, it possibly is not worth while to waste a great deal of time, as it is so clearly subject to the point of order which I shall raise against it. I for one do not believe that the Lord would ever favor taking away an executive or semiadministrative power that has reposed in the Commissioner of Pensions from time immemorial, that is, so far as the history of this country is concerned, and clogging the calendars of the United States district courts and the United States circuit courts with thousands and hundreds of thousands of pension claims.

I shall raise, subsequently, upon the second reading, a point of order against that provision changing existing law, which opens wide the door of the Treasury to a large class of widows; but it is perhaps well that at this stage of the debate I should define more in extenso my views on the existing pension laws and on the proposed pension legislation. It is not in many ways a pleasant duty. It is not agreeable entirely to make oneself a target for that misrepresentation which must ensue in the future. It is not entirely agreeable to find that I am the one speaker on this side of the House who shall probably raise his voice against the pernicious, iniquitous legislation which would seem to find favor so largely on the other side of this House. But, occupying as I do a position on the Committee on Appropriations, from the great State of New York and from the great city of New York, I should feel that I had been recreant to my duty if through any fear or dread of misrepresentation or invective against myself in the future, or of personal abuse, I should be voiceless on this emergent occasion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me one minute?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Is there any sentiment in the great State of New York or in the city of New York, which the gentleman claims to voice, to strike down a liberal construction of the pension laws of this country in behalf of the men who followed the flag in the late rebellion?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I do not know whether it is necessary for me to give the gentleman time to interrupt me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not hear him say that he would not allow an interruption. I asked him the question because he stated that he represented the great State of New York in part, and the city of New York in part, where I understood him to say that there was a sentiment against this kind of legislation. I think he said that. Certainly he did permit me to interrupt him, but I do not desire to be guilty of any discourtesy to him.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I am aware that probably any inhibition against interruptions would be of little avail; but I will say to the gentlemen from the other side that I believe there is a sentiment, not only among the Democrats in New York, but among the best Republicans, adverse to an enlargement of pension legislation and to the looting of the Treasury of the United States under pretenses which are not justified.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I beg the gentleman's pardon, but that is not the question I asked him.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I decline to yield.

Let me here, at the inception of my remarks, state that I am a friend of the soldier; that I believe that any man who fought in the civil war has positive rights which should be protected. The leader of one of my districts, and a gentleman most potent in according me the Congressional nomination, is a man who has a splendid war record, who was wounded severely in the civil war, and who now suffers day and night from wounds received on the battlefield. Another gentleman from the same district, who now represents it in the assembly at Albany, also served gallantly in the Union Army. I may add that I am personally in favor of pensions being accorded to all men who either contracted disease or received wound or injury in the line of service, either on the battlefield or in garrison duty or on the march. In other words, Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly in accord with all the pension legislation which had been enacted by the Congress of the United States until the dependent pension act of June 27, 1890.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Well, Mr. Chairman, either the gentleman is my interlocutor and proposes to carry on a discussion with me, or else I have a right to proceed without interruption.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have asked permission to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Very well, I will accord it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Oh, if the gentleman is so particular about it, I will not interrupt him.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, I am not particular; go on with your query. Mr. Chairman, if there were any logical inquiry which the gentleman desired to submit, I should be glad to answer it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Very well. Do I understand you to say that you are opposed to all pension legislation on the line of the act of 1890?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What I did say, and the gentleman's memory must be short if he can not remember it—what I did say was that I was in favor of all the pension legislation enacted by Congress up to the act of June 27, 1890. Now, I do not know, Mr. Chairman, that I shall discuss the provisions of that act. It has been passed and is on the statute book, and we are paying out $60,000,000 per annum under its provisions. Let that act remain on the statute book. I do not propose to attack it, but I do oppose any enlargement of the provisions of that act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I hope that my memory is not so short as the gentleman's patriotism. I desire to ask him this question: If a soldier has served his country faithfully for three years and is now utterly disabled from causes not traceable to service in the army, and is absolutely poverty-stricken, does the gentleman think that he ought to receive a pension at the hands of the Government which he saved, or that he ought to go to the poor-house?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I very much doubt whether there is any way in which the provisions of the dependent pension act of 1890, differing from all pension legislation in any other country in any part of the world, can be logically justified; but it has pleased the Congress of the United States to pass that act and it is manifest that it will never be repealed.

That act is on the statute book and let it stand. I do not attack the provisions of the existing law, but I do oppose enlarging the provisions of that law. Now, if the gentleman from Indiana desires to embarrass me any more, he can continue with his questions.

Mr. DOVENER. I would like to hear an answer to the question of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, without regard to these charming interruptions from the other side of the House, I wish to state an initial objection to the new legislation which is here proposed, On Saturday last, when we were considering the new rules (the rules of the Fifty-first Congress with certain amendments thereto), it was proposed that the second paragraph of Rule XXI should be amended, and when my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] proposed an amendment providing that a change in existing law should be in order upon an appropriation bill provided it tended to retrenchment or to the reduction of expenditures, a provision for which many strong arguments can be urged, when that proposition came up the able lawyer and distinguished Representative from the State of Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], who is a member of the Committee on Rules, laid down a broad and salutary principle. He said in substance:

It is no function of an appropriation committee to legislate. The simple function of that committee is to appropriate money. Let us legislate out in the open, in a manly way, in such a way that the Senate and the Executive shall have an opportunity to pass upon our legislation unembarrassed by any duty imposed upon them of approving or disapproving appropriations.

I do not know that I quote the gentleman's exact words, but I have stated the substance of them. And yet, Mr. Chairman, after that amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee has been voted down and the rule of the Fifty-first Congress has been acted upon favorably, and after the clear, lucid, vigorous statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been accepted by the House, the very first appropriation bill that comes here from one of the great Republican committees of this Congress contains a provision which, if adopted, would change existing law in a very salient and material point. Now, for one, I accept the rule laid down by the Committee on Rules of this House. I believe that no provision changing existing law should ever be incorporated in an appropriation bill. Why? Because such amendments, such riders, are always inserted for some purpose which should not find favor with legislators. If you desire to amend the pension laws, bring in, as you will in the future, your amended pension code. Bring in the bills which are now being considered in the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and let us then, if we are allowed to have a voice, fight the objectionable provisions of those bills in the open, in a manly way, as was suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Let me say a word or two about pension legislation. You gentlemen on the other side of the House are naturally cohesive, as you always are. You cling together on every question which is ever brought up for consideration before this House. You cling together in your money views, so that you are afraid to give us a gold bond, although many of you are sound-money men. In reference to pension legislation, we are placed naturally at a great disadvantage. You can not expect gentlemen who come here from the Southern districts, many of whom fought gallantly in the Confederate army, to rise and oppose any pension legislation, however objectionable and wrong in principle such legislation may be. And to some extent on this side of the House a reign of terror has obtained in the past in reference to the discussion of pension legislation. Gentlemen on this side have often feared that if they honestly opposed any objectionable provision of a pension bill they were certain to be misrepresented in their districts and to be attacked for their action. While you all admire physical courage, the courage which showed itself in the last war, you would gladly deprive a man of moral courage enough to stand up and tell his convictions on questions such as these.

Now, gentlemen on the other side of the House, you have no monopoly of patriotism. We on this side believe in the maintenance of the Union in its integrity quite as much as you have ever done, or as you do to-day. I, for one, say that I rejoice in the outcome of the civil war, that I rejoice that the Union was maintained in all its integrity, that I rejoice that the Constitution of 1787 is still a firm bond of union holding our forty-five States together. And I also rejoice that the great incidental benefit of the abolition of human slavery came to us as one of the outcomes of that struggle. And I tell you now once again that not one of you has any greater admiration for the soldier who fought in the Union ranks than I have. But because you believe in the men who fought the battles of the Union, is that any reason why the Treasury of the United States, in times such as these, should be looted, pillaged, and further depleted? For myself, I can say that I truly believe, had I been of years sufficiently mature when the first cannon boomed across the harbor of Charleston on the morning of April 12, 1861, I should have found my place among the enlisted men who took part in the civil war.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. On which side?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. On the side of those who fought to maintain the Union—on that side on which I presume the gentleman who has just interrupted me served so gallantly. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If I did not serve gallantly in the Union Army, I, at least, am not disposed to deny a just recompense to those who did.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I lost that remark.

It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that the true test in pension cases—it no longer obtains in this country—should be whether the injury or wound received or the disease contracted was received or contracted in the service and in the line of duty.

Let us glance for a moment at the pension legislation of the past. Let me call attention to the fact that in 1866 our pension roll amounted to only $13,000,000, and that thereafter it steadily increased until the arrears of pension act of 1879 gave it an enormous additional burden. Let me call attention to the facts that with a Treasury depleted as we have it to-day our pension roll is still enormous; that while it reached the highest mark in 1893—some $158,000,000—still it was last year about $140,000,000; and the burden for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, was as great as in any previous year, with the exception of two, the greater burden being in 1893, when it amounted to $158,000,000, and in 1892 when it amounted to $141,000,000.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman pardon a suggestion?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I suggest to the gentleman that it is hardly fair to call this appropriation a "burden" on the people, as the money goes back to the people. In that respect it is different from the ordinary charges of the Government.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The gentleman from Nebraska says that "the money goes back to the people." So, according to that theory, if you tax sixty-five, or sixty-six, or sixty-seven, or seventy million people for the benefit of a few thousand or a few hundred thousand, the taxed masses can not complain, because what is wrung from them goes back to a limited number of their fellow-citizens.

Let me remind you that in other countries where there have been great wars—in Russia, and in Germany, and in France—there are to-day but two classes of claims for pensions; one based on long service in the army, extending over a period of from ten to twenty-five years, and the other based on the fact that the disability was actually incurred in the line of duty.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me at this point a question which goes to the root of the matter?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes, if the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Is it not true that in France, Germany, and Russia soldiers are employed regularly and constantly, while in this country our Army was extemporized from the people? Is it not true, also, that in the countries just named, besides the amount paid directly for military service, the loss resulting from taking so many people out of civil employment is very much greater than the amount which we pay here in the way of pensions?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. That is the amount for their standing armies?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The amount paid for the standing army of any country in the world is not as great as that which we now pay in this country for pensions.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But the amount of loss of time and loss of services of men taken away from commercial or agricultural pursuits and put in the standing armies amounts to much more than their pay.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The same rule applies there as elsewhere. In time of war the standing armies of the great European countries are recruited by the introduction of fresh levies, and all of the rules which apply to the compensation of standing armies proper apply to all the additional levies incorporated into them under such circumstances.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a single question as to his contention on this question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I will allow the gentleman a question.

Mr. BINGHAM. I simply desired to ask the gentleman if his contention now is that Congress, by its pension legislation in the past, has marked that legislation by unwise action, and that the statutes now on the statute books should not be there? Is that the gentleman's contention?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir; it is not. I have stated, and will repeat now for the third or fourth time, that my contention is that the pension laws should not be further enlarged; that we should stop where we are, and that we should not go further in extending the provisions of the dependent-pension act of June 27, 1890. Of course you can go to any extent; you can introduce a bill and pass it to give a pension to every widow in the land, and that would be far more defensible than the amendment which is now under consideration.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman now yield to me for a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Well, if my time is not too limited. I would ask, Mr. Chairman, how much time I have?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty-three minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Then I will yield for a question only.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York this question: He states that he is not in favor of extending the pension laws to others than those who contracted disabilities in the service or in the line of duty——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No; I did not say that.

Mr. HARDY (continuing). Now, does not the gentleman from New York think that a man who left his home and remained with the Army from 1861 to 1865, who went out with the Army, endured all of its marches and privations, fought its battles, slept in the swamps, and returned home after five years of service—although he may not be able to prove by his comrades and commanding officers that he contracted the disability in the line of duty, is any less entitled to a pension than the man who is able to prove that he absolutely did his duty, and contracted the disability from which he suffers? [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I object to any gentleman making a speech in my time. I hope hereafter these attempts at stump speeches, in the form of interrogatories, will be prevented by the Chair. I recognize the fact that it is hard to keep gentlemen from making them—gentlemen who keep on reiterating the same statements.

I say this, sir, that I am in favor of the pension being given, as it is given under the general laws, to all men who contracted disease or received a wound or an injury in the service in the line of duty, and that in reference to these men I would gladly give them, for total disability, double the rates they are now receiving under the law. That is to say, if a man has lost the sight of both of his eyes, or has lost two arms, or two feet, that he should receive double the amount he now receives under the statute. In reference to the statute of 1890, that law is on the statute book, and let it there remain. I am not attacking the pensions granted by that law, but I do attack the amendments, such as those now before us, which have been brought up for consideration to-day; and before I proceed to discuss the amendment in reference to the enlargement of the rule as to widows, let me say a few words in reference to the amendment which was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois, who assumed to be so conversant with the views of the Lord on this pension matter. He offers an amendment by which it is proposed to take from the Commissioner of Pensions all power to suspend a pension for any other cause than fraud; and which goes further even than that by inserting a provision that when a pension is suspended for fraud, or rather when it is questioned for fraud, that there shall be no interlocutory power of suspension in the Commissioner, but that it shall be necessary for the Government to do one of two things—either to have an indictment brought in either the United States district or circuit court, or to bring a civil action, to test the validity of the claim, in the same courts.

Now, a provision such as that is absolutely indefensible in principle. I have, with a great deal of pleasure, heard it admitted to-day by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, a member of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], that he had no word to say against General Lochren or his administration of the Pension Bureau. And in all this debate, criticise as some of you may the administration of the Pension Bureau, there is not a gentleman upon either side who can lay his hands specifically upon any case of injustice or of unjust treatment by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No; I can not. It is impossible.

The CHAIRMAN. If any gentleman wishes to interrupt any member entitled to the floor after this, he must rise in his seat and address the Chair.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. We find that until 1890 no such proposition as that which is contained in the law of June 27 had ever found voice or advocacy. We find for the first time in the history of this country this law with a different test, brought forward before the National Legislature. What was the new test? Not that any disease should have been contracted in the service, not that any wounds should have been received upon the battlefield, but that in the process of time, as the years rolled on, when the man who fought for ninety days at any time subsequently should die of any disease, his widow, in every case, provided she was dependent for support on her daily labor, should be pensioned, and that in every case, if a man were incapable of earning his support by manual labor by reason of his mental or physical disability, he should then receive a pension.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir. Now, what was done in June, 1890? In the previous January the House of Representatives had passed an act in reference to dependent parents, and the law then passed by the House, that is, the new bill, had removed the necessity of the existence of dependence on the part of parents at the time of the death of the person through whom the claim was made. Then in the Senate bill certain propositions were made, and in the House other amendments were proposed. The House bill, if I mistake not, provided for a general service pension. That proposition found no favor in the Senate, and in conference it was rejected.

When we come to the consideration of the provision as to widows, which is found in the law of 1890, we see that it provides that in the case of any soldier who has died or who shall hereafter die leaving a widow without other means of support than her daily labor, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, be placed on the pension roll. Under that provision, which found favor in this House, and which was accepted by the Senate of the United States, she was obliged to demonstrate, as a condition precedent, her dependence upon her daily labor for support. Nothing was said in that debate in June, 1890, either in the Senate or in the House of Representatives, as to any proposed enlargement of that rule. It was conceded on both sides that the test of the widow's right to receive the money was to be the fact that she was dependent upon her daily labor for her support. And this I believe is the first time, sir, that it has ever been proposed to enlarge that requirement in the illogical and indefensible way now submitted to this House.

And let me say that under the law of 1890, as it stands, there are now over 91,000 widows pensioned, and that the proposed amendment would enlarge the number by at least 50,000 persons. The lowest estimate that I have heard is 25,000. But I believe that at least 50,000 would be added to the pension roll. Now let me ask you, if we start with the premise that $144 a year is enough for a widow, how can you defend the proposition to give another widow $644 in addition to her house or homestead?

Another objection lies in the peculiar phraseology of this amendment. It is that before she shall be entitled to a pension she shall prove that her net income does not exceed $500 per annum. Now what does that mean? What do the words "net income" import? We can find no solution of that question in other pension acts, in acts in pari materia, because there are no pension laws which contain any provision as to income, or from the language of which we can deduce any explanation of the term "net income." But if you turn to the provisions of the tariff act of 1894 and read section 28, you will find what "net income" means in the last statute referring to income, passed by the Congress of the United States. It means that from the income received by the individual there must first be deducted all the expenses of her profession, occupation, or business; in the second place, all the taxes she pays; and in the third place, all the interest on her existing indebtedness. So it is conceivable that a woman might have a gross income, aside from her house or homestead, of $10,000 a year, and yet under the income-tax act have a "net income" of less than $500. So you are virtually proposing in this amendment to give pensions to people who do not need them, and who are not entitled to the additional money coming from a pension, under any theory of equity or justice.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty minutes remaining.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have thus far addressed myself to the consideration of two amendments, one the extraordinary amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, and which was so indefensible when considered by our committee that it was hurled from the room. That is the proposition to take away from a Department of the Government a power which has existed in that Department and in the Commissioner of Pensions ever since a period anterior to the commencement of this century. You propose to do that while you are powerless to make any charge against the present incumbent of that office, whom I know to be a man of great ability, of the highest integrity of character, and a man who is in no degree adverse to the interests of the Union soldier or the pensioner; and before I conclude my remarks I shall call the attention of members of this House to two decisions of the Department of the Interior which show that there is every disposition on the part of every officer of this Administration to give the Union soldier his just rights.

And I say right here that in legislation such as that you now propose there can be but one of two objects. The first object is to capture the soldier vote. The first object is to deceive the soldier voters of this country, and to say that because Democrats do not believe in the introduction or inauguration of a carnival of pillage on the national Treasury they are, forsooth, for that reason, opposed to the interests of the Union soldier. It is, in other words, gentlemen, an argument to be used upon the stump; but I tell you that you can not deceive the American people any longer; and I tell you that I do not believe that any proposition to enlarge the pension roll finds favor with the conservative leaders of your party. Of course you can not all be controlled; you can not all be held back; and where you have a large number of soldier votes in your State you may rush forward with amendments and bills for purposes of future use upon the stump. That is the first reason for offering amendments such as this. That is the first reason for the introduction of the bill by my gallant friend from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], to whose eloquent remarks in reference to Union soldiers in the Army I have often listened with so much pleasure, and who the other day, in an argument on the question of having obituaries of members of this House discontinued, could not forbear the opportunity to make an allusion to the burial of a soldier in the Army in the time of the civil war.

The bill introduced by the gallant captain of the Third Iowa Cavalry is, if I mistake not, the same in substance as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. In other words, Commissioner Lochren does not decide every pension case in favor of the pensioner. It was argued that no proof of marriage should be necessary in a pension case; that is, that the law of evidence which obtains with reference to any claim involving property should be abrogated. I suppose, according to that theory, it ought to be necessary only for a woman to come forward and say, "I am the widow of John Smith," and that then the court, though she produce no record of her marriage anywhere in the world, should hold her claim proven merely because she alleges that she was the wife of a man who fought in the war.

Now, is that a sound view of law? Is that common sense, to inveigh against the pension laws because the ordinary rules of evidence which make it necessary to prove the initial facts which give jurisdiction are enforced by the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Not now; later. I do not now believe that even on your side of the House, when your calmer judgment comes to consider this question, you will be in favor of any measure of law designed to take from an officer acting under the Secretary of the Interior and under the President of the United States the power of either admitting or rejecting pensions. You can not logically give him the power to grant a pension certificate if you deprive him of the power to reject.

Let me say one word about the practical failure of the operation of any such amendment. You say that it must be necessary to indict a man. Well, we had a case in the State of New York of one pension agent who filed 8,831 fraudulent claims, which was tried, if I mistake not, in the city of my distinguished friend, the member from New York [Mr. DANIELS], and in the case of this man, W. Bowen Moore, it was shown that the physicians who signed the examination papers never took the trouble to see the claimants. It was shown that the people who signed the claims and petitions never appeared before the notaries, and all the various steps of the proving of the claims, or alleged proving of the claims, were tainted with fraud; and yet, in spite of the evidence, it took two or three years of prosecution, until several indictments had been quashed, before this man was finally convicted and sentenced to a term of eighteen months in the penitentiary. So I tell you that that case shows how difficult it would be to try these cases in a period shorter than one covered by ten or twenty years. That is, it would be impossible to try all the actions which might arise under any such system of procedure.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me call his attention to the fact that that was the case of a pension agent or attorney, and not the case of a pensioner, and therefore this amendment would not have any application to it?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. It was the case of a pension attorney; but the length of time which was required to convict that man shows how difficult it would be for the courts within any reasonable period of time to pass upon the heavy calendar of these cases which would arise.

Let me indicate one further objection to the amendment, because it applies to a bill which will be subsequently before this House, the bill introduced by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] taking away all power to suspend the pension in any case for collusion or illegality, and confining the power of suspension to cases where fraud exists. Now, fraud is not collusion, nor does the word "fraud" apply to any case where the illegality is patent upon the face of the papers. There are many cases to which existing provisions of law apply where there is no question of fraud, but where some disability depriving the claimant of the right to a pension has arisen since the granting of the original pension, yet in reference to all such cases—for instance, cases of remarriage or any case of disability of that nature arising subsequent to the granting of the pension—it is proposed to take away from the Commissioner the power to suspend.

As to the first amendment to this bill, the one which provides that in the case of a second application where it is shown by the evidence that the disability existed at the time of the first application, the pension shall be allowed to date back to the time of the original application, I shall raise no point of order, because I believe that it does not change existing law. It does not change the ruling made by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, the Hon. John M. Reynolds. I call the attention of this committee to the ruling of Mr. Reynolds in the case of Mr. Charles J. Bryant, on December 20, 1894, and I say that that case demonstrates in the clearest and most convincing manner the disposition on the part of this Administration to do full justice to Union soldiers claiming pensions. What is the rule laid down by Mr. Reynolds? It is, in the first place, that where it was difficult for the petitioner or claimant to understand the character or symptoms of the disease or disability under which he suffered, and where, pathologically considered or from the standpoint of the symptoms, the disease was liable to be mistaken for another—that in such cases, if the actual disease is shown to have existed at the time of the filing of the original application, the pension should date back to that time.

In that particular case the man, although suffering from locomotor ataxia, supposed that he was suffering from rheumatism, and the decision was that the pension should be made to commence from the date of filing the original application, it being shown to the Commissioner that the disability existed in point of fact at the time when the first application was made. The Assistant Secretary of the Interior went one step farther. He said that even in cases where the diseases are not similar in any way, and where the mistake on the part of the claimant or petitioner is not capable of explanation, still, even in such cases, when in point of fact another disability existed at the time of the filing of the original application, the grant of the pension, under the second application, may date back to the time of the original filing. Gentlemen, do you want any greater justice than that? Is not that all you can ask? Is it not all you do ask for in this first amendment? Therefore, I say this amendment does not change existing law because it is merely a reaffirmation of the pension law as construed by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior on the 20th day of December, 1894. For that reason I shall make no point of order against the first amendment.

I believe that in the course of some remarks made by one of the gentlemen on the other side who addressed the committee in defense of these amendments—if I mistake not it was the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE—some reference was made to the Raum decision—that is, to the order which was subsequently revoked, Order No. 164.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Let me say a few words in defense of the Department in revoking that order. What was the order made by Mr. Raum? It must be remembered that we have in our pension laws two great divisions or subdivisions. We have, first, those claimants to whom pensions are granted because the injury was received or the disease contracted while in the service and in the line of duty. The provisions of our pension laws in reference to that class of cases have my hearty approval and support. Then, apart from cases special in their nature, we have the second class of cases, where the granting of a pension depends on the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890.

What is the test in those cases? The test is incapacity to labor, incapacity to such an extent as to make the applicant unable to earn a support by manual labor. That is, there is a double test. In the first class of cases it is enough that the man shall have received the injury or shall have contracted the disease in the line of duty in the service. In the second class of cases there must be a disability and that disability must incapacitate the applicant from the performance of manual labor and must exist to such an extent as to render him unable to support himself. Now, what was order 164, made by Commissioner Raum? It was that in reference to all cases arising under the act of June 27, 1890, the same rule as to disability should apply as that which had been in force under the general pension law.

A case arose in this way: A man who was a private in an Indiana regiment and who served, I believe, from September, 1864, until June of the following year, alleged that he had incurred a disability in the line of duty in the service, owing to a sunstroke, for which he was entitled to a pension. He did not discover that he had incurred this disability until July, 1886, many years after the close of the war. That disability was a loss of hearing, and he claimed that he had incurred it in the war. The evidence against him was conclusive; that is, he was unable to prove that he had sustained any injury or contracted any disease in the war. The only disability found was a slight deafness in both ears, but he failed to show that he had been injured in any way during the war. He then filed an application under the act of 1890, and, according to the ruling of Mr. Raum, it was not necessary for the claimant to show that he was incapacitated for the performance of manual labor.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask for some additional time.
Mr. CRISP. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended.
Mr. PICKLER. How much time does the gentleman want?
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. About fifteen minutes.
Mr. PICKLER. I hope that extension will be granted.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I want to give notice that as soon as the gentleman from New York has concluded his remarks I will move that the committee rise. I hope he will have unanimous consent to conclude.
There was no objection.
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. This order of Commissioner Raum, issued in October, 1890, purported on its face and by its caption to fix the rate of pensions under the so-called dependent pension act of June 27, 1890. It provided, in substance, that cases showing disabilities under the act of June 27, 1890, should be rated the same as like disabilities of service origin.
The practical operation of that order was that a man claiming under the act of 1890 was not obliged to show that he was disabled to such a degree as to be unable to support himself. In practice Commissioner Raum neglected to take into consideration the ability of the applicant to perform manual labor.
This case of Charles T. Bennett came before the Department of the Interior May 27, 1893. When the original claim was filed under the general law, the evidence showed that Bennett had not been in any way disabled or injured in the war. When he filed his claim under the act of June 27, 1890, the evidence showed—what? That he had a slight deafness in both ears. Now, under the act of 1890, what was he obliged to show? That he was suffering from a mental or physical disability—of what kind? Of a permanent character. And to what extent? One that incapacitated him for the performance of manual labor. That was a condition precedent; he must be unable to perform manual labor. And to what extent must that incapacity exist? To such an extent that he can not earn a support; in the language of the act, "in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support."
Now, this man Bennett showed what? That he was deaf in both ears, although he could hear the ticking of a watch when placed within half an inch of either ear. On that condition of facts, he not having received any wound or injury, and not having contracted disease in the line of duty while in the service, and failing in his application under the general law, he claims that he is entitled to a pension under the act of 1890, and that because he has a slight deafness of both ears he is incapacitated for manual labor to such an extent as to be unable to earn a support.
So it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the only just course which could possibly have been adopted by the Commissioner of Pensions or the Secretary of the Interior was to revoke at once that order of Commissioner Raum which has led to so much misunderstanding and to so many untenable applications—whether the number of claims thrown out, whether the number of petitions properly rejected amounted to 100,000 or not. In the very nature of things where we have laws dependent on papers, too often improperly or improvidently executed—where we have all the decisions made upon ex parte applications, where we have almost every avenue of fraud or illegality open, it would seem sometimes by design, there is no reason why all the claims improperly filed should not be rejected, whether they amount to one thousand or two thousand or a hundred thousand. In other words, the number of claims rejected, if the claims be improper and fraudulent, matters not; because I think on both sides of the House no argument will be urged in favor of a fraudulent or dishonest pension. The only thing we differ about is whether the doors should be opened wide or not and whether or not the ordinary rules of evidence by which fallible human testimony is tested shall be used in respect to pension claims or shall be abrogated entirely.
Mr. STEELE. Does not the gentleman know that the ordinary rules of evidence do not apply in these cases?
Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], whose time has been extended indefinitely, allow me a question in the nature of an inquiry for information?
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I will, provided it be brief.
Mr. BRUMM. It seems that the burden of the gentleman's position rests upon the fact that he believes, as he has stated, that the criterion for granting pensions should be the disability incurred in the service. Am I correct in that?
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have not said that; I have not said it, although attempts have been made to make it appear that I have done so.
Mr. BRUMM. Do you mean that it is not a criterion—disability incurred in the service or the line of duty?
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I say this, in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the general criterion which has found favor among the civilized nations all over the world is that the injury should have been received or the disease contracted in the service and in the line of duty. But that includes all the cases where, for instance, seven or eight hundred pensions are being drawn in a regiment which never left the limits of its own State because it was doing garrison duty in guarding prisoners in the State of Ohio or Illinois. The regiment was just as much in the service, or in the line of duty, as if it were on the battlefield, and there are thousands of pensions being paid in this country to men who never heard the report of a cannon or a musket shot.
Mr. BRUMM. That is an entirely different question. Is the gentleman not in favor of treating all the soldiers of this Government who served in the wars alike?
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. In what wars?
Mr. BRUMM. All of the wars; the Revolutionary war, the war of 1812, the Indian wars, the Mexican war, and the war for the suppression of the rebellion.
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I heard a very interesting conversation between my friend from Georgia [Mr. MOSES] and the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], in which they endeavored to arrive at an equitable adjustment between the widows of the several wars, that is, between the widows of the soldiers of the civil war and some other war. Now, I am not in favor of any distinction in this regard. I believe that the widows of the soldiers of all of our wars should be treated exactly alike and placed upon an equality; but I do not think if there has been a wrong in one instance that two wrongs can possibly make a right. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that putting the widows of the soldiers of the civil war upon the pension list, unless their financial necessities require it, is either just or proper. I do not believe in paying them what they do not need, that is, in paying pensions to those who have an income—a net income of $500. I do not believe it would be just to all the other people in the country, and for that reason I oppose it.
Mr. BRUMM. Do I understand the gentleman to refuse to answer my question?
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Well, sometime when I have two or three hours at my disposal, I will endeavor to look into the matter and answer the gentleman's questions? [Laughter.]
Mr. BRUMM. I simply wanted to know whether you think that all the soldiers who have fought for our Government should be treated alike in reference to pensions? It is a very plain and a very simple question.
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Well, I do not know——
Mr. MOSES. Will the gentleman allow me——
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to enjoy the floor, Mr. Chairman, for a few moments myself. [Laughter.] I have given a very large part of my time to the various members, and I have not been able to make any connected remarks, or to continue very long, without interruption.
The gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has just interrupted me, I presume has looked up some statute bearing upon the subject. I suppose he has been delving back into some of the old statutes——
Mr. BRUMM. No, I do not delve backward; I delve forward. I am a Republican. [Laughter and applause.]
Mr. BARTLETT of New York (continuing). Or has found some vote, or some provision in favor of the point he is trying to make, on which he desires to commit me without examination. Now, I decline to be trapped in this manner until I have had an opportunity of examining the various pension laws. I have done that to some extent already, but shall do so further hereafter, when I have more time.
Mr. BRUMM. I simply suggest that inasmuch as the Mexican soldiers are considered to be entitled to their pensions——
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir; I decline to yield the floor. The gentleman who has just addressed the House in reference to the Mexican war I presume has discovered some occult point on which he wishes light. However, I will hear the gentleman's question. What is the point?
Mr. BRUMM. I have asked a very simple question. Do you believe that all the soldiers of this Government, in all the wars, should be treated alike in our pension laws? The soldiers who have fought for our Government, I mean; not those who fought against it.
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Well, I do not know. There may be varying circumstances. If you give one man wrongfully $10, I do not see anything to justify you in giving another wrongfully $10. Two wrongs certainly do not make a right.
Mr. BRUMM. Well, which is right or wrong? Have you done justice to the Mexican soldiers in this case or have you done injustice to the Union soldiers in regard to the matter of pensions? It is a very simple and a plain question, and the gentleman can answer it without any difficulty or delay.
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The gentleman seems to imagine that all the legislative power in this Union has been vested in me.
Mr. BRUMM. Oh, no; not that; but the gentleman certainly can answer a plain and simple question.
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I am not accountable for past legislation on this subject. If it was wrong, it is no reason why we should do wrong now. The time has come when it is proper for us to do what is right and just to our people. I do not care anything about the status of the Mexican soldiers. It is not a question for us at this time. I propose to discuss the question which is now before the House, if I can be allowed to continue my remarks for even a very few minutes without interruption.

There is one question to which I desire to draw the attention of the House, and which will be interesting to all of you who are lawyers. There seems to be a great fear of stating what a pension is. It is termed a vested right; and you went so far, in the urgent deficiency act of 1893, as to declare that it is a vested right, apparently ignorant that it was beyond the power of Congress to make a pension different from what it is in nature.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I thought the understanding was I was to finish.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. My request was that the gentleman be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] will be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I shall endeavor to conclude my remarks within a very few minutes, provided I am not interrupted more than a dozen times. Whenever it is intimated that a pension is what it is in reality, that it is a bounty or a donation from the Government, great horror is expressed. They say on the one hand that it is a vested right, and on the other that it is a contract. What I conceive it to be is, that when there has been any disease or wound or injury in the service, in the line of duty, in such case there does arise a moral obligation and an ethical duty; but it is not a contract in a legal sense, nor is it in any sense a vested right.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What is the question? I will yield provided it be a query and not a stump speech.

Mr. STEELE. It is a query. Take two soldiers starting into the service to-day——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Take them where?

Mr. STEELE. One of them is wounded in the first battle in which he is engaged. The other fights in twenty battles, and at the end of his term of service he is discharged and goes to work to earn his living. Suppose, then, he falls on a saw and loses a limb. He has been in nineteen battles more than the other man. My question is, would you give a pension to one and deny a pension to the other?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That is in substance the same question that I asked the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have stated a number of times that in the case of a man receiving a wound or injury in the civil war, whether he fought in one battle or a hundred battles, I would gladly pension him. I think he is entitled to a pension; and if he loses his vision entirely or loses both arms or both feet, I would double the pension given him under existing law.

Mr. STEELE. But how about the man who was in twenty battles?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. In the case of a man who contracted a disease in the service, I should pension him, even though he never left the State of Ohio or Illinois, but had passed the whole of his time at some camp of instruction.

Mr. STEELE. My question is, if a man who has been engaged in twenty battles, who is poor and is engaged in manual labor, meets with an accident by which he loses both arms, he having been in twenty battles and having been a good soldier, would you deny a pension to that man?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The dependent pension act, so called, of June, 1890, is not up now for passage.

Mr. STEELE. I know; but I want the gentleman's opinion. The gentleman says he would favor giving a pension to a soldier who contracted his disability in the service. I am only asking him whether he would not give it to a soldier who was in twenty battles in the war, but who was injured afterwards?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I do not know any soldier who could have been in twenty battles within ninety days.

Mr. STEELE. I am not talking about ninety days. We will say he served five years.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Ninety days is the limit of the act of June, 1890.

Mr. STEELE. I am not talking about the act or 1890, or any other act. I want to know whether you would deny a pension to the man I have described?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. If he was in twenty battles, I would give him a pension. Produce your man who was in twenty battles, and I will vote for a pension for him at any time.

Mr. BINGHAM. If it does not divert the gentleman from his argument, I should like to ask him a question for information. The gentleman has stated that some estimates base the number of those who would be added to the roll by this proposed amendment in reference to widows at 25,000, and the gentleman states his judgment to be that if this amendment is adopted 50,000 names will be added to the pension rolls. I should like to ask the gentleman where he gets that information. In the Commissioner's report I find that the widows' claims rejected under the act of 1890 numbered but 17,000, and the abandoned claims amounted to but 6,000. That is the sum total under the operation of that law of rejection and abandonment of widows' claims. I wish the gentleman to give the information on which he bases the estimate which he has stated.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have conferred with some of the gentlemen most familiar with the statistics of pensions, and the result of their estimate was that probably there would be an increase of at least 25,000; that is, that about that number would be included in the addition.

Of course, all such estimates would be matters of conjecture and guesswork. It is impossible to arrive at a correct estimate. But on reflection you will see that the class of widows to be benefited must be enormous. You take any widow who spends the greater part of her income, either in the conduct of her business in running a little store, or any other business, who pays out several thousands or even a thousand dollars in the way of taxes, or who happens to be indebted by way of a loan and who is paying interest on such loan, with all those exemptions included and embraced within the term "net income," it must necessarily let in a very large class of widows. It is estimated that 25,000 would be let in were the limit $500 income, and the words "$500 net income" would let in 20,000 or 25,000 widows more.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am unable to imagine any logical reason which can be brought forward in support of this proposition to give those ladies who are amply provided for a pension. After careful reflection, in 1890, when this matter was considered, and ably considered, in both Houses, the test put in by the Republican majority of this House and accepted by the Senate was dependence—that is, the widow was required to be dependent upon her daily labor for support—and yet, when six years have elapsed, you propose to come in and enlarge the whole scope of that act. It would not be just to the widow who to-day receives $144 a year. Why give her more affluent sisters the same pension which you allow to the woman who needs the money?

Under no logical theory can that proposition be defended. The train of my thought was interrupted a few moments ago when I was treating of the real nature of a pension. I say that a pension is no vested right. I say that a pension is not a contract, and I cite in favor of my position the rulings of the Supreme Court of the United States commencing in that case reported in the 19 Howard, where the decision was rendered by Judge McLean as far back as 1856, and where the pension involved was a Revolutionary pension received under the law of 1832. That is the first case I find on this point, and Judge McLean then said:

> The pension is undoubtedly a bounty of the Government, and in the hands of an administrator of a deceased pensioner it would not be liable to the claims of creditors had the acts of Congress omitted such a provision. * * * There can be no doubt that Congress had a right to distribute this bounty at their pleasure, and to declare it should not be liable to the debts of the beneficiaries.

This ruling was followed and sustained later, and the whole question of the power of Congress over pensions was considered in the case reported in the ninety-eighth volume of United States Reports, the case of the United States against Hall, where the opinion, if I mistake not, was rendered by Mr. Justice Clifford. He says:

> Concede that—

That is the proposition that the control of Congress over pensions arose from the general power to declare war and to maintain the Army and Navy; that is, that it was a derivative power received under the general provision of the Federal Constitution. He says:

> Concede that, and it follows that Congress may grant such donations to the officers, soldiers, and seamen employed in such public service.

Thus these great judges of the Supreme Court of the United States had no scruple or hesitation in calling attention to what a pension is—that it is a bounty or donation depending upon the Government.

Mr. PITNEY. Will the gentleman answer this question? Is not the citation given contrary to the contention of the gentleman? Does it not go on the supposition that the pension is in payment for services previously rendered and on the supposition that there was a contract that the services should be compensated in that way?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir; there would seem to be nowhere such a view of the law as that a pension is a contract. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that Congress had the power to give or withhold any pension, and that there is no limit upon that power in reference to disposing of it. Now let me look a little later. We find in volume 107, United States Reports, in October, 1882, the following language used by Mr. Justice Woods in reference to a pension, and I believe that was in the case of the United States against Teller, Mr. Henry M. Teller, who was at one time Secretary of the Interior. That is a case where the question was raised as to whether Gen. Ward B. Burnett could draw a pension under a special act and a pension under the general law concurrently, and this is the language used as to whether a pensioner has a vested legal right to a pension.

No pensioner has a vested legal right to his pension.
Pensions are the bounties of the Government, which Congress has the right to give, withhold, distribute, or recall at its discretion.

Then we come to 1894, and in the one hundred and fifty-seventh volume of the United States Reports you will find an opinion by Mr. Justice Brewer, concurred in by all the members of that great court, in which this very pension act, the dependent pension act, so called, of 1890, was under consideration. There we find the same rule again reiterated and the court, after citing the case in 19 Howard, decided in 1856, and the case of United States vs. Teller, said:

The pension granted by the Government is a matter of bounty. No man has a legal right to a pension, and no man has a legal right to interfere in the matter of obtaining pensions for himself or others.

I have spoken on this question of law, Mr. Chairman, because when we are considering legal and constitutional questions I can not understand why we should be prevented by some feeling of quasi cowardice from calling a pension what it really is, whether we are in favor or not of the provisions of any particular pension law. A pension is a bounty dependent upon the Government; but, on the other hand I concede that where there has been a wound or injury sustained in the service, or where there has been disease contracted, a duty is imposed upon the Government of the United States, a moral obligation to pay the applicant, the soldier so wounded or injured, a sum adequate to supply his needs during the remainder of his life.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. Notwithstanding those decisions, will not the gentleman concede that it ought to count for something that in the war of the rebellion, when these Union soldiers were being enlisted, the Government held out the promise that if they were wounded in battle a pension should be given them, and if they were killed their wives and families would be taken care of? Every recruiting officer in the country was telling every soldier who enlisted that such was the intention of the Government. Now, does the gentleman count that for nothing? Was not that a part of the contract?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, the remarks which I have made upon this question of law have been addressed rather to the use of language than to the substance of the question. They have been made in criticism of calling something a contract which is not a contract, of calling that a vested right which is not a vested right. There are many things which are binding upon us in ethics which are not binding upon us in strict law. I concede that a duty is imposed, that a moral obligation does rest upon the Government to make provision for its wounded or disabled soldiers. I admit that, and I admit that the moral or ethical obligation is just as binding as though the enforcement of a strict legal contract were in question, only I have no patience with the improper use of language by lawyers, and I think we should follow the rulings of the highest court of the United States when we speak of "vested rights" or "contracts."

Mr. PICKLER. I would ask the gentleman if it was not a Democratic House which, in the first session of the Fifty-third Congress, declared a pension a vested right?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. That matters not. Of course a declaration that something is a vested right which is not a vested right is merely brutum fulmen. It is of no legal force to term that a "vested right" which is not in its nature a vested right, and it has been so held. The only change that was made by the requirement contained in the urgent deficiency act of 1893 was that it required thirty days' notice by the Commissioner. I think that was a very proper provision, and the only question in reference to it was as to the manner of its passage. It should have been brought up squarely and honestly as a part of our pension legislation, and should not have been slipped into an urgency deficiency bill. Aside from the question of the time, mode, and manner of its adoption, I do not find any objection to that provision of law, for I think it is proper that notice should be given by the Commissioner.

In so far as the moral aspect of this question is concerned, I concede to the gentleman from South Dakota that a moral obligation is imposed on the Government where a man has been wounded or injured in the discharge of his duty. The act of July 27, 1890, provides for granting a pension although the man has not been injured and although he has not contracted disease in the service. Since it pleased the Congress of the United States to put such a pension law upon the statute book, I shall not, as I have explicitly stated several times to-day, raise any question as to the validity or wisdom of that legislation, and in what I have said so far on that subject I have spoken against any unnecessary enlargement of the provisions of that law.

We have a depleted Treasury. We have a Treasury as to which it must be admitted that the existing conditions are not promising. We have a gold reserve which is running down day after day and being steadily depleted. In view of the existing condition of the Treasury of the United States, in consideration of the fact that immense appropriations will be required for public purposes during the fiscal year, realizing that it is our duty as patriots to provide adequately for proper coast defenses and for our system of fortifications, whether we are to have war with any foreign power or not, and in view of the many urgent calls which the Treasury of the United States will be called upon to meet, all unnecessary and indefensible enlargement of existing pension laws should find no favor either upon this side of the House or upon the other side, which is almost omnipotent in its numerical strength.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The gentleman forgets that we have a "surplus" of seventy-seven millions. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. So I hope gentlemen on the Republican side will go slow in the advocacy of any such proposition as this, which will open wider the Treasury of the United States, and will prepare the way for numberless attacks upon it to which it is not liable under existing law.

I say in conclusion, let the existing pension laws stand if you will——

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me a question on the legal aspect of this matter?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. Why did not Mr. Commissioner Lochren take the advice which the gentleman now gives us about letting the laws remain? Commissioner Raum, the Commissioner in office during the Fifty-first Congress, which passed the act of June 27, 1890, gave that act a construction which conformed to the intention of the legislators who passed it. Now, why did not Commissioner Lochren, having no greater authority than his predecessor, and no greater light—why did this judge, with simply the same jurisdiction as his predecessor, undertake to reverse the decision of that predecessor? Why did not Commissioner Lochren allow the same force to the pension law of 1890 that had been given to it by the preceding Commissioner?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The answer to that question is this: The decision of Commissioner Raum was absolutely wrong——

Mr. PICKLER. Who says so? Nobody but Commissioner Lochren.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. It was so held by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Attorney-General.

Mr. PICKLER. It was so held only by officers of the present Administration.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I do not believe that any lawyer who will make a careful examination of that question from a judicial standpoint will uphold the decision of Commissioner Raum. That decision was to the effect that when a pension application was made under the dependent-pension act of June 27, 1890, it should not be incumbent on the applicant to show that he was incapacitated for earning his support by manual labor.

Mr. PICKLER. But when a man has had a rating for some disability under the general law and has been allowed, for example, a pension of $4 a month for that disability, is there any good reason why he should not have the same rating under the act of June 27, 1890, until the maximum of $12 a month is reached? If he has been allowed $4 a month or $6 a month, for instance, under the general law, what reason is there in law or common sense why the disability should not be rated in the same way under the act of June 27, 1890, until the maximum of $12 a month is reached?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I can not answer all these conundrums of gentlemen who advocate this bill.

Mr. PICKLER. That is the "milk in the cocoanut" on this question.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I will state, however, that the ruling of Commissioner Raum is, in my judgment, absolutely indefensible. I do not believe the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] can make any argument in support of it. It can not be sustained from any legal or equitable standpoint. Commissioner Raum ruled, as I have already stated, that it is unnecessary for an applicant under the law of 1890 to show the existence of those conditions which are absolutely conditions precedent to the granting of the pension. In other words, Commissioner Raum held that a man might be granted a pension without showing that he was incapacitated to the extent of being unable to earn his support.

Mr. PICKLER. How can you better judge of the incapacity than by the rating which has been made under the general law?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I must decline to yield further.

In conclusion, let me say, it has always been held by the Supreme Court of the United States that the whole matter of pension legislation is in the hands of Congress, which may adopt such laws on the subject as it may see fit. Still this power would seem to be limited to the right to grant pensions where such pensions are necessary. I do not believe there can be found anywhere any decision holding that a pension should be granted where it clearly appears that it is unnecessary to grant such pension. That is the exact condition in which we find ourselves to-day. It is proposed to grant pensions to soldiers' widows who have $500 net income, amounting, as I have shown, in probably every instance, to giving a pension to women who have several thousand dollars over and above the $500 net income. It is proposed that we grant pensions to this class of women, while it appears on the very face of the proposition that they do not need the money we are asked to appropriate.

I do not believe it can be right, so many years after the end of the civil war, no matter how much sympathy we may feel for those women who were wedded to soldiers now dead—no matter how much sympathy we may feel for any widow who is in want—I do not believe the proposition can be defended that, with no paramount necessity, we should deliberately vote money not needed, in times of dire distress such as those with which we are confronted to-day. I do not believe the American people will be in favor of any such proposition. I do not believe they will favor any further extension of existing pension legislation.

I do not believe that the American people will favor unnecessary taxation of thousands and hundreds of thousands of our citizens for the benefit of a certain privileged class in our country who do not need the appropriation of one dollar of the money. I do not believe that this is the proper exercise of the power of taxation, whether it be a constitutional exercise or not. I think we should give our money to the soldiers who need it. I think we should give our money to the men who fought and the men who lost arms and legs or eyesight in the civil war, or who incurred disease or contracted disability in any way. And if we go a step further and favor those who fought for ninety days, but who incurred no disability in the war, and give them an appropriation and pay the money under the act of 1890, I say let that be the extremity to which we shall go.

I, Mr. Chairman, for one, honor and admire the loyalty and patriotism of the men who fought in the Union Army throughout that dire period which lasted from the breaking out of the civil war in 1861 until the surrender at Appomattox in 1865. There is no man on this side of the House who admires the men who fought during that period on the Union side more than I do. I for one admire and honor the valor and courage of the men who fought during that period on either side—that is, I admire the valor and courage of the men who fought under the Union flag, and the valor and courage of the men who fought on the other side, because I always admire courage and valor wherever I find them.

But let me, in conclusion, say to you, let us stop where we are. Let us not appropriate any more money, but let us pay these men who are entitled under existing statutes—that is, the men who are entitled under the provisions of the general pension law which is found in the Revised Statutes, the men who earned pensions by reason of wounds or injury in the line of duty in the service—and let us pay those who are entitled to pensions under the pension act of June 27, 1890, and let us then pass the present bill, containing $140,000,000, and then stop and avoid the throwing of any more unnecessary money into a bottomless pit. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I have been prevailed upon to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. WILLIS], after which I shall move that the committee rise.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, there is a patriotism of policy, a patriotism of duty, and a patriotism of sentiment. In dealing with this subject of our veterans, our brave soldiers who stood in the breach in the day of our country's peril, we need them all—policy and duty and sentiment. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] who has just concluded his remarks declares, in this presence, that there is no one here who admires more those veterans who fought the battles of this country and stood in the hour of danger in the front than himself, I am inclined to join issue with him. [Applause.] As I understand the plain purport and effect of the amendment to which the gentleman objects, and to which he addresses his remarks, it is simply this: To make it more difficult to take away one of these men's pensions—a four, six, or eight dollar pension—than it has been heretofore. Is that right? [Applause.]

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow a single interruption?

Mr. WILLIS. Excuse me. I can not answer questions or permit interruptions in five minutes. Give me a half hour and I will be very glad to engage in a colloquy on this floor with the gentleman as long as he chooses upon this subject. But now I have not the time.

I say, is it not right to make difficult the taking away of the pensions of these men? Is it not right to make it difficult to hang a person or imprison a man charged with crime? Does not the gentleman, himself a lawyer, give voice before jury and court to the old sentiment—has he not quoted it a thousand times over—that it is better to let go ninety-nine guilty men than to condemn one innocent man? And the same principle that will apply to a criminal in a court of law ought to apply to these men who get seventy-five or eighty or a hundred dollars a year.

The gentleman says that this is not a vested right—this right of pensions. I say to him if it is not it ought to be [applause], and the first thing that will be becoming in the gentleman to-day is to devote his time to making it a vested right. He can not be engaged in a more patriotic duty, or one that will accomplish a juster or a grander result. It would be one of the beautiful paragraphs of his life, that would stand as an encomium of his patriotism, and a testimony to his manhood long after he was dead and in his grave. It is a vested right. He admits that it is a moral right, and what is a vested right except a moral right incorporated into law? And if it is not incorporated into law it is time it should be.

Suppose, for instance, by way of illustration, that there is a derelict on the ocean, and a brave sailor with his crew saves this dismasted, abandoned vessel and bring her into port. What is done? Why, they give him at least half of her valuation and probably he gets all.

That is just the relation that these men sustained to this grand old ship of state when she was in the trough of the sea. Every timber in her was wrenched, and everybody aboard of her was in alarm.

These brethren of ours from the South went whoring after strange gods. The gods made them mad. In the hour of their anger they tried to pull down the house over their own heads and over our heads. These brave men came to the front and stood in the breach and saved the country. To whom does the country belong, sir? Who has a better right to it? It is a case of salvage without comparison in history. [Applause.]

If the gentleman wants precedents and exemplars that he may safely follow with regard to these matters, let him follow that brave old hero whom I saw upon the floor a few minutes ago, Gen. Daniel E. Sickles. [Applause.] Let the gentleman get his inspiration from him, and he will safely follow the light in a brave man's hands.

No, sir; you may traduce these pension laws and the men who receive these pensions. You may suffer these heroes to be buried in the potter's field. You may subject them to the narrowest and most stringent circumstances of financial and of social life, and they may go down at last in shame and poverty, amid the regrets of those around them, but—

> On fame's eternal camping ground
> Their silent tents are spread,
> And glory guards, with solemn round,
> The bivouac of the dead.

[Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOPKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3537) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WILLIS, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LAWSON, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SHAW, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BRUMM, for six days, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker, as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 14, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADJUSTMENT OF CLAIMS WITH TENNESSEE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 11, 1895, copies of all papers on file in the War Department touching the seizure of and operation by the United States of the Memphis, Clarksville and Louisville Railroad, the Edgefield and Kentucky Railroad, the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad, and the Winchester and Alabama Railroad, together with a letter from N. R. Batchelder, Quartermaster-General United States Army, inclosing all papers now on file in the office of the Quartermaster-General appertaining to the claims in question; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EQUIPMENT OF MONITORS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 3d instant, a statement as to the cost of equipping with guns and machinery and putting in suitable condition for purposes of harbor defense all monitors not now in commission or undergoing repairs; which, with the accompanying statement, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, not including those for which provision was made at the last session of Congress and which required an appropriation for their payment; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 30) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," approved March 2, 1893.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 25) to extend the time for making an assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the American Society of Church History held in New York City December 27, 1895, sympathizing with the persecuted Christians in Armenia, and praying for the prompt qualification of consuls to that country and an extension of the work of the Red Cross Society to the persecuted in Armenia; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of F. M. Satterfield and sundry other citizens of Rock Hall, Md., and the petition of J. M. Burdett and sundry other citizens of Browningsville, Md., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Baltimore (Md.) Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends, praying the President of the United States and both Houses of Congress to consider the great importance of the preservation of peaceful relations between the United States and Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLEN presented twenty-two petitions of members of the Nebraska National Guard, praying for the enactment of such legislation as will authorize the War Department to exchange the Springfield rifles now in use by them for those of caliber .45 with the latest improvements; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Seattle, Wash., praying that improvements be made for the relief of the cities, towns, farmers, and settlers situated upon and near the valley of the Skagit River, in Skagit County, in that State; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of 45 citizens of Long Bottom, Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CAMERON. I present a petition, in the form of resolutions adopted at the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, held at Williamsport, Pa., December 12, 1895, praying for the adoption of what is known as the "Lubin proposition" for the protection of American agriculture and shipping in the foreign trade. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PENNSYLVANIA STATE GRANGE, PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY, Office of Secretary.

To Hon. JAMES DONALD CAMERON,
United States Senator from Pennsylvania.

DEAR SIR: At the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania State Grange, held at Williamsport, Pa., December 12, 1895, the following resolutions and address to the American people and the Congress of the United States were unanimously adopted, and it was directed that they be officially forwarded to the Representatives and Senators from Pennsylvania to be presented to Congress as expressing the views of the farmers of our State upon the important question of protective legislation.

Respectfully submitted.

LEONARD RHONE,
Master Pennsylvania State Grange.

Attested:
J. T. AILMAN, Secretary.

EQUITABLE PROTECTION.

To the American people and the Congress of the United States:

At a conference of the representatives of chambers of commerce, boards of trade, and delegates of the Farmers' National Congress, and other commercial organizations from the various sections of the Union, and delegates of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, under the auspices of the National Grange, Worcester, Mass., November 14, 1895, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas agricultural staples, being exports, can not be protected by a tariff on imports, as are manufactures, and American ships in the foreign trade, being built by partly protected material and under protection wages, are at a disadvantage in the world's competition with ships constructed and operated in cheap-labor or free-trade countries:

"Resolved by this conference, That this depressed condition demands the enactment of such legislation as will put both these great industries upon a footing of equality with those now specially fostered by the Government.

"Resolved, That we call upon Congress to equalize the protective system by extending to agricultural staples and American shipping in the foreign trade that just measure of protection to which they are entitled so long as protection is the controlling and public policy of the nation.

"Resolved, That we recommend to the consideration of the Congress of the United States and to the American people what is known as the 'Lubin proposition' for the protection of American agriculture and shipping in the foreign trade."

The same resolutions, in substance, have been recently adopted by the Chambers of Commerce of San Francisco; Seattle, Wash.; Portland, Oreg.; the Board of Trade of Bath, Me.; the leading Atlantic Coast shipbuilders at a meeting in Philadelphia, and the Farmers' National Congress at Atlanta, Ga.

THE "LUBIN PROPOSITION"

is for the protection of American agricultural staples, a portion of which are exported, by the payment of a bounty by the Federal Government upon such exports and the protection of American shipping in the foreign trade, to the end that all industries in the United States which in any manner compete with the cheaper labor of foreign countries may be protected equally with such industries as are now protected by a tariff on imports.

For seventy-six years a similar policy was in successful operation in Great Britain, and it only ceased when that nation no longer exported agricultural staples, after which the tariff upon imports protected her agriculturists until the repeal of what are known as the "corn laws."

It is believed that the enactment into laws of this proposition will have the effect of making steadily profitable the pursuit of agricultural employment and replace present threatened disaster to our farm-owning population by prosperity, the result of which would have an equally beneficial effect upon our great manufacturing industries, which are so vitally dependent upon our farming population for the purchase of their products. And it will effect for shipping in the foreign trade a stimulus to shipowning and shipbuilding to such an extent that our own home-built, home-manned, and American-owned vessels shall once more carry the larger share of our foreign commerce, thereby creating a much greater home market for American farm and factory products among those engaged in shipping and the retention in the United States of the many millions of dollars which we now expend annually to enrich foreign shipowners and shipbuilders.

We earnestly urge upon the American people and the Congress of the United States the early and favorable consideration of such measures on the lines here indicated as shall give prosperity to all American industries by equitable protection.

Unanimously adopted.

J. H. BRIGHAM,
Chairman, and Master National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry.
HUGH CRAIG,
Vice-President, and Vice-President San Francisco Chamber of Commerce.
ALEX. R. SMITH,
Secretary, representing leading Atlantic Coast Shipbuilders.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of Council Chamber of Chosen Knights Commandery, No. 174, Ancient and Illustrious Order of Knights of Malta, of York, Pa., praying that relief be granted to the suffering Armenians; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. THURSTON presented a petition of sundry citizens of North Platte, Nebr., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the State Council of Nebraska, praying for the speedy recognition as belligerents of the Cuban patriots in their struggle for freedom; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of F. J. Chandler and sundry other citizens of Kansas City, Fayetteville, and St. Louis, all in the State of Missouri, praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. SQUIRE. I present a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Tacoma, in the State of Washington, in behalf of the bill which I introduced to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

The petitioners state that the events of the past few weeks, growing out of the President's message on the Venezuelan question, disclose more clearly than ever the utter lack of means to defend the unprotected ports on the Pacific Coast against the encroachments of a possible enemy.

They call attention to the fact, which is well known, that the British Government maintains the headquarters of its Pacific squadron at Esquimalt, on Vancouver Island; that British men-of-war are permanently stationed in that harbor; that for the past three years the British Government has been quietly erecting strong fortifications at that point, and that at the slightest intimation of hostilities a fleet of British men-of-war could be sent from Esquimalt, a distance of only a few miles, across the Straits of Fuca into Puget Sound, which could levy tribute on the important cities or reduce them to ashes within a few hours.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY presented petitions of William B. Coit and 54 other citizens of New London, Conn.; of Charles B. Jennings and 48 other citizens of New London, Conn.; of Walter A. Town and 86 other citizens of New London, Conn.; of the professors, instructors, and students of Williams Memorial Institute, of New London, Conn.; of President Robert P. Keep and the professors of the Norwich Free Academy, of Norwich, Conn.; of the president and professors of Trinity College, of Hartford, Conn.; of the professors and students of St. Margaret's School, of Waterbury, Conn.; of Mrs. William M. Olcott, honorary State regent, and the officers and members of Faith Trumbull Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Norwich, Conn.; of Grace T. Arms, president, and the officers and members of Jonathan Brooks Society, Children of the American Revolution, of Connecticut; of John K. Buckley and 123 other citizens of Mystic, Conn.; of Mrs. Cuthbert H. Slocomb and 55 other residents of Stonington, Conn.; of Charles J. Hoadley, president, and 10 other officers and members of the Connecticut Historical Society, of Hartford, Conn.; of Elizabeth J. Camp, regent, and 23 other members of Sarah Ludlow Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Seymour, Conn.; of Mrs. A. J. Muzzy, regent, and 33 other members of Katharine Gaylord Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Bristol, Conn.; of Mrs. Albert S. Comstock, regent, and 69 other members of Hannah Benedict Canter Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of New Canaan, Conn., and of Lizzie F. Litchfield and 31 other members of Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Willimantic, Conn., praying that the Government purchase certain lots adjoining old Fort Griswold, in the town of Groton, Conn.; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 259) granting to the Columbia and Red Mountain Railway Company a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 147) granting a pension to Elvira Bachelder;

A bill (S. 136) granting an increase of pension to Horace Townsend;

A bill (S. 137) granting an increase of pension to William W. French;

A bill (S. 149) granting a pension to Helen M. Jacob;

A bill (S. 730) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Helen Morrell Carroll;

A bill (S. 1051) granting a pension to Elizabeth New, widow of Jethrow New; and

A bill (S. 710) granting a pension to Ada J. Schwatka, widow of the late Lieut. Frederick Schwatka.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 145) granting an increase of pension to Maud Ardelle Bliss; and

A bill (S. 746) granting a pension to Elizabeth E. Donahoe.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon:

A bill (S. 1311) granting an increase of pension to Dudley F. Brown;

A bill (S. 585) granting an increase of pension to Martha R. Hitchcock;

A bill (S. 341) granting an increase of pension to Napoleon B. Breedlove;

A bill (S. 148) granting a pension to Catharine Dillon; and

A bill (S. 640) to increase the pension of Joseph W. Fisher.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 352) granting a pension to Philip Kershner, late lieutenant-colonel of the Sixteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 332) granting an increase of pension to Philip Kershner, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1037) for the relief of John Clyde Sullivan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 15) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the Mountain View Cemetery Association, at Oakland, Cal., certain cannon, etc., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PEFFER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 466) granting a pension to William Brown, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 507) to pension Mollie Crandall, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 748) granting an increase of pension to Helen L. Dent, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1303) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Holly, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SHOUP. Both these bills were passed by the Senate in the last Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, reported a joint resolution (S. R. 52) appropriating the sum of $50,000 for the completion of dry dock No. 3 at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard; which was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. MCMILLAN, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1203) granting an increase of pension to Mary Doubleday, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Abner Doubleday, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

MRS. EVA DAVIS COGSWELL.

Mr. LODGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1) granting a pension to Mrs. Eva Davis Cogswell, widow of Brig. Gen. William Cogswell, to report it back favorably with an amendment and submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of Mrs. Eva Davis Cogswell, widow of Brig. Gen. William Cogswell, at the rate of $75 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts who reported this bill please explain to the Senate the grounds upon which the pension is granted? Is there a written report?

Mr. LODGE. There is a written report with the bill which was unanimously agreed to by the committee, I will state.

Mr. HILL. Perhaps the Senator, however, can state it more concisely.

Mr. LODGE. The bill is for the benefit of Mrs. Eva Davis Cogswell, the widow of Gen. William Cogswell, who was for many years a member of the House of Representatives, undoubtedly well known to the Senator from New York and others. He died last spring. He was an officer of distinguished gallantry. He was in active service all through the war. He was seriously wounded at Chancellorsville. He commanded a brigade at the close of the war. This pension is for the benefit, as I have said, of the widow, who is left without any provision of any kind. He was the youngest brigadier-general, I believe, in the service.

Mr. HILL. I ask for information because I have given no special attention to these pension matters, and confess my ignorance in regard to them. Is there a pension of any sum granted to the widow of a brigadier-general as a matter of course, irrespective of any other consideration?

Mr. LODGE. Not to a brigadier-general of volunteers, I understand. I think there is no pension provided for except such as Congress sees fit to grant.

Mr. MILLS. What is the regular rate paid to the widow of a brigadier-general?

Mr. LODGE. There has been no regular rate.

Mr. MILLS. What rate has been paid heretofore?

Mr. GALLINGER. Under the general laws, if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, the rate is $30 for all officers above the grade of lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. MILLS. What is the rate usually paid to the widows of generals who held the rank of General Cogswell?

Mr. GALLINGER. By Congress? By special act?

Mr. MILLS. By special act.

Mr. GALLINGER. There has been no uniform rate, I will say to the Senator; anywhere from $50 to $200; but perhaps it is safe to say that $75 has been about the average rate.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the widow has a family dependent on her?

Mr. LODGE. She has no family dependent upon her.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator know of any reason why she should receive a greater pension than the pension of the widow of some private soldier?

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I think the services rendered by General Cogswell while in command entitle him to a higher pension. It is recognized by every law of the United States that in view of the services of officers the pension of officers and their widows shall be proportioned in some degree to their rank. The pension proposed by the bill is in no degree an excessive one. On the contrary, it is lower than many that have been granted by Congress to men of no more distinguished service than General Cogswell.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], I think last week, brought in a bill to grant a pension to the widow of General Jardine. In that case a pension was allowed at $50 a month to the widow of a general of the same rank as General Cogswell. Why should this lady receive $25 more than the widow of General Jardine? I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts the propriety of reducing the amount to $50 a month.

Mr. LODGE. I must decline to do that without a vote of the Senate. The bill has been reported unanimously by the committee at $75 a month as a reasonable and proper pension in this case.

Mr. ALLEN. I am decidedly opposed to an irregular method of allowing pensions to the widows of officers of the volunteer army in the late war. A few days ago, as I suggested a moment since, the Senator from Connecticut brought in and had passed a bill to pension the widow of General Jardine at $50 a month, a man of the same rank, and who I presume performed services equally as meritorious as those of General Cogswell. The Senator from Connecticut asked for a pension of $100 a month, but he was satisfied to take $50. My recollection is that in no instance since I have been a member of the Senate has the sum been over $50. The Senator from Massachusetts says this lady has no family dependent upon her.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, I will state to him that there are scores of precedents. Of course I do not want to enter into a controversy with the Senator, but there are scores of precedents where the widows of survivors have been granted $100 a month, and scores of other precedents where they have been granted $75 a month.

Mr. ALLEN. I presume that is true; I do not doubt it; but the chairman of the Committee on Pensions ought to present to us some rule. I am myself decidedly opposed to discriminating between men of equal rank or their families. I know nothing about General Cogswell except as a matter of history and from having met him on one or two occasions, but I presume it is true that every brigadier-general during the late war performed his duty.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will not interrupt him further. He says the chairman of the Committee on Pensions ought to present some rule. I served upon the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives and for five years upon the Committee on Pensions of the Senate of the United States. That question has been constantly under discussion in the committee, and we have been utterly unable as a matter of justice to formulate any rule. These cases must necessarily be considered as individual cases on their merits, and the Senate must decide for itself whether the action of the committee is to be indorsed or otherwise. The committee will find no fault in any individual case if the Senate reverses the action of the committee. We act upon our best judgment in view of all the circumstances and conditions surrounding individual cases, and make our reports accordingly, and it is then in the hands of the Senate to do as the Senate may see wise in regard to the cases.

Mr. ALLEN. That is not satisfactory to me, however satisfactory it may be to the chairman of the Committee on Pensions. There ought to be a rule in this Chamber and in the other branch of Congress with reference to the amount of pension that is given to the widows of officers of like rank under like circumstances. The Senator from New Hampshire, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, says that this lady would draw $30 a month under the general law without a special act in her behalf. I wish to place myself on record here as being opposed to making any discrimination whatever between the widow of a private soldier and the widow of a brigadier-general, or a major-general, or a lieutenant-general, or any other kind of a general. I want to announce, so far as I am concerned, that I am utterly opposed to discriminations of that kind.

Mr. President, I had some experience during the late war in following the brigadier-generals, sometimes following them and they sometimes following us. I understand quite distinctly that their services were not at all times quite as meritorious as they have sometimes been described in later years. If we would pay attention to the Committee on Pensions and the laudations indulged in here from time to time by certain Senators who had no experience whatever as soldiers we would suppose that the battles of this country had been fought alone by brigadier-generals and major-generals, and that no person below the rank of a brigadier-general could be found in the late war on either side. I want to say that it was the services of the humble private soldiers during the last war that put stars upon the shoulders of some of the gentlemen whose widows are now being pensioned in fabulous sums.

I say it is decidedly un-American to discriminate between the poor struggling widow of a private soldier and the struggling widow of a brigadier-general. I know of thousands of honest women in this country, intelligent women, struggling upon a pension of ten or fifteen dollars a month, supporting a family, raising and educating children, who are or should be as meritorious in the eyes of this country as the widow of the most distinguished general in our late army. It is a species of namby-pambyism, of flunkeyism, to make this discrimination.

I am in favor of giving liberal pensions to the wives of deceased soldiers and to their children. I have a deep and an abiding sympathy for every man who gave his services to his country, and for every poor woman and child who suffered as a result of that great struggle. But I am not prepared, Mr. President, to make a discrimination between American women who are equally meritorious any more than I am prepared to make a discrimination between American men who are equally meritorious.

While I shall not oppose the passage of this measure any further than to vote against it if a yea-and-nay vote is taken (or on a viva voce vote, for that matter), I want to say here and now that as a private soldier, who served during the late war, I shall at all times and under all circumstances do what I can to put down and wipe out discrimination between soldiers of the late war.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska desires entire uniformity in the matter of pensions. That, sir, is an absolute impossibility for any committee that has any sense of justice or fairness. There is variety in rank, which the world regards, whether the Senator regards it or not. There is variety in the degree of necessity, in the situation of the family, and the suffering of the soldier—the dead husband and father. There are circumstances that inevitably compel any committee of common humanity to make some discrimination.

Why are these bills here, Mr. President? Because this is a court of equity. Because the Pension Bureau is absolutely bound by the letter of the law. It not only grades men that it would not otherwise, but it rejects cases in which it is perfectly convinced that there ought to be a pension, and frequently suggests to the applicant for a pension that he go to the Congress of the United States because the Bureau can not, under the letter of the law, grant any pension whatever. Wherefore I say we are here as a court of equity, which, as Blackstone says, in substance, supplies that wherein the law, by reason of its universality, is deficient.

Now, the Senator indulges in talk that I can not characterize as I would wish or ought to characterize here about the poor private soldier; that the brigadier-general did not amount to anything; that he perhaps followed instead of leading, and all that. If the Senator wishes to go into that, it is not necessary to argue that there must be officers by any manner of means, but I might suggest one small fact to him that might mollify him a little. The losses among officers were very much larger proportionately than the losses among the men, and inevitably such is the case. It is worth a little something more in that way, if you choose to make a dollar-and-cent matter of it, to be an officer than it is to be a soldier, and so governments have thought. It is supposed to be worth a little something more to be a member of the Senate of the United States than to be an humble lawyer in the country, as the Senator from Nebraska and myself have found out. In short, there is a difference among men; there is a difference in the reward for their services; there is a difference in the circumstances of their families; and so there must be discrimination.

It would be a comparatively easy thing to settle the whole matter of pensions if you could establish one uniform scale for all; but the next day after you had established your uniform scale, there would come up a case that would compel you to differ from it and to wish the rule had not been made so, and to desire some equitable reconstruction of the case. Many people suppose—no Senators, I hope or think, suppose—that the laws of the country should be made equal, and they are always telling the people that the laws ought to be so uniform and so complete and so clear that there will be no occasion for exceptional cases. You may take the best constructed statute in the world, and after it runs years, like two or three of the famous statutes upon the books concerning limitations, etc., you will have whole libraries of commentaries upon cases that are supposed to come just within or without the letter of the law. You can not by any set of rigid rules meet equitably the situation of everything.

I think this pension is entirely reasonable—quite so—and I shall bring up one in a day or two where I shall hope to get a pension of $100 a month for the beneficiary.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, whatever the Senator from Nebraska may think of the brigadier-generals of the war, I suppose he will not question that an officer who went into the war as a captain of a State regiment, stayed all through it, was badly wounded, had his health shattered, was selected by General Sherman for a position on his staff on his merits, having had no personal acquaintance with General Sherman before the war and no possible opportunity for favoritism, is entitled to our respect and gratitude.

Now, I hope the Senator from Nebraska, whose kindness of heart I am sure nobody will question, will see that it would be very hard on this lady, who has been left penniless, if he compels her to wait until the Pension Committee of the Senate have devised a general and just rule applicable to all cases. That committee say they can not devise such a rule, that it is impossible in the nature of things. The members of the committee say so unanimously, I think. But suppose they are wrong; would it not be rather hard on this lady that she should be compelled to live without adequate support after the great public services, civil and military, which her husband had rendered to his country, until the Senator from Nebraska has converted the Pension Committee, and has converted the Senate, to his policy of a uniform general rule? I submit to him, whether he is right or wrong, it is rather hard to make this lady the victim of that suggestion.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, I said I was perfectly willing to vote for this pension at $50 a month, exactly the same as the pension of General Jardine. I am not willing to discriminate.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, there are numerous other cases where the chairman of the Pension Committee says $75 or $100 a month has been paid. Why does the Senator select the lowest one and put that down, instead of selecting the highest one or the average pension?

General Cogswell's is a very peculiar case. There may be others, and I suppose the case of Mrs. Gresham will probably come up at some time, where the same doctrine may perhaps be applied. General Cogswell was a man whose whole service had been given to his country or his State. He was one of the class of men like Agassiz, who had no time to make money and was never a money getter or a money keeper. He was a man whose pocket could not hold money if there was a comrade in distress, an old soldier who came around to his door. General Cogswell had a good deal of the habit, so far as he was personally concerned, of sharing what he had with his fellow-soldiers who were in distress.

He went into the war with a captain's commission; he came out at the head of a brigade. He stayed all through. He was in some of the most dangerous and difficult military operations and in some of the most important battles of the war. He was badly wounded. He was, late in the war, selected by General Sherman as a member of his staff. When he came out he was made mayor of his own city. He was elected to Congress in a district where the two parties were close. They would keep a man in one or two terms and then turn him out. He went in having a nomination by a majority of 1 in the nominating convention, but at his last election he had a popular majority of between ten and twelve thousand, carrying every town, every city, and every ward of every city in the entire district. With the love and affection, not only of his own constituents and his neighbors, but of his comrades and members of the House of Representatives, I suppose it is not improper to say that had he lived and his health been spared he would have been at the head, perhaps, of the most important committee of the present House.

I think, with deference to my honorable friend from Nebraska, who I am sure does not speak from any individual unkindness to this case, but only from a general view of his duty as he regards it, that this is not a case where it should be said that the scale of living for the widow of such a person as that, who has been all her life among the best companionship that the public service here and elsewhere would bring her, is precisely the same as that of a widow of a man who got a living for 60 cents a day shoveling gravel on a railroad or even the widow of a private soldier.

The Senator from Nebraska would be obliged by his logic to move at once to make the pay of the General of the Army $13 a month. Is the Senator quite prepared to say that when the army appropriation bill comes here he will move to make the pay of the General of the Army $13 a month, the same as that which the private soldier now gets, on the ground that the services of the private soldier are just as good, or that the private soldier shall have $15,000 a year?

Mr. ALLEN. I think, if the Senator will permit me, that $13 a month would perhaps cover the value of the services of the General of the Army in some instances.

Mr. HOAR. If it is the Senator's argument that the generals in the war on both sides—Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, and Logan, and Lee and Stonewall Jackson—were not men of exceptional brilliancy and ability, and that this American Republic of ours can not turn out generals who are above the ordinary capacity and character, entitled to receive and enjoy a greater reward than the commonest men, who are only worth $13 a month, I differ with him.

I have as high an opinion of the private soldiers of the American Republic as any man, and I believe every private soldier in Massachusetts knows and believes that an honor or mark of affection and public regard to a general or to a general's widow is an honor to him. In the nature of the case you can not give that honor to every private soldier where a million of men have been engaged in a war. But soldiers feel that honor paid to their general, their representative and leader, is an honor to them. They like to come to Washington to see the statue of Thomas; they like to see the statues of Sherman and Logan and Grant; they like to see the soldiers' monument surmounted and adorned with the statues of the great generals and great officers of the war; and the private soldier says to himself, "That is an honor to me, too; it is my service; it is I that is being recognized; it is my beloved commander who is being honored; it is the feeling that was in my bosom that actuated the bosom of the whole American people when they paid this honor."

Mr. President, there is not a private soldier in Massachusetts, and I believe there is scarcely a private soldier in the whole country on either side, who would not say when this honor, this mark of regard, and this provision for the widow of this brave soldier, this noble and honorable man, and this eminent statesman, is proposed, "Give her all she asks, and, God bless her, more."

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I do not believe that either the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Connecticut has any higher appreciation of the distinguished services of the soldiers named than I have. I have seen every one of those men, Sherman, Grant, Sheridan, Logan, and others, and more especially Thomas, under circumstances under which the Senator from Massachusetts never saw them—that is, upon the field of battle. I have very great appreciation of them. I have come from boyhood with all the prejudices of youth with me in favor of the Union soldier and in favor of the American soldier for his gallantry wherever he was. I have not the language to express my appreciation of the meritorious services of those gentlemen.

I have not the faintest objection in the world to General Cogswell or his widow. I would do anything within my power that was just to relieve this worthy woman, but it strikes me that the discrimination which the Senator from Massachusetts makes between the private soldier and General Cogswell, or any other general, is an obnoxious and invidious distinction. If I had it within my power I would raise the pensions of a great many pensioners in this country higher than they are, and I would reduce the pensions of some to a lower scale than they are now receiving.

It has been a common thing to bring in bills here to pension Mrs. John Smith, the widow of Gen. John Smith, from some particular State, and to allow her all the way from $50 to $100, as has been stated, without a solitary thing appearing in the evidence, or appearing before the Senate, authorizing or warranting a pension in that sum.

Now, what has General Cogswell done for this country? Grant that his services have been great and meritorious, what has he done for this country, Mr. President, that 2,000,000 other men have not done? He gave his services as a gallant soldier during the late war. That is true of a million of unknown dead to-day. He gave his services in an official position which perhaps a hundred thousand men were equal to fill if they had been called upon to do so. Why should the widow of such a man receive a greater pension than the meritorious widow of a man who served in the ranks? There is no reason excepting that which has grown up in a discrimination between these two classes of men in the Senate and in the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to answer his question, as he interrupted me?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. For the same reason that the Senator pockets every year $5,000, when some humble neighbor of his gets but 75 cents a day.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not pocket anything more than $5,000.

Mr. HOAR. Yes: your mileage.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, there is a better reason than he states. He says it is simply the action of the Senate and House of Representatives on these special bills. I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that the general laws make these distinctions, and before the Senator can reach the point he seems to be aiming at he must entirely revise the laws of the United States relating to pensions.

Mr. ALLEN. There is nothing in that.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is just that in it. The widow of a lieutenant-colonel receives $30 a month and the widow of a private soldier receives $12 under the laws of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. Thirty dollars is a very small sum, and the others ought to be raised up to that. The truth is, the Senators beat about the bush on this question. You will not get the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Pensions to stand at his desk in this Chamber and declare that there should be a discrimination between these persons.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me again—and I think I shall say nothing further—I will repeat what I said a moment ago. I served on the Pension Committee in the other House under a Democratic chairman, and I have served on the Committee on Pensions in the Senate under a Democratic chairman, and we found it impossible, although it was discussed scores of times, to make a uniform rating for officers and the widows of officers. This very morning a bill was authorized to be reported by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] for the widow of an officer at $100 a month; the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was authorized to report a bill for another widow at $75 a month, and I was authorized to report a bill for the widow of a brevet brigadier-general of my State at $30 a month. I believe justice was done in each case, considering all the circumstances and conditions surrounding it.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not referring to the discriminations which have been made by the committee as between officers of equal rank. The discrimination to which I refer is that discrimination between the man who carries his musket and discharges his duty upon the field of battle, and the man who carries epaulettes upon his shoulders. One would think from the argument of the Senator from Connecticut that God had made a distinction between these men.

Mr. HAWLEY. If He did not, who did make it?

Mr. ALLEN. Gentlemen like the Senator from Connecticut made it. It is a part and parcel of the English system, which has come to us, of discriminating between men who perform equally meritorious services. There is no distinction. When the Senator from Connecticut stands at his desk and urges that there is a distinction between men who perform equally meritorious services, I do not believe that the American people are prepared to adopt his views or act upon them.

I state to you, Mr. President, that from the Atlantic to the Pacific, all over this country, are widows of meritorious private soldiers and meritorious noncommissioned officers who have families that they are caring for and educating who are drawing a pittance of $15, $20, and $25 a month, and many of them not so much. Is it possible that this lady, to care for herself alone, needs more money than the widows of those private soldiers and noncommissioned officers? The services of the husbands of those widows were as meritorious and necessary as the services of General Cogswell or any other officer. It was through the gallant and meritorious services of these men that it was possible to restore these States and to bring about the present desirable condition of our Union.

The Senator from Connecticut says that the percentage of loss among the commissioned officers of the Army was greater than among the private soldiers. I deny it. I say the percentage of loss was greater among the private soldiers and noncommissioned officers of the Army than it was among the commissioned officers, and it is idle for the Senator to stand here and contend for the contrary.

Mr. President, I desire, with a view of making a motion, to ask the parliamentary status of the pending bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill under discussion. The Chair submitted to the Senate the question whether there was objection. No objection was interposed, when the bill was read in full and the Chair stated that it was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. The question then was upon the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions, which was agreed to, and the bill was reported to the Senate. Then the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] made an inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. ALLEN. If in order, I desire to amend the bill by moving to strike out "seventy-five" and inserting "fifty," so as to read "$50 a month."

Mr. HOAR. What was the amendment adopted by the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Reducing the amount to $75 a month.

Mr. HOAR. Then I suggest that it is not in order, after "seventy-five dollars" has been inserted in the bill, to amend that by striking it out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator can make that motion in the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; I will withdraw the motion, and will move to reconsider the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, my father fought and died a private soldier for his country. My mother was left perhaps as needy and destitute as any widow of that great conflict. For almost thirty years, and down to extreme old age, she drew from this Government a pittance of $8 a month. I stand here to-day upon this floor, the son of that father and of that mother, deeply sensible of the scant and pitiable justice which has been done by this country to the survivors of the late war and to their widows and their orphans. But, sir, I am profoundly grateful to every man who fought that this Government might live. I have enjoyed and have shared the blessings and opportunities of the glorious Republic which they left to me, and I shall never stand upon this floor and seek to reduce any pension reported by the committee of this body to the widow of any man who fought for his country. I would gladly use the figure put in this pension bill as an argument why the pension to every other widow in this country should be increased. There has been scant justice done to the widows of the private soldiers, but has there been too great a measure of justice meted out to the widows of the officers, those distinguished men whose gallantry not alone, but whose military genius prevailed under Grant and Sherman and Sheridan against one of the most splendidly officered armies that the world has ever known? Rising here for the first time in my place in the Senate of my country, I go upon the record as being in favor of every pension to every widow of every soldier of the Republic, and as being opposed to any reduction in any amount which the committee of this body sees fit to recommend. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. ALLEN. I now move to amend the amendment by striking out "seventy-five" and inserting "fifty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to suggest to the Committee on Pensions that the better way is when it reports these bills to have the reports printed and placed upon the Calendar. Then every Senator who takes any interest in them may examine and understand them, and unless he has a valid objection no opposition will be made. I regret that the committee has commenced by asking the consideration of bills immediately after they have been reported to the Senate, when Senators have no opportunity of examining them or of considering the facts upon which they are based. I should much prefer that the committee would let this bill lie over until to-morrow, and let the report be printed so that we may see what it is. I hope that rule will be adopted hereafter. If a different course is pursued I shall have to object to the immediate consideration of such bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator knows it is not the policy of the committee to immediately call up these bills, but sometimes a member of the committee asks unanimous consent to call up a bill in which he is interested.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the members of the committee will not call up these bills out of their order. It is not a pleasant duty for a Senator to have to object every morning when these bills come up; but I give notice that, if I am present, unless they are purely exceptional cases, I shall object to the consideration of bills which have just been reported and about which we have had no opportunity of obtaining information.

Mr. VILAS. Has the report been read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report has not been read.

Mr. VILAS. I ask that the report may be read. If it is an exceptional case, I shall cheerfully vote for it; but if it is an ordinary case, we ought to follow the ordinary rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, this day submitted by Mr. LODGE:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1) granting a pension to Eva Davis Cogswell, have examined the same, and report, and refer to the following military record:

It is shown by the official records that William Cogswell was mustered into service as captain of Company C, Second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, May 25, 1861, to serve three years; was detailed as acting major of the regiment September 25, 1862; was mustered in as lieutenant-colonel February 28, 1863, to date October 23, 1862; as colonel, same regiment, July 11, 1863, to date June 25, 1863. Under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1884, and the acts amendatory thereof, he has been recognized by this Department as commissioned to the grade of colonel, Second Massachusetts Volunteers, to take effect from June 6, 1863. He was appointed brevet brigadier-general of volunteers, to rank from December 12, 1864, and commissioned as such January 12, 1865. By direction of the President he was assigned to duty as brevet brigadier-general of volunteers January 12, 1865, whereupon he was designated to command the Third Brigade, Third Division, Twentieth Army Corps, January 16, 1865. He assumed command of that brigade on the same day, and continued with the same until June 13, 1865, when the Twentieth Army Corps was discontinued. He was mustered out and honorably discharged the service as colonel, Second Regiment Massachusetts Infantry, and brevet brigadier-general of volunteers, July 24, 1865. During the period of his service this officer was almost continuously on active duty in the field with his successive commands.

On May 3, 1863, in the Chancellorsville campaign, near United Ford, Va., while lieutenant-colonel of the Second Massachusetts Infantry, he received a severe wound of the left arm, on account of which he was furloughed for thirty days on May 9, 1863.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment. Amend by striking out the words "one hundred," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seventy-five."

Mr. VILAS. I believe the ordinary rule in Senate bills is to award the widow of a brigadier-general a pension of $50.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that in answer to an inquiry I stated it as a matter of personal knowledge that there is no rule; that scores and scores of cases have been passed at $100, scores and scores of others at $75, and a great many at $50.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I believe I was upon the Committee on Pensions for six years. I do not think I was niggardly in my votes in giving pensions on that committee. But during the last three years I served on the committee I think the rule almost universally established in the committee was $50 a month for the widow of a brigadier-general. This rule was so well recognized that when an application came from my State in a very worthy case, the widow of an admiral, and I was asked to secure a pension of $100 a month for her, I refused to introduce the bill at that amount, stating the general consensus of opinion in the committee, and that I would only introduce a bill granting the rate of $50 a month, which I did, and the committee reported the bill favorably. I wish to say that I felt that that was a liberal amount, for the reason that the general pension laws of this country fix $72 as the limit of pensions for men who served in the ranks who are totally disabled and who absolutely need the attendance of a person to assist them in performing the usual and necessary duties of life.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from West Virginia will permit me, he will recall the circumstance that in the last Congress I made a report in favor of granting the widow of General Corse a pension of $100 a month, and it passed the Senate without a word of dissent from either the Republican or Democratic side.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am not speaking of the time to which the Senator from New Hampshire refers. I was not then on the committee. That was during the last Congress. I refer to the preceding Congress and to time antedating that period. For that reason I think that $50 a month is a liberal, fair pension to a widow when we allow only $72 to a person totally disabled by reason of injuries in the line of duty and requiring the assistance of an attendant.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, it does not occur to me that this case affords an occasion for a very great exhibition of patriotic fervor or devotion to the surviving soldiers of the war. I think no one here will hesitate to vote a fair and just pension in every case where a pension is due. At least, for myself, I shall always be ready, I trust, to support any just application for a pension.

But the element of unfairness which has crept into the distribution of pensions by reason of some special applications due to peculiar influence is a thing that touches pretty hardly upon the feelings of old soldiers. I think I know something of the sentiments which actuate them; and while in no case do they desire to abridge or diminish a fair allowance, they do feel that that allowance ought to be measured by some principles of justice as between different cases.

I confess that I hoped when I asked to have the report read that I should have heard something in it that would warrant me in feeling authorized to go beyond the ordinary allowance that is given to a soldier's widow, but all that the report shows is simply that in January, 1865, the last year of the war, General Cogswell became a brigadier-general, commanding a brigade a part of that time. What service he rendered I do not know, nor is it particularly material to this question. This pension is not to reward him for his services in any way. The pension proposed is to deal properly with his widow, and I hope she will be dealt with generously and fairly, but upon the same principles on which the widows of other brigadier-generals have been dealt with who have also rendered the service that belongs to their rank.

I do not discover that there is a word said in the report of any peculiar condition of necessity of Mrs. Cogswell. I do not discover that it is said in the report that there are any children or other persons a charge upon her, so that there ought to be a special or peculiar allowance for her. If any Senator knows of a reason why there should be an additional and peculiar allowance made in this case I shall be very glad to hear it, for I would rather vote for a liberal allowance than otherwise. But I do not wish to add another instance, if it can be prevented, to the discriminations which have been made most unjustly and most unfairly to the injury of the credit of the pension laws in this country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has asked why some statement was not made about the necessities of the widow. I will tell him. It was because the committee did not feel it necessary to drag such a matter as that into public discussion in the Senate. They had some feeling of delicacy in regard to that part of the case.

The Senator has also spoken about "peculiar influence." I do not know what he means by that phrase, but I will take this occasion to state to the Senate that Mrs. Cogswell has never said one syllable to me or to anyone, nor has any friend of hers spoken to me about this matter. She has never asked one dollar from the Government. She is left absolutely penniless. She is trying to get work. She has not come here to ask for money. It has been asked for her by the representatives of her State on this floor and on the floor of the other House, because they feel that it is not too much to give $75 a month to the widow of a distinguished soldier who died without any property after years of public services.

I had no desire to drag her or her affairs into this debate, but since it has been done by others, it is just as well that the Senate should know the facts. She is left with no money. She has asked for none. No friend has asked it for her. She has sought to get employment. I have asked for this money for her on my own motion alone, because I thought it was discreditable to leave the widow of a distinguished soldier like that without anything whatever from the Government.

I am amazed, Mr. President, at the attacks that have been made upon a helpless woman—implications that she ought to be earning her living instead of asking for money, when she has not asked for one dollar. I think Senators could be engaged in a better business than that. This pension is not excessive. When I laid the bill before the committee, I said that I asked nothing excessive; that I asked only what is usual, for I am a new member of that committee. The committee without a dissenting voice voted $75 as a reasonable pension for Mrs. Cogswell, based on pensions in similar cases. When the Senator from Wisconsin states that he sees nothing peculiar in that record which has been read, I will say to him that many men consider that a very brilliant record for the youngest brigadier, as I believe he was, in the American Army. He was in the service from the beginning to the end. He was always in the field. He served his country in civil life. He died honored by his fellow-citizens, with clean hands, and without a dollar, and we come now and ask for $75 a month for his widow. She does not ask it. The representatives of Massachusetts ask it for her.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I have stated and I want to repeat that since I have been a member of this body the pension allowed to widows of brigadier-generals in nine cases out of ten has been $50 a month. There have been but very few instances where the amount was any greater.

No one has made an attack upon this lady. I do not know of a Senator in this Chamber who has urged that she should be required to earn her living by the ordinary means open to a person to gain a livelihood. Certainly not one word of that kind has fallen from my lips, and I have not heard it from the lips of any other Senator upon this or the other side of the Chamber.

I feel perfectly willing to vote for a pension of $50 a month to this lady. I am informed that she is a lady about 50 years of age and in good health. It occurs to me that $50, under those circumstances, ought to take care of Mrs. Cogswell fairly well.

The Senator from Massachusetts refers to the distinguished services of General Cogswell, all of which I admit. But, Mr. President, it must be remembered that the opportunity to make provision for his family was very much greater than has been the opportunity of thousands and hundreds of thousands of private soldiers and noncommissioned officers. I have not heard the junior Senator from Massachusetts grow impassioned or scold in this Chamber on the subject of granting a pension to some private soldier or private soldier's widow. I have not heard him deliver a eulogy upon the services of the private soldiers and the noncommissioned officers. But as soon as it strikes the blue blood a little, then the junior Senator from Massachusetts undertakes to scold those of us on this side who refuse to adopt his views with reference to this matter.

I do not want my position to be misunderstood, I repeat, it is my sincere desire to see every meritorious soldier in this Union pensioned, and pensioned adequately. I want to see every meritorious soldier's widow and his dependent children pensioned adequately. But I can not for the life of me see the distinction that is made in this Chamber between the services of the man who carried his musket through the mud and in the rain and storm, who performed his duty upon the skirmish line, in the camp, and in the field, and the man who rode on horseback and happened to command the brigade of which the private soldier was a member.

There may be something for gentlemen to grow eloquent upon with reference to this matter; but it strikes me that it would be far more consistent with American principles and American sentiment to say that all men who performed equal service and who were equally meritorious, regardless of their position in the Army, should receive equal treatment in the receipt of pensions. I can not understand why the widow of a private soldier, struggling upon the prairies of Nebraska to raise a family of children, whose husband died as the result of exposure in the war or who was killed upon the field of battle, should be discriminated against and receive a pension of perhaps $15 or $20 a month, when some brigadier-general, who was doing staff duty and was perhaps 3 miles in the rear of the column when it was engaged, should receive fifty or seventy-five or one hundred dollars a month.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows of any such case as that? Did he ever hear of one?

Mr. ALLEN. Of what case?

Mr. HAWLEY. Such a case as he has just described.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not understand.

Mr. HAWLEY. That a general or an officer who did nothing but staff duty is getting a pension of $75 or $100 a month. He never heard of a case like that.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; I have seen cases of that kind.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish the Senator would bring the statistics, and while he is about it bring along statistics to show that the officers did not suffer a greater loss proportionately than the private soldiers. There is a variety of information he might bring which would be comfortable to himself.

Mr. ALLEN. No; I will not undertake to prove a negative. The dist nguished Senator from Connecticut made an assertion. He claims to be a lawyer. He knows the burden of proof is upon him, not upon me.

I will not speak disparagingly of these gentlemen; at least I do not mean to speak disparagingly of them. They were useful and necessary. But, Mr. President, they were no more necessary and not even as necessary as the private soldiers. I want to say to the Senator from Connecticut that the officers who rode in front of their lines upon a field of battle were not numerous during the last war. There was once in a while a fellow who was foolish enough to do it, but not many of them.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will allow me once more, I will not trespass much longer upon his time.

Mr. ALLEN. I say it was customary for the commander of an army embracing two or three corps to go to an elevated point where he could supervise the affairs of the battle, and where his staff officers were with him. Now, is there anything wrong in that statement?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator reproached the officers who did not ride in front of their commands. The brigadier-general would have rebuked with a good deal of vigorous language the foolish colonel who at the head of his men went about and ordered them to fire. So with every grade of officers. I have heard officers severely rebuked for being at the head of their places even more than I have heard them rebuked for being behind their places.

Mr. ALLEN. The conduct of different officers varied as much as did the officers themselves. I have seen men in front of their lines when I thought they ought to have been in the rear. I remember a distinguished general of our Army, a soldier of long and meritorious service, who now lives in Missouri, in the city of St. Louis, and his name has not fallen from the lips of any Senator upon the other side of the Chamber. He used to follow what, in my judgment, was the foolish practice of keeping between his lines and the lines of the enemy when the battle was going on. I thought his place was in the rear. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], as a man of experience, knows well that the services of those gentlemen varied just exactly as the services of other soldiers varied. Some of them were at the head of their columns, some in front, and some in the rear.

Now, what is the necessity of growing virtuously indignant over a motion to amend the pending bill? Nine-tenths of the pensions granted to the widows of brigadier-generals since I have been a member of this body have been at the rate of $50 per month, occasionally more.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me for a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. I will permit the Senator from New Hampshire to do anything.

Mr. HOAR. Then let us pass the bill without further debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope we shall soon come to a vote on the bill. I think there has been a disposition to criticise the action of the committee as at present organized, and I wish to state to the Senator from Nebraska that I hold in my hand a book containing the reports of the Committee on Pensions for the third session of the Fifty-third Congress, during which Congress the distinguished soldier and Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] was its chairman. The Senator from Wisconsin says he understands it to be the rule that we will grant $50 a month. I have stated otherwise, and I wish to call attention to the fact that within twenty pages of this book I find four cases where more than $50 a month was granted. The widow of Gen. Nathaniel P. Banks was granted $100 a month.

Mr. VILAS. He was a major-general.

Mr. GALLINGER. He was a major-general. A bill passed the Senate proposing to pension the widow of Gen. Samuel Sprigg Carroll at the rate of $75 a month; the widow of Rear-Admiral Samuel Powhatan Carter was granted $75 a month, and the widow of General Crittenden was voted $75 a month. There are four cases which I find in going over merely twenty pages of the reports. I have not time to look through the rest of the volume, but I stand upon the statement I made that there are scores and scores of precedents where we have granted $100 and $75 a month. I think I am safe in saying that the rule has been to grant $75 a month on the average. However, I shall look up the matter and present the result to the Senate at my convenience.

Mr. LINDSAY. I wish to state that General Crittenden was a major-general.

Mr. GALLINGER. Unquestionably that is true.

Mr. ALLEN. I have been speaking of the bills which have been passed granting pensions to the widows of brigadier-generals. I care not how much the chairman of the Committee on Pensions may examine the record, as he calls it. My distinct recollection is that in the majority of cases during the last Congress we amended the bill, making it $50. There are no peculiar or exceptional circumstances in the present case. This lady is in good health, she is comparatively young, and a pension of $50 seems to be adequate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to make a correction in a statement which I made. I stated that the widow of General Crittenden was granted $75 a month. I find she was granted $50 a month.

Mr. VILAS. General Crittenden was a major-general.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true.

Mr. PALMER. The Senate passed the bill at the rate of $100.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], who at present is out of the Chamber.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who is absent. Does his colleague know how he would vote if present?

Mr. GEAR. I think my colleague would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should vote "yea," and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. CULLOM'S name was called). I was requested to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I beg leave to state that I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], who is out of the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], but I have not the slightest doubt as to how he would vote on this question. He would vote "nay," and I shall therefore vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DUBOIS (after having voted in the negative). I desire to ask whether the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that an arrangement has been made whereby my colleague [Mr. MANTLE], who is absent, will stand paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. I therefore desire to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY (after having voted in the affirmative). I am informed that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has not voted. I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, and will therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DUBOIS. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] that he transfer his pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], which will allow both of us to vote.

Mr. BERRY. Certainly. That is entirely satisfactory. My vote can stand.

Mr. DUBOIS. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allen,	Chilton,	Kyle,	Tillman,

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 1546) for the relief of Levi Stoltz; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 1547) to extend the jurisdiction of the United States circuit court of appeals, eighth circuit, over certain suits now pending therein on appeal and writ of error from the United States court in the Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DANIEL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1548) for the relief of Alexander Stoddart, of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1549) for the relief of the heirs of the late Mrs. Mary Ann Randolph Custis Lee, of Fairfax County, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1550) for the relief of Arthur Connell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1553) to increase the pension of Patrick Culhan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON introduced a bill (S. 1554) for the relief of Clinton F. Pulsifer, of the State of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 1555) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States revenue cutter Gallatin off the coast of Massachusetts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1556) granting a pension to George W. Vaughn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEAR (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1557) for the appointment of commissioners to effect an adjustment between the United States and the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company in relation to certain bonds issued by the United States in aid of the construction of said railroad; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 1558) granting a pension to Benjamin W. Marshall; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 1559) to complete the military record of James A. Sams, and for an honorable discharge; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 1560) to regulate the procedure in pension cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1561) to amend section 673 of chapter 9 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1562) amending section 604 of chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1563) to grant an increase of pension to Chester Ogden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 1564) for the relief of John Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 1565) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Howland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1566) making an appropriation toward the construction of a dry dock at the Mare Island Navy-Yard, Vallejo, Cal.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 1567) providing for State regulation of railroads incorporated under the laws of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. ROACH (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1568) to provide for the care and cure of inebriates in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 53) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to Rawlins Post, No. 23, Grand Army of the Republic, at Stockton, Cal., certain cannon, etc.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRYE (for Mr. MORGAN) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 54) authorizing the National Dredging Company to proceed with the work of dredging the channel of Mobile Harbor, under the direction of the Secretary of War; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. LODGE. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 1159) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses. I ask that the proposed amendment be read and referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read, in the absence of objection.

Mr. TURPIE. I object to the reading.

Mr. LODGE. I desired simply to have the amendment read for information and that it might be printed in the RECORD; but as the Senator from Indiana has thoughtfully and courteously objected to the reading, let the amendment lie on the table for the present. I shall call it up to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will lie on the table, and it will be printed under the rule.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KYLE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 630) regulating the procedure in criminal causes in the States of North and South Dakota; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the amendment reported from the Committee on Finance to the bill (H. R. 2904) to maintain and protect the coin redemption fund, and to authorize the issue of certificates of indebtedness to meet temporary deficiencies of revenue; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

FINANCIAL POLICY.

Mr. MILLS. I submit a series of resolutions which I ask may be read and laid upon the table until to-morrow, when, after the usual morning business, I give notice that I shall ask the permission of the Senate to submit some remarks upon the subject.

The resolutions were read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, first. That the United States legal-tender notes now outstanding should not be retired, canceled, or funded into interest-bearing bonds, but when received into the Treasury they should be paid out again and kept in circulation.

Second. That the whole of the silver bullion now in the Treasury should be coined as rapidly as possible. The coins from the seigniorage should be paid out in the current expenditures and the other in the redemption of the Treasury notes issued on its purchase.

Third. That when from any cause there should be a deficit in the Treasury, the Secretary of the Treasury should issue legal-tender notes sufficient in amount to meet all demands for current expenditure, and when said notes are returned into the Treasury they should be destroyed.

Fourth. That all laws now existing which authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell interest-bearing bonds of the Government should be repealed.

Fifth. That it is not only the established policy of the United States to keep all kinds of money issued under their authority at par, but it is also the established policy of the United States to require all creditors, public and private, to receive the gold and silver coins in payment of all obligations where the terms of the contract stipulate for coin payment, and that it is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay United States notes when presented in both gold and silver coins.

Sixth. That we repudiate the idea that a public debt is a public blessing; on the contrary, it is a burden which the interests of the people and the preservation of the public credit demand should be removed as rapidly as practicable.

Seventh. The sinking fund established by law should be rigidly complied with, and the amount now provided should be reenforced so that the whole interest-bearing debt should be extinguished as rapidly as possible without imposing unnecessary burdens upon the resources of the country.

NAVY RETIRED LIST.

Mr. TURPIE (by request) submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs ascertain if any officers of the Navy are being held as on the retired list in contravention of the laws.

LOUISIANA LAKE LANDS.

Mr. BLANCHARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether the lands constituting the beds of Cross Lake, Soda Lake, Clear Lake, Ferry Lake, and Caddo Lake, extending from the Texas State line to or near the city of Shreveport, La., are claimed by the Department as the property of the United States, and to this end to cause to be examined the character of said lands, and make inquiry in regard to said lakes, with the view of determining whether the area covered by them was land conveyed, or intended to be conveyed, in the opinion of the Department, to the State of Louisiana, under the terms of the swamp-land acts of 1849 and 1850.

Resolved further, That the area embraced in the beds of said lakes be approximately stated in acres for each lake; also what part, if any, of the beds of said lakes is embraced within the public surveys of the United States, and the extent of the area of said lakes not included in any public survey.

Resolved further, That the Senate be informed whether or not the beds of said lakes, or any parts thereof, are claimed by the State of Louisiana, the Caddo Parish levee board, or by private parties, and if so, under color of what authority claim, conveyance, or title; also whether any parts of the beds of said lakes have been entered upon, inclosed, or otherwise taken possession of.

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.

Mr. KYLE. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Committee to Establish the University of the United States 1,000 copies of Miscellaneous Document No. 222, being a memorial in regard to a national university.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule the Chair thinks the resolution should go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. KYLE. I think it comes within the limitation of expense which is permitted for printing to be done for a committee.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

DISTRICT REAL-ESTATE ASSESSMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. Res. 25) to extend the time for making an assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent that that joint resolution may now be put upon its passage, the Senate having yesterday passed a similar joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. KYLE. I should like the chairman of the committee to explain the joint resolution. I should like to understand it before voting upon it.

Mr. MCMILLAN. A similar joint resolution extending the time for making assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia was passed by the Senate yesterday, and this joint resolution, being in the same terms, has been passed by the House and sent over to us. I therefore ask that the House resolution may be considered and passed, and then I shall move to indefinitely postpone the joint resolution heretofore passed by the Senate.

Mr. KYLE. I asked to have the joint resolution which is now pending before the Senate explained.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is simply to extend time for assessing property in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to understand why that is to be done.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is simply to give a little longer time to make the assessment for the purposes of taxation.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator has not explained it; nevertheless, I presume the joint resolution is all right.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I now ask that the votes by which the Senate yesterday ordered to a third reading and passed the joint resolution (S. R. 3) to extend the time for making an assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia be reconsidered and that the joint resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to inquire if the joint resolution which I presented some days ago is on the table so that it can be called up? If it is in that position, I should be very glad to have it laid before the Senate. I think it is resting on the table for further action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the resolution is on the table, and presumes it went over under the rule, subject to be called up.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well.

SAC, FOX, AND IOWA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 491.

Mr. CALL. I do not object to the Senator's request; but there is a resolution lying on the table, subject to be called up at any time in the morning hour, and I now give notice, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] being present, that I shall ask the Senate to-morrow morning to take up for consideration the resolution appointing a special committee to investigate the influence of corporations in elections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 941) granting to the Atchison and Nebraska Railroad Company and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, its lessee in perpetuity, the right of way over a part of the Sac and Fox and Iowa Indian Reservation in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

Mr. CULLOM. Has that bill been considered and reported by a committee?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; it has been unanimously reported with an amendment by the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 1, line 24, after the word "within," to fill the blank by inserting the word "ninety"; so as to read:

Provided, That this grant is upon condition that the grantees hereof shall, within ninety days after the approval of this act, pay to said allottees or their heirs, or to a parent or guardian of any minor allottee or heir, or to the Indian agent at the Pottawatomie and Great Nemaha Agency for their use at the rate of $25 per acre for the land hereby granted; and the receipts of any such persons, acknowledged in the manner provided for the acknowledgment on instruments conveying real estate in the State where said land is located, filed with the officer keeping the public record of land titles in the county in which said land is located, shall be evidence of such payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I should like the Senator to give a very brief explanation of the purport of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I can explain the bill, I think, in a word. This railroad runs along the valley of the Missouri River. The old right of way has been encroached upon by high water within the last few months, and the railroad company has had to move the right of way and track back inland to prevent future encroachments and to enable the company to operate its road. As to the new right of way, the price per acre has been agreed upon between the railroad company and the Indians, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated in a special letter written in April last that the price agreed upon is a fair compensation for the land.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SILVER COINAGE AND COIN REDEMPTION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2904) to maintain and protect the coin redemption fund, and to authorize the issuance of certificates of indebtedness to meet temporary deficiencies of revenue.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Finance, upon which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. I gave notice that I should offer an amendment to the substitute reported by the committee on this bill. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be read. I only wish to offer one amendment at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment reported by the committee by striking out section 4, and in lieu thereof inserting:

SEC. 4. That the issuance of interest-bearing bonds of the United States for any purpose whatever, without further authority of Congress, is hereby prohibited; and that the Secretary of the Treasury when redeeming United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, and Treasury notes issued under the provisions of the act of July 14, 1890, and when liquidating either the interest or principal of any of the Government's coin obligations is hereby directed to make such payment in gold coin whenever the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold is less than the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver, and to continue to pay in such gold coin until the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold shall be equal to the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver; but when the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold shall be greater than the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver, he shall pay the interest and the principal of said coin obligations as they become due in silver coin, and continue to pay the same in silver coin until the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver shall be equal to the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold, and said notes, commonly called greenbacks, when so redeemed, shall be reissued, as provided by the act of May 31, 1878.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, certainly every man who is opposed to further increasing the public debt favors this amendment. And I can not see how even the men who favor a further issue of bonds can oppose it. The effect of it is simply to prohibit the President from issuing more bonds without the advice and consent of Congress. I deny that he has that power now, but inasmuch as he claims he has that power, and inasmuch as some Senators on this floor admit the same, while many others deny or question the authority, we should promptly pass this amendment and settle the controversy. If the President has power to issue the bonds which he has already sold, under this law of 1875, then he has the power to issue a thousand millions of such bonds without the advice or consent of Congress. Such tremendous and dangerous power can not safely be put in the hands of any one man. It is the power to bankrupt a nation at one stroke of the pen.

The power to control our finances was vested by the Constitution not in the President, but in Congress, and we should lose no time in assuming our sworn and constitutional duty in this respect. The language of the Constitution is as follows:

Congress shall have power to borrow money on the credit of the United States.

But nowhere does it give that power to the President, and nowhere does it authorize us to delegate that power to the President. It is the duty of Congress to deal with these questions. It is the duty of Congress to decide, first, whether or not bonds shall be issued to borrow money, and if they are to be issued it is the duty of Congress to determine how and under what conditions.

I offered a bill containing this same provision before the President made his last call for bonds. If Congress had promptly passed it then $100,000,000 of debt, with the interest that will accumulate, would have been saved the American people. We do not know what day or what hour the President may see fit to again burden the people with debt without their consent or the consent of their representatives in Congress.

If we are opposed to bonds let us be honest and say so; let us pass this amendment, and do it now. Neither the Democratic party nor the Republican party can escape responsibility by claiming not to have a majority of this body. I pledge six People's Party votes in this Chamber to either party that will vote to stop the further issue of bonds, and six votes will give to either side a majority. In fact, either party can have a majority in this body any hour that they desire to pass any law in the interests of the American people. The Democratic party had a majority in both Houses of the last Congress, and yet they sat still and saw the President issue over $162,000,000 of interest-bearing bonds without raising a protest or passing any law to prohibit it. Only the other day we were confronted with the remarkable spectacle of Republican leaders criticising the President in his course. They seem to be criticising him and the Democratic party for having indorsed and pursued, in the main, the financial policy fastened upon this country by the Republican party, and when they were asked to go squarely on record in favor of bonds or against bonds on an amendment which I offered to the resolution submitted by the Senator from West Virginia we found it impossible to bring the question to a vote.

This body did not act at that time. The next day the President issued a call for bids on the $100,000,000 bond issue, and he called it "a popular loan." The distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] showed conclusively in his masterly speech a few days ago that the terms of the call are such that it is next to impossible for the people to subscribe or pay for the bonds. The denomination of the bonds is too large; the price at which the bonds are to be sold is not fixed; any bid may be refused, and, besides, no kind of money will be taken for the bonds except gold, while there is probably not as much as $100,000,000 of gold in circulation among the people of the whole country. Everybody admits that the gold is cornered by a syndicate.

What would Senators say if the President was to advertise to sell bonds for wheat only, and they were to discover that I had a corner on the wheat of the country? The people are aroused, and justly so, against such conduct. The President seems to be smarting under their criticism, and now there comes in the papers a letter from the President to a Senator on this floor, in which the President indignantly denies that he ever thought of having anything to do with the bond syndicate. Why should the President now grow so indignant and loudly deny that he was about to do an evil thing, when he did the same evil thing less than a year ago, in February, 1895? But, let that pass. The chief wrong that he is committing against the people of the United States is in issuing bonds at all. The burden will be just as great upon the people, and the interest will be just as hard to pay, whether it is paid to a syndicate, or to the bank, or to anyone else.

On yesterday the New York World, which has been severely criticising the President, came out with a great flourish of trumpets and said that the gold ring had been whipped and that the people had triumphed. The World knows that this is not true. The World knows that whenever bonds are issued at all that the gold ring triumphs and that the people have been whipped and robbed. The World, while pretending to be the friend of the people, is really trying to deceive them; it is trying to cover up the main issue and to call the attention of the people from the overshadowing wrong of issuing more bonds in times of peace. The World's criticism of the President means no more than the criticism of certain Republican gold Senators on this floor.

Now, let us see what this Republican criticism of the President means. Their position, as stated by the distinguished Senator from Ohio and others, is that all of the financial troubles of our Government are due to the want of sufficient revenue and to the fact that the balance of trade is against this country, all of which they charge up to the Wilson-Gorman tariff bill. They say that a tariff bill furnishing sufficient revenue would be a complete remedy.

If this is so, then, from even a Republican standpoint, the further issue of bonds is unnecessary and unqualifiedly wrong. If the Republicans have faith in their remedy, then why are they not ready and anxious to vote for this provision to prevent the further issue of bonds? Certainly they are not in favor of borrowing money and piling up a still larger interest-bearing debt unless it is absolutely necessary. And besides, if the troubles of this Government are due to the want of sufficient money—that is, if the expenses of the Government are greater than its income—then why do not our Republican friends bring in a bill to cut down expenses instead of a bill to increase taxes? Taxes are already too high. Instead of bringing in a revenue bill to increase taxes, why do they not bring in a bill that will equitably adjust the tariff taxes and that will justly distribute the incidental protection as between the different sections and the various industries of each section? Why not take some of the protection from those who already hold the lion's share and give it to those in the South and the West who produce the raw materials? This is the position of the People's Party, and it is just.

But let us return to the bond question. What is the Democratic position? The Democratic President and leading Democratic Senators upon this floor say, on the other hand, that there is revenue enough now for the needs of the Government, and that an increased revenue, even to double the necessities of the Government, would not relieve the present embarrassment of the Treasury, because the taxes and duties levied by the Government are not paid in gold. They say that the whole trouble is due to the want of gold, and that, therefore, they must issue bonds to buy gold.

Now, if the Republican party admits that the Administration is justified in paying the coin obligations of the Government in gold alone and in redeeming the greenbacks and United States notes in gold alone they will be forced to admit that the Democratic position is correct. And the Republicans are forced to admit this unless they have the patriotism to confess their errors and mend their ways, because it was the Republican party that inaugurated this policy of paying the coin obligations of the Government in gold alone in defiance of law. This is what Mr. Carlisle, the Secretary of the Treasury, is doing to-day, and when the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] was Secretary of the Treasury he set him this example. The fact is that the leaders of both parties are to-day in favor of issuing interest-bearing bonds. Not a single protest has been raised on either side of this Chamber by the Representatives of either the Democratic party or of the Republican party against this policy of piling up an interest-bearing debt in time of peace. They have simply been fighting a sham battle over this question—quibbling as to details and sparring for party advantage. The Republicans have tried to make party capital by criticising simply some of the details about how the bonds should be issued. The main question is whether the bonds should be issued at all or not. Both the Democratic party and the Republican party are on the same side of this question, both are in favor of increasing the interest-bearing debt of the country, and the policy of both parties means ruin to the productive industries of the nation.

I repeat they both favor the great wrong of issuing interest-bearing bonds in time of peace; they differ simply as to the details of committing the wrong. Both sides unite in refusing to do right; they differ simply as to the most plausible method of doing wrong. One party would stab you in the back; the other criticises that method of stabbing you and insists that you should be stabbed under the fifth rib. Both would stab you, both would murder you. They quibble, however, about the method of committing the murder; that is all. The Senator from Ohio believes in hanging, the Senator from New York believes in electrocution. The difference between these two parties on this great question is the difference between tweedledee and tweedledum—if one side has its way, bonds will be issued in tweedledee fashion; if the other side has its way, bonds will be issued in tweedledum fashion. They are both in favor of bonds, more bonds! More bonds! They are both for piling up the debt of the nation to be paid by future generations; they are both for contracting the currency to curse the present generation. The policy of either party means falling prices, stagnation of business and the paralysis of every productive industry.

I appeal to both sides to reverse their policies and to stop this great wrong. Your crimes against the American people have been great and grievous, but it is never too late to mend. I call upon you to do it now. Let either of the old parties bring in a bill that will stop these wrongs and settle our present difficulties with equal justice to all sides, and the People's Party will at once join you in such laudable and patriotic efforts. We will even sacrifice our party organization if by so doing we can save the nation from British rule and restore prosperity to our people. The great majority of the voters of the Democratic and Republican parties are opposed to this wrong. Every member of the People's Party is opposed to it. If the wishes and demands of the great majority of the American people were heard in this Chamber as the wishes of Wall street are heeded in the White House and too often in Congress, this amendment repealing the law under which the President claims the right to issue bonds would be passed in an hour.

I said above that if the policy which both the Democratic and Republican parties have adopted in administering the finances of this country is correct, that then it is clear that bonds must now be issued to buy gold. Let us see what that policy is that has raised all of this cry about gold leaving the country and the necessity for the Treasury to keep gold in its vaults.

In the first place, this Government owes a very large debt. A part of this debt was contracted during the great war. The Government issued its interest-bearing bonds to raise money. The Government took any kind of money it could get for these bonds—and some of them were sold at as low as 47 cents on the dollar. The Government promised to pay these bonds in lawful money—gold, silver, greenbacks, or any kind of money. When the war closed, these bonds were almost doubled in value, because they were at once worth par everywhere. But the holders of these bonds were not satisfied with having made 100 per cent out of the misfortunes of the Government. They at once began to lobby Congress to change the contract which the Government had made with them and make the bonds payable in coin instead of in lawful money.

Through the influence, largely I may say, of these bondholders, a bill was passed by Congress in 1879 pledging the faith of this Government to pay all of its obligations in coin, and so careful were these bondholders to clinch the hard bargain which they were driving with the Government that they insisted, when the act of July 14, 1870, was passed, upon having the law to state that the bonds should be paid in coin of the present standard value. Not only this, but they insisted that a statement of this fact should be put across the face of every bond. By this act the Government deliberately changed its own contract and promised to pay to the bondholders more than was due. Besides, every bond issued since 1870 also contains the provision which I have quoted above—that is, that the bonds "shall be paid in coin of the present standard value of July 14, 1870."

But the bondholders were not satisfied. Heartless greed is never satisfied. They began to ask for payment of principal and interest in gold; in fact, they began to demand gold and say that they had a legal right to demand it since the passage of the act of 1873 demonetizing silver. To refute this claim and demand of the bondholders and to forever put to rest any question about this matter, Congress passed, in 1878, a resolution which will be found on page 564 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 7, part 1, Forty-fifth Congress, second session.

I will not have the resolution read, because the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] read it only a few days since, and the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] read it again on yesterday. Every Senator knows what the law is and is thoroughly familiar with the provisions of this resolution, but I hope that every man who speaks on this question will read it or put it in his remarks, so that the people may know what the law is and be able to judge whether or not their trusted agents obey or violate this law. When the people know the facts, they will condemn some men who now hold and abuse their confidence.

I ask permission to print the resolution as part of my remarks in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment, in coin or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas, at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars, of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

Here is the vote in both the Senate and House on that resolution. I ask leave to print it in my remarks in full.

Two votes were taken on the passage of the foregoing resolution, the first on the resolution and the second on the preamble. The vote on the resolution was as follows:

It will be observed that the resolution passed by over a two-thirds vote in both Houses. It will also be observed that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] voted in favor of this resolution, and also the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] were paired in favor of it. This resolution passed here, as I have said, January 25, 1878, and the other House passed it by a vote of 189 against 79 January 28, a few days afterwards. Among those in the House who voted in favor of this resolution were John G. Carlisle, the present Secretary of the Treasury; ROGER Q. MILLS, who now holds a seat in this Chamber; William M. Springer, of Illinois, and ex-Secretary of the Treasury Charles Foster, of Ohio. There we have the present Secretary of the Treasury voting for it and an ex-Secretary who preceded him also voting for it. They both understood what the law was and voted for this resolution when they were in Congress. They both violated this same law afterwards when they held the office of Secretary of the Treasury. They can never explain their conduct to the satisfaction of the American people.

It will be seen that this resolution not only recites the laws relating to the issue of bonds and the payment of the same, which laws, on their face, are perfectly plain to the most ordinary mind that every obligation of this Government was payable either in silver coin or gold coin, but in addition this resolution interprets these laws, if they need interpretation, and says emphatically that every obligation of this Government is payable in silver if it is to the interest or pleasure of this Government to so pay them. There has been but one law relating to this matter passed since 1878, and that was the act of 1890, which expressly makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury in paying these coin obligations to exercise the option which the Government reserves to pay these obligations in either coin and to pay them out so as to maintain the parity between the two metals.

And thus the matter stands to-day, that every obligation which this Government owes, except a few gold certificates, is payable, at the option of this Government, in either gold coin or in silver coin of the same standard value as that in use and authorized by the Government on July 14, 1870. But, strange to say, for some reason beyond human comprehension, Mr. Carlisle, the present Secretary of the Treasury, refuses to exercise this option on behalf of his own Government, which he has sworn to support, but pays out gold alone and at the option of the creditor. He did this until he drained the Treasury of gold, and then, instead of exercising the option which it was his duty to use in the interest of his Government and the people, and to pay out silver coin which he had in the Treasury, he proceeds to issue more bonds to buy gold, simply because the bondholders demanded gold.

That this is a betrayal of the high trust which he holds, it seems to me, should be plain and conclusive to every fair and unprejudiced mind of even ordinary intelligence.

It can not be claimed by anyone that any bondholder has ever had any reason to believe that he had any legal right to demand payment in gold. Not only is the existence of our statutes on this question sufficient notice to them and to all the world that these bonds may be paid in silver, but when the President made his bond deal with the syndicate in February, 1895, he sent a special message to Congress, under date of February 8, 1895, and urged this body to authorize him to issue gold bonds, saying that if the purchasers of these bonds could know that they would receive payment in gold that he could sell the bonds for $16,000,000 more than he could get for them as coin bonds.

I call special attention to the following paragraph of the message, which I ask to have read by the Secretary. Let him read the part that is marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

> The privilege is especially reserved to the Government to substitute at par within ten days from this date, in lieu of the 4 per cent coin bonds, other bonds in terms payable in gold and bearing only 3 per cent interest, if the issue of the same should in the meantime be authorized by the Congress.
> The arrangement thus completed which, after careful inquiry, appears in present circumstances and considering all the objects desired to be the best attainable, develops such a difference in the estimation of investors between bonds made payable in coin and those specifically made payable in gold in favor of the latter, as is represented by three-fourths of a cent in annual interest. In the agreement just concluded the annual saving in interest to the Government, if 3 per cent gold bonds should be substituted for 4 per cent coin bonds under the privilege reserved, would be $539,159, amounting in thirty years, or at the maturity of the coin bonds, to $16,174,770.
> Of course there never should be a doubt in any quarter as to the redemption in gold of the bonds of the Government which are made payable in coin. Therefore the discrimination in the judgment of investors between our bond obligations payable in coin and those specifically made payable in gold is very significant. It is hardly necessary to suggest that whatever may be our views on the subject, the sentiments or preferences of those with whom we must negotiate in disposing of our bonds for gold are not subject to our dictation.

Mr. BUTLER. The President of the United States in that document admits that this great Government is in the hands of and at the mercy of these gold gamblers. That is no doubt true with Grover Cleveland in the White House; but that such a humiliating condition could exist if we had an Andrew Jackson for President every true American will indignantly deny.

But what I wish to call special attention to is that in the very contract which the President then made with the gold trust there is a distinction made between a gold bond and a coin bond to an amount exceeding $16,000,000.

Now, if these bondholders were willing to give a certain sum for this issue of bonds, providing they were to be payable in gold, but were willing to give and did give $16,174,770 less because they were not to be payable in gold, then I wish to ask any intelligent man in what money should these bonds be paid?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If they should be paid in gold would they not on their own confession and their own admission receive a bonus of just that amount more than they say they are themselves entitled to?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly. That is plain to any man of ordinary intelligence. I am sorry that our Secretary of the Treasury and our President can not see it. Their stupidity in this, as in other matters, has already cost the people millions of dollars, and almost bankrupted the nation.

Mark you, the bondholders offered a gold price for these bonds and then offered a price $16,174,770 less as a coin price, which they said meant silver. Therefore, I say that there is no legal or moral obligation of this Government to pay these bonds in gold, or any part of them in gold, but it has every legal and moral right, and it is the duty of this Government, to pay every dollar of them, principal and interest, under the circumstances. in silver, and I challenge any Senator on this floor to contradict the correctness of this statement.

A few days ago the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], in a speech on this floor, attempted to justify the Administration in pursuing this sucidal course. Now, I would like to ask him a question, or, rather, to put a plain, simple, business proposition to him. It is this: Suppose on January 1, 1895, I had given my note to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], in which I promised to pay him on January 1, 1896, either 1,000 bushels of wheat or 2,000 bushels of corn at my option. Suppose on the 1st day of June my business called me to Europe, and, knowing that I could not return before the 1st of January, that I had asked the Senator from New York to act as my friend and trusted agent, and to pay this debt for me on the 1st of January, in the manner that would be most advantageous to me. Of course, I would have called his attention to the fact that my crop had not been harvested, that I did not know how my yield of corn or wheat would be, but that I feared that my wheat crop was short. Now, let us suppose that my corn crop was a bountiful one, but that my wheat crop was a failure. I want to ask the Senator from New York whether, under these conditions, he would have paid my debt to the Senator from Ohio in the corn which I had in my barn in abundance, or would he have mortgaged my farm to raise money with which to buy wheat to pay the debt?

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator want an answer to that long and complicated question now?

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator can use his own pleasure, but I would be glad to hear from him now.

Mr. HILL. I have forgotten what the first part of the question was.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the way with these gold bugs. They excuse their wrongdoing by ignorance and want of memory. [Laughter.] That is the only excuse for their sins of omission and commission.

Mr. HILL. I hardly think the Senator from North Carolina can expect me right off to answer a long question that takes about one page of recital—recital of the ridiculous fact that the Senator from Ohio would be apt to take the Senator's note for any very large amount.

Mr. BUTLER. Unless it was payable in gold.

Mr. HILL. Well, if payable in any way, possibly. There are too many assumptions in it, and it requires rather too much deliberation to answer it offhand in a reasonable time.

Mr. BUTLER. I will give the Senator from New York an opportunity to think over it and give the answer at his leisure.

Mr. HILL. It does not require very much time, but I hardly think I will indulge myself now to answer the question.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I will proceed to say what I think the Senator would and should do as my trusted friend. The fact that the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. HILL. The Senator can answer it himself if he wants to. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not catch the Senator's remark.

Mr. HILL. I say the Senator can proceed to answer it himself if he so desires.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from New York will have full opportunity to correct my statement as to how he would act if I do not state it correctly. I will state what it would be his duty to do, and leave it for him to say whether or not he would do his duty.

No doubt the Senator from Ohio would demand payment in wheat, but you would not for a moment consider his demand. You would call his attention to the letter of the contract and insist on paying him according to the contract, in the manner most advantageous to me. Especially would you do this if you had learned that the Senator from Ohio had cornered all of the wheat in the country, and besides had nearly every other farmer in the country in debt to him on the same kind of notes and was trying to force payment from them all in wheat, when there was no wheat to be had except you purchased it from him and at a price double what it was when the debt was made.

I say that if you had given up the option which I had in my contract and had mortgaged my farm to buy wheat at an enormously increased price, everybody would say that you were either a fit subject for the lunatic asylum or that you had been improperly influenced by a pecuniary consideration or otherwise by the Senator from Ohio. In short, your conduct would be infamous. It is true that the Senator from Ohio might threaten that he would ruin my credit if you did not pay my debt in wheat as he demanded, but you would promptly answer him that neither he nor anyone else could ruin my credit as long as I was able to pay my debts according to the contract and still have corn left in abundance in my barns.

You would furthermore tell him promptly that the surest way of ruining my credit would be by mortgaging my farm to buy wheat at a 100 per cent advance in price and thereby discriminating against the corn, the property which I had, and causing it to fall in price. The difference would be a man out of debt with plenty of means for support, or deeply in debt, paying twice as much as the value received, and with the property that he had left depreciated in value on account of the discrimination.

In case I pursued such a short-sighted and foolish policy I would find myself at the end of the next year, when the mortgage on my farm came due, forced to give another mortgage to buy more wheat at a still further advanced price to pay the debt. Thus, year after year, though my fields teemed with corn in abundance, I would be forced to plaster fresh mortgages upon mortgages on my farm until the mortgages amounted to more than the value thereof. Where would my credit be then?

Now, this is exactly what our Government is doing to-day. We are issuing bonds—putting a mortgage upon this country to buy gold to pay a debt when we have the option of paying that debt in silver. This policy was inaugurated by the Republican party, not only without shadow of law, but in defiance of law. The Democratic party denounced this policy and denounced it justly, and promised the people to put a stop to it. The Democratic party came into power, but it has adopted the Republican policy, which leads to bankruptcy and ruin. Both old parties have betrayed their trusts to the American people. They stand to-day hand in hand, mortgaging the property and liberty of this country away to foreign gamblers and speculators. You call Benedict Arnold a traitor. He surrendered but one army post to Great Britain. What will you say of those who are trying to surrender the whole American continent to Great Brltain?

But the Secretary of the Treasury says that the greatest danger in our currency system now is the greenbacks. He says that those who want to raid the Treasury and deplete it of its gold gather up greenbacks and come to the Treasury and demand gold. I want to ask what right they have to demand gold, and what right has he to pay gold. I want to ask if these greenbacks are not coin obligations, every one of them payable in silver at the option of the Government. If the Secretary would redeem the greenbacks in silver, if he would do his duty under the law, this raid upon the Treasury would stop, and stop at once. I challenge any Senator on this floor to contradict this statement. In short, the Secretary of the Treasury has the option of redeeming every one of these notes in either gold or silver coin, and, therefore, if any speculator or capitalist gets a single dollar of gold out of the Treasury it is the fault of the Secretary, who is the sworn officer of the Government to protect it; and it is his fault alone.

This is the same endless chain that we hear so much about. There could be no endless chain without the consent and connivance of the Treasury Department. How is it worked? The Secretary of the Treasury proposes to issue bonds to buy gold; the speculators, who are to get the bonds, gather up $50,000,000 of greenbacks, go to the Treasury, and demand $50,000,000 in gold for them.

Is the Secretary bound to pay them gold? No. But he does pay them gold, the very article that he is trying to get into the Treasury. The speculator receives the gold and then hands the same gold back over the same counter for $50,000,000 of bonds. What is the result of this transaction? The Government has handed its gold across the counter and taken the same gold back again, and therefore has not a single dollar more of gold than it had before. But it has something else. It has a debt of $50,000,000, and the interest commences from that hour and grows day and night. Yes, a $50,000,000 debt and not a single thing under heaven to show for it. That is financiering. If that is not incompetency, then, in the language of the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], it must be something worse, which he called "dishonesty."

This is the endless chain, this is the folly, if not the crime, that our Government is guilty of; this is the way that our debt is piled up without receiving anything in return therefor. This is the way that the people are robbed by their own officers for the benefit of the speculators and gold gamblers. In short, this whole trouble, this whole cry about gold going out of the country, this whole clamor about bonds, is due almost entirely to the willful and persistent violation of law by the officers of this Government. They act as if they were agents for the gold combine instead of the trusted agents and servants of the people. Let the Secretary of the Treasury commence to-day and redeem the greenbacks and United States notes and pay the principal and interest on the coin obligations of this Government according to the letter and spirit of the law and all of these dark troubles that are now hovering over our Government will vanish as fog before a rising sun.

Inasmuch as the Secretary of the Treasury has not obeyed the law and used the legal option of the Government in the interests of the people, I have offered the amendment to the bill which was read at the beginning of my remarks.

I ask that the amendment be read again, and I call special attention to the last division of it.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the issuance of interest-bearing bonds of the United States for any purpose whatever, without further authority of Congress, is hereby prohibited; and that the Secretary of the Treasury when redeeming United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, and Treasury notes issued under the provisions of the act of July 14, 1890, and when liquidating either the interest or principal of any of the Government's coin obligations is hereby directed to make such payment in gold coin whenever the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold is less than the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver, and to continue to pay in such gold coin until the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold shall be equal to the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver; but when the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold shall be greater than the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver, he shall pay the interest and the principal of said coin obligations as they become due in silver coin, and continue to pay the same in silver coin until the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver shall be equal to the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold, and said notes, commonly called greenbacks, when so redeemed, shall be reissued, as provided by the act of May 31, 1878.

Mr. BUTLER. The provisions of this section are perfectly simple and plain. It simply directs the Secretary of the Treasury, in express terms, with no option, to do what everybody thought he or any patriot would do in exercising the option of the Government in paying our coin obligations. The law expressly declares that he shall use this option to keep gold and silver at a parity. If that law means anything it means that whenever, for any cause, there is a greater strain on gold—that is, a greater demand for gold than for silver—that then he shall use the Government's option to pay our coin obligations in silver, and, on the other hand, whenever silver is scarce, whenever there is a greater demand for silver and the price goes up, that then he shall equalize the demand for the two metals by paying our coin obligations in gold and continue the strain on gold until the two metals come back to a parity.

I will answer here a question asked me by a distinguished citizen a few days ago. He asked why I insisted on putting this provision on the bond bill along with a provision reported by the committee providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver. That gentleman, whose name I shall not call, rather chided me, and said, "You and every other advocate of free silver all over the world have been claiming that the free and unlimited coinage of silver on equal terms with gold would bring silver to a parity with gold; that is, have claimed that 412½ grains of silver would always practically be worth as much as 25.8 grains of gold." That is true provided that there are no other laws, or conditions created by law, to artificially disturb this parity.

I will illustrate. We can coin gold and silver on equal terms, but the Secretary of the Treasury can send silver to a premium or gold to a premium, just as he chooses, by an improper use of the option which is vested in him by law of paying out gold or silver on our coin obligations. This option was vested in him so that he could keep the two metals at a parity, but if he cares nothing for his oath of office, or for the interests of the people, or the credit of this Government, he can use this option to cause a disparity between the two metals. So far he has used his option for the profits of the gold trust, against the interests of the American people, and to the detriment of the credit of our Government.

There is another reason, and I wish to call particular attention to it. In the Bland-Allison Act of 1878 there was inserted a clause, known as the exception clause, making it lawful for a private individual, corporation, or company to take notes or mortgages stipulating payment in gold only. This was a very unwise and unjust provision. It was slipped into that act in the interest of the monopolists, the gold combine, and the creditor class, and was done to depreciate silver and to appreciate gold. Under this law—which, by the way, was inserted into a bill which claimed to restore silver as money—there have been thousands and millions of dollars of mortgages and notes taken in this country requiring payment in gold. There is, practically, not a town or hamlet in the whole United States to which the banks have not sent orders to the business men calling upon them to take gold mortgages and gold notes only.

That is the case in the State of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]; it is so in my State; it is so all over the country. There are probably a thousand million dollars to-day due under mortgages containing this gold clause. Until every one of these notes and mortgages are paid there will be a greater strain all over the country on gold than on silver, which, of course, will have the inevitable result of artificially increasing the price of gold. Therefore if we pass a free-coinage bill here to-day gold and silver can not come to a parity until every one of these gold obligations are paid, unless the strain on gold is offset by a like and equal strain on silver, unless the Secretary of the Treasury and the President will observe and carry out the letter and spirit of the law.

They have been paying out gold alone. Under this policy gold has continued to advance in price, while everything else has fallen in price as measured in gold, and the disparity between gold and silver has grown greater every day. But Dr. Cleveland and Dr. Carlisle continue and persist in the same experimental treatment, though their patient continues to grow worse, has had several severe spasms, and is now in a very low, humiliating, and critical condition. Does not common sense say that the experimental treatment which they are now trying with such disastrous results should be stopped?

Can they be justified in pursuing their wild, cranky, and fanatical treatment any further? If they care anything for the life of their patient, for the prosperity of the people or the credit of this Government, should they not try the other treatment, which is recognized by law? They have the option of two treatments. They have tried the gold treatment with disastrous results; if they will not try the other should not Congress take their discretion from them and direct them specifically to try the other treatment?

Does not Congress care something for the life of the nation and the credit of the country? If the President and the Secretary of the Treasury do not, then let us do our duty and let us specifically instruct them how to save our credit. Hence the necessity for this amendment which I offer directing the Secretary of the Treasury specifically to carry out the intent of the law, the spirit and letter of the law under which all of our coin obligations have been issued.

If the Secretary of the Treasury had done his sworn duty, there would be no necessity for issuing bonds. This section takes away the discretion which he has abused and forces him to do his duty. But to make assurance doubly sure that no further bonded debt shall be heaped upon an already burdened people, I have also included a provision that no further bonds shall be issued for any purpose whatever without further authority of Congress.

The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] says that another one of the troubles with this country is that the balance of trade is against us. I most heartily agree with him in that statement. But when he goes further and charges that as the sole cause for gold going out of the country, and that, therefore, the gold export is due to the difference between the Wilson-Gorman tariff bill and the McKinley tariff bill, I most emphatically take issue with him. Gold has gone out under high tariffs and low tariffs. Gold went out constantly under the McKinley Act. In short, for the last eight years, under varying tariffs, gold has continued to rise in price and to be steadily drawn out of the country.

I undertake to say and to prove beyond successful contradiction that the chief cause for the balance of trade being against this country is, first, the fact that the products that we ship abroad we are forced to sell at a price less than the cost of production; second, because, on account of the difference of exchange between gold-standard countries and silver-standard countries, that we not only can not export the products of our soil and our manufactured products at a profit, but that the countries that were once among our best customers are now not only manufacturing and producing nearly all of the goods that they need for their own consumption, but have actually turned the tables upon us and are exporting their products into this country at a cost below that which it is possible for our manufacturers to make them. On account of this difference of exchange, the silver-using countries in the world to-day have a hundred per cent advantage over us or any other gold-standard country.

Now the question arises, how can this be remedied or prevented by a tariff? If every schedule in the McKinley tariff was doubled, it would not protect this country against the competition of silver-using countries, nor would it turn the balance of trade in our favor sufficient to protect our farmers, laborers, and manufacturers, or to prevent the export of gold, so long as this fatuous and blighting financial policy is pursued. In proof of this position, I beg leave to submit some facts taken from our consular reports.

First I have the Consular Reports for June, 1895, containing the report made by Consul-General Jernigan, at Shanghai, on "Trade with China." I regret that time will not permit the reading of extracts, at least, from the report now. It is an official report from an official representative of this Government in a foreign country. It contains valuable and alarming information. It is the duty of every man on this floor who is charged with the responsibility of legislation and who to-day is confronted with the evil of Asiatic competition and financial distress to study for the real cause. Therefore it is our duty to seek carefully the significant facts in the Consular Reports. I ask leave to insert certain extracts in my speech.

COTTON, COTTON GOODS, AND COTTON MILLS.

China is America's largest market for domestic cotton goods. In 1892 China imported from the United States 65,859,000 yards of domestic cotton; in 1893 she imported only 27,706,000 yards. These figures are taken from the Statistical Abstract of the United States for 1893, and they show a falling off in this one item in one year of 38,153,000 yards.

The annual statement of the trade of the United Kingdom for 1893 also testifies to the material loss in the importation by China of cotton yarn and domestic cottons from Great Britain. In 1892 China imported British cottons to the quantity of 497,475,000 yards, and in 1893 only 365,405,000 yards. The changes in the number of yards of this commodity imported during 1894 from the countries named do not affect the application of the principle I wish to present for consideration in this connection.

The cause of the falling off, indicated in the importation of domestic cottons, will not appear in the ordinary rules governing trade, and as regards the United States the loss is so marked as to excite anxiety. The study I have been able to devote to the subject and the information derived from the most reliable statistical reports bearing upon it influence the opinion that one of the main causes lies quite beneath the surface.

I advance the opinion that the manufacture of cotton goods by China and Japan promises to decrease the importation by these countries of such goods from the United States.

In the report of the Yokohama Chamber of Commerce, dated May 14, 1894, it appears that the first spinning mill erected in Japan was erected in 1883, with 5,456 spindles. At the end of 1883 there were 16 mills, with 43,700 spindles; at the end of 1888, 24 mills, with 88,140 spindles; at the end of 1892, 39 mills, with 403,314 spindles; 1893, 46 mills, with about 600,000 spindles.

No statistics relating to the cotton mills of China have been published so full as those relating to the cotton mills of Japan, but such as have been published evidence an increase in the number of mills and spindles. The large local cotton mill at Shanghai, destroyed by fire in 1893, has been rebuilt, and is now conducted on a larger scale; and it is the opinion of conservative business men that the end of the present year will witness in full operation at least 360,000 spindles and 3,000 looms, besides numerous cotton gins ready to operate in the fifteen cotton mills in course of construction at Shanghai, Ningpo, and the ports on the Yangste River.

The number of pounds of cotton annually produced in China has not been accurately given, but the production is annually increasing, and the soil and climate in many parts of the Empire are favorable to raising a much better staple than is seen in the markets. Much of the cotton raised in China is taken by the cotton mills of Japan, but as the new cotton mills are erected in China, these will consume the greater part of the home supply, forcing Japan to look to other fields for raw material for her mills.

Japan, by geographical position and the nature of the soil and its general aspect, must be the manufacturing country of Asia, as Great Britain has so long been for Europe; and this fact brings nearer to the attention of the cotton producer of the United States the importance of shorter ways between their cotton fields and the cotton mills of Asia, especially by means of the Nicaragua Canal.

The rapid increase in the manufacturing industry of Japan and China could not be sustained in the absence of a compensating remuneration, and if the statistics show the remuneration to be compensating, then the means of making it so should be inquired about. It is known that the manufacturing industry generally of the United States has not yielded merited returns for the labor and skill of those engaged in it.

Osaka is the great manufacturing city of Japan. In Osaka, twenty-one mills paid an average dividend of 18 per cent, the highest dividend being 28 per cent and the lowest 8 per cent. The dividends for 1893 are given at 12 per cent, and for the first six months of 1894 at the rate of 16 per cent. These figures show that the cotton mills of Japan are richly remunerative, while reliable figures show impoverishing returns for the cotton mills of Great Britain, and an unfavorable outlook for those of the United States.

The London Economist of February 17, 1894, presented the balance sheets of 93 spinning companies in Oldham, England, showing a net total loss of £72,768 ($354,089) in 1893, with the discouraging information, comparatively, that, at the end of 1890, only 8 of these companies had adverse balances.

In the United States the freight charges on cotton from the cotton fields to the great mills of the North now enter so largely as an item in their balance sheets as to make the removal of the mills to the places of production a subject of serious consideration. Wages and freight are ominous items in the balance sheets of the cotton mills of the United States and Great Britain and are the items which the prudent business man will keep constantly before him. There is something wrong when comparative tables show results so adverse to the industry and skill of the two nations which have heretofore easily moved in the van of the manufacturing progress of the world. The results must be admitted, and it is the province of the economist to find the remedy.

CURRENCY AND LABOR.

It is here that the subject of wages should receive careful attention; and it should not be forgotten that while the law of supply and demand with regard to commodities is international, it is only national, and often provincial, with regard to labor. A bale of cotton may have the same exchangeable value in New Orleans, Liverpool, or Bombay, but the price of a day's labor in Bombay bears no relation to the price of a day's labor in Liverpool or New Orleans, and no adjustment of the two opposing principles can be effected unless a cargo of coolies can be imported as easily as a cargo of cotton.

An intelligent understanding of the influential agency of the price of labor in regulating the profits of manufacturing enterprise may be had from this illustration: In 1873 the mills of the Orient and Occident were competing on equal terms and receiving equal returns. Now, in 1894, each mill employs the same amount of labor as it did in 1873, but the owner of the mill in the United States pays for the labor in gold at the old rates, while the owner of the mill in Japan pays for the labor in silver at the old rates also. The Japanese mill owner paid in 1894, as he did in 1873, from 18 to 20 cents a day for men, and from 8 to 10 cents a day for women. That meant, in 1873, from 18 to 20 cents in gold a day for men and from 8 to 10 cents in gold a day for women.

Now, during the greater part of 1894 $1 in gold has been about equal to $2 of Japanese silver, which makes it clear that, on account of the depreciation of silver alone, without taking into account the low rate of standard wages which prevail in the Orient, the mill owners of the United States are now paying twice as much for labor as the mill owners of Japan. This may be one reason why the cotton mills in Japan are showing such handsome returns, while in the United States and Great Britain they are comparatively struggling for existence. Not only does this principle of the difference in the value of currency in which labor is paid in the eastern and western countries apply to wages, but it applies to whatever is essential to the success of agriculture and manufacturing enterprise.

The same grade of machinery which a few years ago gave superiority to the cotton mills of the United States and Great Britain is now used in the cotton mills of Japan and China, and the enterprise that transplanted it to those countries sent with it foreign skill and ingenuity to superintend and utilize its capacity.

* * * * * * *

As to commodities in Great Britain and the United States, the average prices are the lowest of the century, while the average prices, comparatively, of twenty leading commodities of Chinese production were nearly the same in Shanghai in 1893 as they were in 1873, and a higher degree of prosperity in China and Japan has accompanied this stability in prices.

The extracts show that the Asiatic countries and all silver-using countries are rapidly increasing their cotton mills. They also show the wholesome effect of a stable currency on those countries, where a dollar will buy as much now as it would twenty years ago.

Next, I have the consular report for September, 1895, and read an extract from the report of Consul J. B. Gorman, at Matamoras, Mexico:

Mexico is increasing her manufactures in every branch of trade possible, as heretofore she has been dependent on foreign countries for her manufactured goods.

The same consular reports show that the trade of Russia is in a most prosperous condition. We learn that the cotton weaving and spinning mills of Moscow are paying a dividend of from 25 to 35 per cent. Will some gold man boast of such profits in a gold country? The balance of trade is in Russia's favor, and she has accumulated gold instead of exporting it.

In this connection I also send to the desk and ask to have read an interview with Mr. Ransom, United States minister to Mexico, clipped from the Washington Post of last Monday, January 6. Mr. Ransom, I believe, now claims to be a gold man. Listen to what a gold man says about a silver country.

Ex-Senator Ransom, present minister to Mexico, who has been in the city for a few days, leaves for his home in North Carolina to-day, but will be back in Washington on his return to Mexico in the course of a week or ten days. Mr. Ransom says a great deal of American capital is being invested in Mexico, and that a large number of American citizens are engaging in business there. The best of feeling prevails between Mexicans and Americans, and Mexico is generally very prosperous.

"The Diaz administration has been making unusual efforts to advance the Republic on the high road of substantial prosperity," said Mr. Ransom, "and these efforts have turned out successfully in every respect. With the Government like the present, Mexico has a great future before her. Commercial relations between the United States and Mexico are expanding on a constantly widening basis, and the increase in commerce is so large that it is utterly impossible for anyone to make an estimate of what it will be in the future."

Mr. BUTLER. It is hard to say how much of that kind of evidence it will take to convince Mr. Ransom that he was right before he got wrong. I hope the time is near at hand.

Thus we have the testimony of Consul Gorman and Minister Ransom to the effect that Mexico, instead of buying largely of our manufactured goods as she has in the past, is now increasing her manufactures in every branch of trade possible. Minister Ransom says that the exports of that country are rapidly increasing, that the country is in a wonderfully prosperous condition, and that American capital is leaving this country and going to Mexico to embark in manufacturing enterprises and other industrial pursuits. Now, Mexico is preeminently a silver country, and this testimony must be accepted as conclusive, emanating as it does from a man who enjoys the confidence of the President and is a mouthpiece of his gold-standard policy.

Poor, despised, silver-crank country, Mexico! And yet a gold man testifies that that country is progressing and prospering wondrously, and he can not say the same thing about his own country.

What does this testimony mean? It means one thing certain, that our manufacturers at home will lose the trade of Mexico, thus closing a number of our enterprises and throwing labor out of employment. It means that these enterprises will leave this country and go to Mexico to build up that country and make it rich. With this same thing going on not only in Mexico but in China, in Japan, in Russia, and other silver-using countries, does it not mean that the balance of trade will soon be turned more largely against us than ever, and that there will be an increased demand for gold, not only to pay the increasing interest of our increasing public debt but also to settle the large balance of trade annually against this country?

I wish to call the attention of the manufacturers of this country especially to this fact. It is time that they were taking notice of these facts and studying this question from a broader and higher point of view. If Great Britain continues to dominate our financial policy, she will also surely control our industrial policy. If she will sacrifice her own manufacturers, will she not also ruin ours? Besides, if this British gold policy is not stopped and this difference of exchange corrected, will not our farmers soon be in a worse condition than they are now? Will not the same silver-using countries soon produce all of their wheat and raw cotton instead of buying it from us, and at the same time supply Europe with those commodities, and destroy our market and deprive us of the power of buying gold there with our products, for if we do not buy gold with products we must buy it with bonds, which we are now doing to make up a deficit which is growing larger each year? This will be amply shown by extracts from other consular reports which I will insert in my remarks. From the consular report of November, 1895, being the report of Consul-General Jernigan, at Shanghai, on "Cotton mills and the cotton industry in China," commencing on page 354, I submit the following extracts:

COTTON MILLS IN CHINA.

The fourth provision, article 6, of the treaty of peace between Japan and China, made at Shimonoseki, Japan, April 17, 1895, reads as follows:

"Japanese subjects shall be free to engage in all kinds of manufacturing industries in all of the open cities, towns, and ports of China, and shall be at liberty to import into China all kinds of machinery, paying only the stipulated import duties thereon."

This provision materially enlarges the area for enterprise and trade in Asia, and as commerce is recognized as the great civilizing agency, Japan has accomplished more for Asiatic civilization on that line than a century of European diplomacy and arms. The opening has been made for the introduction of a great industry into the vast empire of China, and though for the present confined to the open ports and cities, the influence will be far-reaching, and public and private thought will be awakened and directed into new industrial channels.

Doubtless under the influence of the provision named, the Shanghai Chamber of Commerce, at the meeting on May 20, 1895, was able, through its chairman, to make the following announcements:

"The question as to the right of importing machinery for the purpose of cotton spinning has been settled in favor of Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co., who for some months past had machinery lying here waiting for permission to land it. A cotton mill under British management will be erected immediately."

The prospectus for the first cotton mill to be erected under the new auspices, and the announcement of which elicited the applause of the Shanghai Chamber of Commerce, is now before the public. The capital is 1,000,000 taels,* divided into 10,000 shares of 100 taels each. The prospectus states that "the company is formed to take advantage of the increasing demand on this market for coarse counts of cotton yarn by erecting, to begin with, a spinning mill of about 28,000 spindles; and availing of an abundant supply of locally grown cotton and plentiful cheap labor, a yarn can be produced which will command a ready sale at handsome profits."

A calculation is made upon the basis of the average cost of raw material during the last two years, the lowest price at which locally spun yarn has sold during its introduction, and making provision for the most liberal estimate of working expenses, estimated on the experience of existing mills, and writing off 10 per cent per annum from value of machinery, the prospectus anticipates for the company a handsome net profit on the capital proposed. The 10,000 shares were promptly sold.

At this writing there are in contemplation three large cotton mills, and a prospectus for each mill is now before the public—the one named, another for a mill of 40,000 spindles, and a third for 28,000 spindles. The larger mill will be under the general management of a well-known American firm, and in the prospectus an estimate of the expenditure on capital account of a cotton mill of 40,000 spindles is presented: The cost of the machinery for the plant is estimated at 500,000 taels, the land improvement at 40,000 taels, preliminary expenses and contingencies at 10,000 taels.

The ready value of the output of such a mill, working 300 days, with a proper deduction for brokerage, is estimated at 1,611,900 taels.

The expenditure, including raw material, cost of working, duty (if any is incurred), expense of management, and depreciation in machinery and building, is estimated at 1,475,630 taels, leaving a balance available for dividends of, say, 17 per cent on 800,000 taels.

The dividend anticipated from the expense and profit account thus stated is based upon other considerations. In one prospectus, it is argued that experiments, made and verified by the experience of existing local mills, show that locally produced yarns are superior to Indian yarns, in which so great a trade has, in recent years, been established; and that there is no reason why such yarns should continue to be imported when similar yarns can be manufactured at Shanghai, and of a superior grade.

The import of Indian yarns during the past four years at Shanghai annually averages over 195,000 bales of 3 piculs each (1 picul=133⅓ pounds), while the principal ports in the south of China have taken during the same period an average of 136,000 bales.

In the calculation, there does not seem to be any apprehension as to a sufficient supply of raw material for the mills. In 1886 the export of cotton from Shanghai to Japan was 47,600 piculs, and the total export 278,600 piculs. In 1894 Japan took 576,000 piculs, and the total amount of cotton which left Shanghai was 930,400 piculs. It may be noted that the large increase in the exportation did not increase the price of cotton, and this may confirm the opinion among business men here that the Chinese are prepared to extend the area of the cultivation of cotton in proportion as the demand arises. Along the Yangtse Valley the soil available for cotton cultivation appears as limitless as the supply of labor in China appears inexhaustible. It is seen, after supplying the local demand, what a large quantity of cotton was exported during the past year, and it is estimated that this exported cotton would run 360,000 spindles in addition to those already at work.

There are three cotton mills now at work here, with, in all, 66,200 spindles, and three more, with 49,000 spindles, about to begin operations. Adding these to the three the plans or outlines of which are now before the public, and which have been referred to, there will, ere a great while, be nine cotton mills in full operation, with a total spinning capacity of 265,200 spindles.

There are four ginning mills of 176 gins in all. These gins are Japanese imitations of foreign gins, and ginning machines are used throughout this cotton district, made in Japan and worked by the feet.

The machinery for the mills is made in Great Britain. The cost for a complete plant averages about $4 (American) per spindle. The native spindle is very rudimentary, roughly made of bamboo, and can be purchased for $1 (Mexican); but many of the Chinese women now prefer to receive the yarn spun at the mills and weave it into cloth.

Raw cotton is procured for the mills from the producer through Chinese agents, who travel the cotton-producing districts and arrange for the purchase and delivery of the raw cotton when ready for shipment, which is usually conveyed to the mills in junks and small boats, at a small cost and convenient alike to seller and buyer, as the mills are situated by the river side, favorable to the reception and export of the material. The price of raw cotton is about 12 haikwan taels per picul, and a bale of yarn of 3 piculs weight will average about 61 taels. Skilled male labor is worth 30 cents (about 17 cents gold) per day, and skilled female labor 20 cents.

With the same improved machinery, an ample supply of raw cotton, and labor at such low prices, the advantage of an Asiatic over a Western cotton mill is quite evident. Before China can manufacture fine cotton, however, there must be a very material improvement in the grade of the raw product.

When the Chinese are taught the advantage of properly spacing their cotton rows and thinning the cotton plant, so that the warm air and the rays of the sun can freely penetrate, the change from the present system of cultivation will be rewarded by an increased yield per acre and a much finer staple.

COTTON SPINNING IN JAPAN.

Having indicated the growing interest of the cotton-spinning industry in China, it will be interesting, by way of comparison, to trace the origin of the same industry which has grown to such proportions in Japan.

The first spinning factory in Japan was established in Kagoshima more than forty years ago by the greatest feudal prince of modern times. The name of this great Satsuma prince was Shimazu Harihisa, who, although born and bred to arms, and the lord of a province noted in Japanese annals for the martial prowess of its inhabitants, saw, with the eye of a statesman, the commercial advantage in the geographical position of his country, and that in peace Japan could win wealth as the manufacturing emporium for Asia. In

*The Tien-Tsin or trade tael equaled 76.1 cents in United States currency July 1, 1895.

1867 the second cotton mill in Japan was built in Oji, and these two were the only spinning factories until 1870. In 1870 two others were established by the Japanese Government, four more in 1880, four in 1881, one in 1882, one in 1883, and one in 1884. These factories are now operated by private companies, and are in a prosperous condition, working 92,978 spindles.

I also submit extracts from Consul-General Jernigan's report, contained in the same book, on "Trade with China," commencing at page 360:

TRADE OF CHINA IN 1894.

The report for the year 1894 on the foreign trade of China, prepared by the secretary of the British legation at Pekin and published by the foreign office in August of this year, is one of exceptional interest and deserves more than a passing mention. The writer of the report says the most remarkable feature of the trade reports for 1894 is the fact that good results have been obtained and a promising revival of commercial prosperity has set in, in spite of numerous obstacles to success.

In the early part of the year a serious drought prevailed in southern China, and the plague at Hongkong and Canton seriously affected business with the colony. The outbreak of war naturally entailed great uncertainty and dread of attack at the ports. Floods damaged cereals in the north, and during the autumn a succession of destructive typhoons in southern China injured the rice and sugar crops. Yet, notwithstanding all these hindrances, as well as the disturbance to industries caused by the mobilization of troops throughout the provinces and the increase of taxation for military expenditure, a satisfactory and prosperous year may be recorded as far as trade is concerned. The customs revenue was increased by every division of trade, with the sole exception of Indian opium. Both imports and exports show an advance, the receipts from the latter exceeding the maximum collected during the most prosperous days of the tea trade.

It is also remarked that "the country around the two cities produces cotton, and can be made to grow more if demand for it be stimulated. Ginning mills, spinning mills, and, finally, weaving mills must become numerous in the country.

These extracts show conclusively that the time is near at hand when the silver-using countries will not only manufacture all of their own goods and raise their own cotton and other raw materials, but will soon be flooding this country with their exports, to the ruin of our own industries.

Is it possible, under such conditions, for the balance of trade to be turned in our favor by any kind of a tariff? In fact, is there any remedy—if there is, I want to hear it—but to equalize exchange by opening our mints to the free and unlimited coinage of silver on equal terms with gold?

I also have here advance sheets from the last report of Consul-General Jernigan on labor and wages in China and Japan, which will appear in the next publication of the Consular Reports.

LABOR AND WAGES IN CHINA.

* * * * * * *

Among western nations, the impression prevailed at one time that Asiatic races were more imitative than original, and that in the industrial departments where originality was the chief element of success the Occident need not fear the Orient as rivals. The test has been made, and the result has greatly modified, if not entirely removed, the impression. Within the last quarter of a century Japan has thrown off a most oppressive form of feudalism and advanced to the forefront as a nation of progressive ideas. Twenty-five years ago a system of government obtained in Japan which discouraged all liberal enterprise. Centuries of political slavery, intrenched in formidable prejudices, seemed to have crushed out the very soul of the Japanese people, and the Empire was dominated by the tyranny of great feudal chiefs, the remains of whose castles now scattered over Japan, attest to the traveler the strength and wealth of the former owners and the servitude and poverty of their retainers.

* * * * * * *

The gates of the Empire of Japan, so long closed to the Westerner, were opened to his coming, and the Japanese soon learned to appreciate and utilize the productions of Western thought and skill. To-day, the navy-yards, arsenals, factories, banks, and large commercial houses of Japan prove that there is in Japanese character a reserve force which is destined, if judiciously regulated and directed, to assure still greater achievements in industrial fields. The attestations are too numerous to leave doubt that the Japanese are not only original in conception, but possess the power of concentration and execution.

China is behind Japan in the civilization of the West, and an enchantment still lingers over Asia which Western civilization has not removed by the stern realities which follow in its wake. The awakening of China, as prophesied by one of her greatest statesmen, has not been realized. The Empire still sleeps, but passing events indicate that the hour of awakening is not far distant.

During the last fiscal year the value of the trade relations between Japan and the United States was estimated, in round numbers, at $28,000,000, but the figures show a balance against the United States of $19,000,000, yet Japan is nearer to the United States than any other Western nation, and during the same period the value of the aggregate trade relations between China and the United States was estimated at $24,000,000, with a balance against the United States of $16,000,000.

This shows that these silver-using countries are rapidly advancing in civilization, and that they have already turned the balance of trade against this great, glorious, prosperous, high-protective, but gold-cursed America.

Thus we see that our consuls and ministers tell us that our trade is suffering with these countries and will suffer worse in the near future. They see the present danger and see the threat and menace of the future. But there is one strange thing about their reports—neither Minister Ransom nor any of our consuls, with one exception, seems to understand what is the cause of this great danger and future menace to our trade. Either they have not studied the question deep enough or they do not feel at liberty to tell the real cause.

What remedy is offered by our Republican friends for this condition that confronts us? They offer the gold standard and high protection. When they offer the gold standard as a remedy they offer us a cure which is the very poison that has caused the disease. When they offer us higher protection as a remedy they offer that which can not protect the manufacturer or the farmer against the overshadowing evils caused by the single gold standard.

If the McKinley tariff was increased 100 per cent it would not protect our American manufacturers against the manufactured products of the silver-using countries. To do so it would be necessary to make the tariff so high that it would not only cover the difference between the cost of labor in the two countries, but also high enough, in addition, to cover the difference of exchange between gold and silver using countries, which is alone 100 per cent. No wise or patriotic manufacturer can ask for such an enormous increase of the protective tariff, for the enlightened opinion of the farmer and of the whole country would be against granting such a request, while the producer, who has no protection and who has already been impoverished, now has his products reduced in price more than one-half by Asiatic competition. At last the same causes which have for years been ruining agriculture are now reaching the manufacturers themselves, and if not corrected will in the end destroy both. The protection that the farmer needs above everything else is protection against the gold standard. The manufacturer will soon learn, if he has not already learned, that this is the only protection that will save him.

With a sufficient supply of full legal-tender money to meet the increasing needs of our people and preserve the stability of prices, the farmer and the manufacturer can go hand in hand in building up all of the productive industries of our country, but if the manufacturers insist upon a single gold standard then there can be nothing in common between them and the agriculturists of the country. The farmers are now perfectly aware that the tremendous fall in the price of their products is due to the scarcity of money and to Asiatic competition. Therefore they can not and will not consent to riveting their shackles more firmly by assisting in artificially raising the prices of manufactured products while no steps are taken to prevent the depreciation of the prices of the products of the soil.

This Congress can not afford to increase taxation without at the same time increasing the ability of the people to pay. Therefore we should not vote to pass any tariff bill for increased revenue unless we, at the same time and in the same bill, strike down the single gold standard and increase the number of legal-tender dollars in this country by the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

Commerce can not expand while money is contracted. Nothing can expand except debt and misery while the volume of money is contracting. The thing that has blessed the silver-using countries is that their silver money has remained stable in purchasing power and debt-paying power. The thing that is ruining us is the appreciation of gold.

But, to return to our consuls. I repeat that it is passing strange that they should point out the alarming menace to the prosperity of this country as they do and not at the same time point out the cause or suggest a remedy. They hold their positions by appointment from a most vicious, cruel, and relentless gold monomaniac. This may be the explanation. The silence of the bulk of the American press on this question is also very noticeable. A few papers have called attention to the dangers, but only a very few have pointed out the cause. Are they ignorant, or is it possible that so many of them are under the influence of British gold?

In this connection I wish to call attention to two high-tariff papers. Here is one, the American Economist, which I think is run as a kind of Republican campaign paper to talk tariff. This paper, in every column, is talking about tariff, tariff, tariff. Occasionally it finds room to put in a little paragraph giving some news item, and here is a news item that I find in its columns, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

Japan is the only country in the world that has bought more raw cotton from us, since the new crop year began, than in 1894. A year ago, in three months to November 30, Japan took only 810 bales, or 464,411 pounds, of our cotton. This season Japan has taken 5,800 bales, or 3,066,891 pounds, an increase of 5,000 bales. While the larger quantity is not alarming as yet, it is mighty significant to our cotton manufacturers, who may feel the effect of this cheap labor competition a little sooner than they anticipated.

Mr. BUTLER. The Journal points out the evil, but fails to point out the cause or the remedy for it. The editor says it is significant and dangerous, but he does not say that the tariff will remedy it, either because he knows it will not or because he did not want to admit that the tariff was not a panacea for all ills.

I hold another paper in my hand, the Home Market Bulletin, which is spending its days and nights talking about the beauty of the home market and high tariff. Here we have almost exactly the same news item. The article reads:

In 1893 Japan took American raw cotton to the value of 1,273,421 yen and in 1894 to the value of 2,680,671 yen. The yen is worth 99 cents and 7 mills in gold A business which more than doubles in one year may be said to be good.

But of course this means that we shall sell Japan little or no cotton yarn or cloth hereafter, and if Japanese cottons do not deluge our home market within five years it will be because our tariff is raised to keep them out.

This editor rashly says that the tariff is the remedy. But it will be noticed that he was careful not to say how high it would be necessary to build the tariff wall. If he had attempted to do so his statement would have fallen of its own weight and ugliness.

In this connection I want to quote what a business man says in an interview in the Washington Post of December 10, 1895, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

"Few people are aware to what extent the Japanese are becoming our competitors in the manufacture of certain lines of goods, and if something is not done to counteract it, there will ere long go up a big wail from our people," said Hon. George A. Maltz, of Detroit, at the Arlington.

"Not long ago a friend of mine in New York was waited on by the representative of a Japanese firm and shown samples of buttons made over there. The price asked was so low that my friend supposed there was some mistake, but he was convinced to the contrary, and gave an order of $9,000. This is but one instance. In the matter of making matches they can send every concern that produces them in the United States into bankruptcy. Of course the reason lies in the difference of wages. Fifty cents a week will pay for labor in Japan, and we can not compete against that."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, you see that that business man points out clearly the danger. He says that if something is not done "a big wail will soon go up from our people," but he satisfies himself by saying it is all due to the difference between labor. Here is direct testimony as to the great evil, but a dodging as to the real cause. If the difference in wages is a cause at all, it is a very small cause compared with the difference of exchange.

It is plain to any man who will investigate the question that the extraordinary development of manufactures in Japan is due absolutely to the fact that silver was demonetized here and in Europe. Japan is the rival of our manufacturers for that reason solely. Meantime, while the premium on gold gives huge protection to Japanese industry, it also acts as a huge bounty upon exports; so that, entirely apart from the difference in the price of labor, Japan would be able to beat us in our own market. Japan could well afford to multiply her present labor cost by 10 and then she could undersell us in this country.

No gold organ dares to print such a fact as this, and no gold advocate can answer these arguments. For years these journals and gold-bug politicians have been telling us that to have gold alone was to have high civilization and high advantage for our workmen. Now the fact is becoming clear, excepting to certain editors and politicians who are either dull or who do not dare to tell the truth, that with silver alone Japan is moving with wonderful rapidity toward a higher civilization, while her workmen are threatening ours with a fate which no intelligent man can regard without the gravest apprehension.

Now, let us for a moment notice the reports of the British consuls on this question. We are at once struck with the fact that, though they represent a gold Government, they seem to have either more acumen for ascertaining the real cause or to be allowed by their home Government more freedom to tell the cold, naked truth.

The British consul-general at Shanghai, Mr. George Jamison, and other British consuls have pointed out not only the danger but the real cause. They show by quoting facts and figures, backed by able and convincing reasoning, that it is the difference of exchange between gold countries and silver countries that has worked this marvelous change in the industrial affairs of the world. They show conclusively that in gold countries, where rents, taxes, and other fixed charges are to be paid in a constantly increasing gold measurement, the farmers and manufacturers, when they ship their products abroad, must get a higher price for these products, or cut down the wages of their workmen, or close their business. On the other hand, countries that have the benefit of a stable currency, countries where a dollar will buy no more labor and the products of labor than it would twenty years ago, and where, on the other hand, a dollar will pay as much taxes and debts now as it would twenty years ago, have a hundred per cent advantage of those countries where the purchasing power of the dollar has been doubled. They point out plainly that nobody in England is benefited by the gold standard except the money lender, and that it is his policy to increase the value of the dollar, so that annual interest on debts due from other countries may be doubled.

At this point I desire to call attention to the following editorial from the Mexican Financier, which I shall incorporate in my remarks. It contrasts in a striking manner the conditions existing in England and Mexico.

The article referred to is as follows:

One of our greatest of English merchants, doing business with the whole world, informs us that sensible people in Great Britain are getting their eyes well opened to the follies of their rulers. A body of eminently respectable business people up in Scotland got together the other day and passed resolutions favoring bimetallism. Meantime Mexican manufacturers are a contented lot. They are not filling the air with wailing, nor is their grief over the depression of British manufacturing such as to cause them to lose sleep or appetite. Ten dollars for a gold sovereign has served as a tonic to them.

Should silver continue low for two years more, as seems probable, hundreds of new manufacturing enterprises are certain to be started here (in Mexico). And the same thing will happen in all silver-using countries. The manufacturing "boom" has begun in the Orient, and that is the chief menace to the prosperity of Europe, for it implies the reduction of profits in the hitherto immense and lucrative trade with Asia.

The low value of silver naturally tends to keep money at home, and this is why the local traffic of the Mexican railways begins to reflect the more active internal movement. At the present rate of agricultural expansion here the railways will, in two or three years, begin to note a great improvement in their internal traffic. Exports will increase, and these in their turn mean additional imports.

Mr. BUTLER. I have also a recent editorial from the London Times, which admits that Asiatic competition and the gold standard are ruining everybody in England except idle holders of wealth. Commenting upon the marvelous growth of Japanese manufacturing, the article says:

The results already achieved are undoubtedly calculated to strike the imagination at first sight with astonishment and alarm. The most conspicuous of these results are those connected with the cotton industry.

In 1885 Japan imported only $800,000 worth of raw cotton; in 1894 she imported $19,500,000 worth, or more than four and twenty times as much. At the beginning of 1885 there were 19 spinning mills, with about 50,000 spindles, in Japan, and at the end of 1893 there were 46, with about 600,000 spindles.

The result was of course inevitable. The lower grade yarns, formerly imported from abroad, have practically disappeared from the Japanese market, the importation of middle grades is rapidly declining, and only the higher grades, which Japan has not yet set herself to produce, still maintain their footing. The importation of cotton yarns reached its high-water mark in 1888, when the growing supply from the native mills had not yet overtaken the growing demand arising out of a general increase of national prosperity and activity. In that year cotton yarns were imported from Great Britain and India in about equal proportions, to the total amount of 62,860,000 pounds. Six years later (in 1894) the importations from the same countries amounted to only 21,241,000 pounds, or barely one-third of the former figure.

If the pinch has not yet been more severely felt in England, it is due to the fact that the loss has so far fallen much more heavily on Bombay than upon Lancashire, for, while the imports from the latter have been reduced 40 per cent, those from the former have suffered to the extent of 90 per cent. Nor is this all; not only at the present rate of progress is the time within sight when Japan will cease altogether to import goods of this category, but last year, for the first time, she actually appeared an exporter, and for the respectable figure of 4,500,000 pounds.

While 93 spinning companies in Lancashire were working at a loss, the cotton mills of Japan were paying, in 1894, dividends of 16 and 20 per cent, and even more. These are results which may well provoke jealousy and apprehension among European manufacturers and importers of cotton goods, and, though not in the same degree, similar results may be already noted in connection with many other branches of industry. Ready-made clothing, boots and shoes, hats and caps, umbrellas, paper of every quality, beer, and matches are all represented by annually diminishing figures in the import columns of Japanese trade returns, while the corresponding figures in the export column are rising every year.

Silk manufactures exported from Japan have increased in value from $54,457 in 1885 to $8,400,000 in 1894. The annexation of Formosa may be expected to give an immense impetus to the sugar industry by securing to Japan a field of almost unlimited capacity for the production of raw sugar. Japanese coal, the exports of which have risen in value from under $2,000,000 in 1885 to over $6,500,000 in 1894, is rapidly driving English coal, except for special purposes, out of every market east of Singapore, and has already penetrated as far west as Colombo and Calcutta.

The manufacturers and farmers in England are suffering from this cruel policy almost as much as the people of the United States; but England can stand out against this competition longer than any other country, because the other nations of the world owe and pay to her annually over $1,000,000,000 in interest and other fixed charges. This keeps a steady stream of gold pouring into England, while at the same time it keeps a steady stream pouring out of every other country to England. If this difference of exchange, which the British consuls have pointed out so clearly, is ruining the trade of Great Britain, how much worse is it for a country like the United States, which owes large debts abroad and is forced to pay out annually $250,000,000 in interest alone, in fact about double that amount, when all the fixed charges are included? And if the gold standard is to be persisted in by our Government and this $500,000,000 of interest and fixed charges must be annually paid in gold, where is the gold to come from?

The annual production of gold in this country is only about $40,000,000 a year. This is only one-seventh enough to pay the annual interest that we owe on our foreign debts if we did not keep an ounce of gold in this country to fill teeth, for the arts and sciences, and not a single dollar for circulation. The annual output of gold of the whole world is not over $180,000,000. Therefore, if we had every ounce of gold produced annually in the whole world and presented to us as a free gift each year we would have only half enough to pay the annual interest that we owe abroad.

With this alarming condition of affairs, how can any sane man say that this Government ought to set up the single gold standard and thereby put a greater strain on gold, and thereby increase the price of gold against ourselves; thereby increase the price of the very commodity that we must have to pay our debts in by making it scarcer and dearer?

Mr. President, it seems to me like the policy of men run mad. It is deliberately establishing a policy that means a double tax upon the people and the industries of this country to pay to foreign creditors double what we owe. It is not only deliberately making it impossible for us to pay our debts in gold, but at the same time putting a blighting hand upon our wheat fields and our cotton fields and our factories and our industrial enterprises, and forcing them to bankruptcy instead of allowing them to prosper.

This enormous debt can not be paid in gold. We can continue to plaster mortgages on this country and borrow money from abroad to pay this interest, but there must be soon an end to any man's business or to any country's that is not making both ends meet in times of peace and prosperity but is forced to continue to pile up debt and increase the annual debt to be paid. If we continue to borrow now when will we be able to pay? Every dollar we borrow makes our burdens heavier next year. More interest must be paid each year. Can we ever get out of debt, can we ever prosper, under these conditions? Can we preserve our credit by running the country into bankruptcy? If we pursue this foolish policy, there is ahead of us, as sure as the sun shines, bankruptcy and repudiation. May God forbid that either should come.

But we can pay this debt, and we can pay it according to the letter of the contract; we can pay it as honest men and as an honest nation. How? By reversing this infamous, grinding, contracting policy, by legislating in the interests of Americans; by giving the people a sufficient volume of money to keep stability of prices and to encourage labor and industry. This money must be real money, real dollars, and not token dollars. It is the number of real dollars in circulation in every country that measures prices and controls prosperity.

Every dollar should be a full legal tender. Every dollar should stand on its own bottom and not be redeemed in other dollars. Every dollar must be as good as any other dollar, for a dollar that must be redeemed in another dollar is not as good as the dollar in which it is redeemed, and besides, such a dollar does not measure values or increase the ability of the people to pay debts. Let us have such an honest money as this, and then we will pay our debt in products instead of either gold or silver. Yes; we will prosper so that we will turn the balance of trade in our favor and have every country in the world to pay tribute to us for our products shipped to them. We will have a happy and prosperous country at home, for everybody will be busy, money can be secured to pay debts, money can be secured to supply the wants of our people, and besides, we will have surplus enough to pay every dollar that this Government owes, dollar for dollar, and in the dollar of the contract, and the money recognized and authorized by the Constitution.

A few weeks ago, when the President of the United States sent to Congress his message on the Venezuelan question, both Houses of Congress, irrespective of party, came forward and unanimously indorsed the President in upholding the Monroe doctrine. As I sat here in my seat and heard that message read, I began to hope that there was some change of heart in the Chief Executive of this country, or rather, I might say, I began to hope that he was no longer the victim of his evil environment. When I saw Senators of all parties rise on this floor and echo and reecho the patriotic sentiments of the President in upholding the great doctrine of self-defense and independence laid down by our forefathers, I also began to hope that American pride, that American honor, American patriotism, and American independence were still in the ascendency.

I began to hope that this session of Congress would not adjourn without wiping from our statute books some of the infamous laws enacted in the interest of English capitalists, if not by their influence, and would also enact such remedial legislation as would revive our drooping industries, as would put every idle laborer to work and every idle piece of machinery to turning.

Right here, however, it might be well to state that, according to my reading of the Monroe doctrine, the President did not state it as it was meant by President Monroe and his distinguished compatriots and as it is understood by the American people.

I call attention to the following paragraph in the President's message:

> Great Britain's present proposition has never, thus far, been regarded as admissible by Venezuela, though any adjustment of the boundary which that country may deem for her advantage and may enter into of her own free will can not, of course, be objected to by the United States.

If that is the Monroe doctrine, then the doctrine is a sham and a farce. That statement of the case leaves Great Britain or Venezuela to decide when the Monroe doctrine shall apply and when it shall not apply. If the Monroe doctrine means anything, it means that the United States Government will not allow any foreign power to gain any foothold on the soil of any American republic, or adjacent island, that might prove inimical to the welfare, independence, and stability of this Government, and that question, of course, was to be decided by our own Government. The opinion of Venezuela or the people of any other American republic or foreign monarchy does not enter into the matter.

If it is dangerous for Great Britain to push her dominions further in Venezuela, then it is just as dangerous for her to do it with the consent of Venezuela as it is for her to do it without the consent of Venezuela. Suppose that Venezuela should come to some agreement with Great Britain that was inimical to the safety of this country, or let us suppose that Great Britain should, to state an extreme case, bribe the officers of the Venezuelan Government and thereby get them to consent to turn over their whole territory to the protectorate of Great Britain, then what should the United States do? According to the President's interpretation of the Monroe doctrine, the United States should not interfere. Is that the Monroe doctrine? No. This seems to me to be too absurd for discussion. The Monroe doctrine is the doctrine of self-defense, and certainly we must decide when it is necessary for us to act in self-defense.

But let that pass. As I said before, this message of the President met the unanimous approval of Congress and the enthusiastic applause of the whole American people, not because they indorsed his interpretation of the Monroe doctrine, not so much for their interest at this time in the Monroe doctrine, but simply because it sounded, in a general way, like a frank, honest, patriotic, American sentiment, and chiefly because this independence was asserted against Great Britain. It has been so long since the people have heard a single patriotic American utterance from the White House, so long since they have seen a President who even claimed to live up to the Declaration of Independence, that they were ready to applaud anything that sounded patriotic—they were ready to applaud even the shadow of American patriotism.

The people, from Maine to California and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, were still applauding this message of the President, when another message was suddenly sent to Congress. It was sent to Congress in great haste. It was sent after the Senate and the House had passed a joint resolution to adjourn for the holidays. It was sent to the Senate five minutes before this body was to adjourn for the holidays. In fact, a telephone message was sent down to this body from the Executive Mansion asking us to remain in session until the message could get here.

What was that message? That message told us that there was a "crisis" hanging over us. That somebody's "unreasoning fear" had been aroused and was about to sacrifice the interests of the people. That message called upon us not to adjourn for the holidays, but to stay in session and do something to help the Executive lift this country out of the danger and distress in which it had been plunged "by our dangerous and fatuous financial operations." That message also gave us to understand that the President wanted authority to issue gold bonds, and at the same time indidirectly threatened to repeat the scandalous bond operations of last year if we did not comply promptly to his demand.

Mr. President, that message was received in this body with as little respect as any message that has ever come here from the Executive Mansion, and the applause of the people, which was still ringing out for the Monroe message, was at once hushed into silence—applause was petrified into fear and distrust. The great masses of the people, as well as the members of Congress, began to suspect that the Venezuelan message might not have been written in good faith.

Yes, I say, the people began to suspect that the President of the United States was trifling with their patriotic feeling, was masquerading in patriotic garb for the sole purpose of trying to serve our enemies; for the sole purpose of trying to score another point for the gold combine—to take one more step in carrying out the infamous gold conspiracy and drive one more nail in the coffin of American liberty and prosperity. In short, it was plain that the war scare was to be used as an excuse for piling up further the interest-bearing debt of this country, for further contracting the currency, for increasing the power of national banks, for fixing at once and forever the single gold standard upon us, and also, possibly, for the purpose of further increasing our standing army, to be used for the protection of that sordid despotism of wealth which seems has begun to fear the righteous indignation of a patriotic people.

In fact, when the plain people of the country come to think of this Venezuelan matter, they realize what a mammoth farce the whole affair is. In the first place, the President does not propose to prevent further British aggression on American soil, except with the consent of Venezuela or on condition that Great Britain can not influence that Government to change its ground. In the second place, the strip of land over which the controversy has arisen is of comparatively small consequence and owned, I understand, by a few private capitalists. In the third place, it is perfectly absurd to think of England going to war with this country over the few acres of bog, inhabited chiefly by crocodiles, down in Venezuela.

Why? For the simple reason that Great Britain makes now more money annually out of this country than the whole of the disputed territory, if not more than the whole of Venezuela, is worth. The fact is that the United States is the most valuable colony that Great Britain has got to-day. She does not want to fight us with arms when she has already conquered us in peace; or, rather, I should say, when she has subjugated us and laid heavy tribute upon us by an industrial warfare more deadly and relentless to our interests and prosperity than any war that has been waged with sword and musket in the history of the world.

It is the resentment which our people feel against Great Britain on account of this industrial warfare; it is the hardships which our people feel from the heavy tribute which she lays upon us and our industries that caused the wonderful outburst of approval of the President's message on the Monroe doctrine, and, as I said before, our people are beginning to suspect that that message was used to divert the people's attention from the industrial warfare of Great Britain and to give Great Britain an opportunity to make a new raid upon our industries and our Treasury. Even the newspapers of this country that are friendly to the President's Administration admit that he used that message for the purpose of arousing the patriotic sentiment of this country and under that cover to get the people to submit to another bond issue. I hold in my hand a copy of the Evening Star of December 28. I ask the Secretary to read the part I have marked.

The Secretary read as follows:

WHY VENEZUELA WAS SELECTED.

More or less discussion has prevailed ever since the President's annual message was sent to Congress respecting his choice of Venezuela over Cuba as a subject for a patriotic deliverance. In the opinion of many of his friends, Cuba's case, being the more pressing, was the better of the two, and they wondered that he did not take it. Venezuela's case was good, but it was still open to arbitration. Cuba's, on the other hand, had passed into the field of open warfare and possessed so many likenesses to the case of the United States in the revolt against England that it touched American sympathies at every point.

Mr. BUTLER. This paper says pointedly that the President was in doubt for a time whether or not to send a message to Congress about Venezuela or about Cuba; that he hesitated about the choice that he would make; that his purpose was to select the one that would fire most the American heart. If Spain had been the country that was carrying on the industrial warfare against our interest, if Spain had been the country which had been influencing the legislation of our Government and was desirous of making a still further raid on us, then the President would have used a message on the Cuban question.

Yes, he would have sent to Congress a message telling us how in 1776 we struggled for liberty, how we took up arms to resent and defy unjust taxation—taxation without representation, and how to-day Cuba—poor, oppressed Cuba—was struggling against the same wrongs and fighting for the same priceless boon of liberty. Yes; he would have asked Congress to recognize Cuba as a belligerent in the contest with Spain. Similar statements have been made in other papers that are known to be friendly to the Administration and its policy. This certainly ought to be pretty good proof that the message was not sent to Congress in good faith, but for a sinister purpose. It sounds like Satan quoting Scripture. The people understood the game.

It is not the first time they have seen a man put on the livery of heaven in order that he might better serve the devil. I stand here to-day and warn the President of the United States and warn this Congress that the people have not been fooled by this ruse. They have their eyes open about this matter, and if either the President or this Congress suppose that under the influence of the patriotic sentiments contained in the message on the Monroe doctrine new crimes can be attempted against American prosperity and American liberty with impunity, they are treading on dangerous ground; they are outraging a people whose patriotism is not dead and whose manhood will surely assert itself—a people whose patriotism and manhood will as surely rise to condemn and brand their own faithless officials, to redeem this Government from the tyranny of British gold, as the manhood and patriotism of their ancestors over a hundred years ago redeemed it from British bayonets. We had Tories then; we have Tories now; but, thank God, the "sons of liberty" are still living, and this infamous conduct will make their tribe increase.

In the language of the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], there is in this country to-day an "irrepressible conflict" between every honest industry, and the speculators and corporate vultures who live by organized greed and theft. I might say that there is an irrepressible conflict between the people and their own Government, because the voice, the interests, and wishes of the people of this country are not heard nor heeded, but it is the corporation vultures who have the ear of our Government and who are using it to squeeze and bleed those who create wealth, those who toil and spin.

This irrepressible conflict is more threatening to our future than the armies and bayonets of every foreign foe. My earnest prayer is that this conflict may be settled peaceably and with equal justice to all, but it can never be settled as long as the Executive Mansion of this country is occupied by a man who is either a willing or an unconscious tool of British gold and organized monopoly. It can never be settled until the people elect a President—until the people elect a man for President who is broad enough to see the needs of this whole country and who has the desire to do right with the same high patriotic unselfishness and devotion to duty as was exhibited by Jefferson, Jackson, and Abraham Lincoln.

There is no hope for relief, there is no hope for better times in the future, there is nothing ahead for us but despair and poverty as long as we continue to place at the helm of state such aliens, such enemies to American prosperity and liberty as Grover Cleveland and some of his predecessors. We must put in that high place a man who is an American, who is a patriot. How can it be done? Are not ninety-nine people out of a hundred in this country to-day suffering from the present evil conditions brought on us by bad legislation and mismanagement of Government affairs? Who brought about these evil conditions? It is not God's fault that this country is in distress. He has not visited us with plagues, famines, or pestilence, but has He not blessed us with sunshine and showers? Has He not blessed the American freeman with health and strength to labor and to make two blades of grass grow where one grew before?

It is not the fault of the people, for have they not used in an extraordinary degree the opportunities that have been placed before them? Each year they have worked harder than the year before. Each year they have created more wealth per head. In fact, they have created so much wealth that the gold bugs and the monopolists have raised the cry that the people are ruining the country by creating too much wealth—by making an overproduction of wealth. In short, heaven has given us the opportunity to make ourselves rich and prosperous; we have used that opportunity, and created enough wealth to make this country blossom like a rose and to surround every man who will work with comforts commensurate with his wants.

Then what has brought this distress to the country? What has thrown our laborers out of employment and turned them into tramps on the highways of the nation? What has brought starvation and poverty to the door of every farmer in the land? What has ruined millions of merchants and business men? I stand here to-day and charge—and defy contradiction—that it has been brought upon us solely by infamous laws enacted in this Capitol, and by a still more infamous execution or defiance of law by the Administration at the other end of Pennsylvania avenue.

The same thing has gone on whether the Republican party was in charge or the Democratic party in charge. The people are not to be blamed, except in one particular, and that is in allowing themselves to be cajoled or fooled or aroused by partisan prejudice into voting for and keeping in power their faithless agents who have robbed them. The great majority of voters in this country are opening their eyes to this infamy and to this betrayal of trust. The great majority of the people are throwing off their party yoke which they have worn so faithfully and so disastrously. They are anxious to get together under one banner and drive from power these gold conspirators.

The greatest hindrance to-day in the way of this, the men who are to-day the most to blame for keeping apart the people who would come together and right their wrongs and reestablish the Government of Lincoln, Jefferson, and Jackson, are some of the men who claim to stand by the people and for good government, the men who claim to oppose the gold standard and the rule of monopoly, but yet who sacrifice every principle of good government, who sacrifice the interests of the people for party success that they may remain in power and continue to draw their salaries. It is the duty of such men, placed in positions of trust by a confiding constituency, to put patriotism above party when the interest of the nation is at stake, and to point out to their people at home the sure way to relief. They ought to do it even if their advice resulted in crushing their own parties, for is not the country greater than party? Is not the welfare of the people more important than the success of any party? It is criminal for the people's representatives to try to hide the real issues and allow the people to be robbed in order that a party may triumph, in order that a few politicians may hold office.

The people can never get relief by simply voting for Congressmen and Senators who are pledged against this gold conspiracy, because too often such men are hampered, side-tracked, browbeaten, or converted in the interests of party harmony, if by no other means, after having come within these walls. Did we not have the humiliating, the shameful, spectacle of the Fifty-third Congress, elected by the people, pledged for the free coinage of silver, pledged not to repeal the Sherman law unless free coinage was put in its place, but yet that Congress, with a large majority pledged to stand by the people, yet changed by some mysterious and subtle power from the White House into a majority against the people and for the gold combine?

It was when President Cleveland and his gold conspirators of the two old parties were trying to strike down the only law that recognized silver and provided for the increase of the currency in this country that the late Senator Vance, who represented my State in this body for many years so faithfully, so patriotically, said that the man who claimed to be a friend of the people, who claimed to be an American, yet who would vote for a bill to strike down the Sherman law without at the same time and in the same bill putting in its place a law providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver on equal terms with gold, "was either a knave or a fool." Yet under the mysterious power behind the President a large number of men who were sent here pledged by their constituents to stand for free silver played either the "knave or the fool," or both.

I do not use those words. They were used by Zeb. Vance, the great commoner of North Carolina. He was a man not only with a big brain, but also with a big heart. He was a kind and genial man; he would never utter a word that was harsh or unpleasant if he could avoid it. But as he stood here in this Hall and saw the great crime that was about to be committed and the base betrayal of the people by their trusted agents and servants, he felt that it was his duty to speak out and place the blame where it belonged. He thought it was his duty to brand such men as unfit to represent the people in such a high and important position. Would that he were on earth to serve with his patriotic devotion the people to-day, when new crimes are about to be perpetrated.

The power which the President of the United States has is dangerous to human liberty; it is greater power than should be vested in the hands of any one man. No Congressman can get an appointment in his district without bowing to the autocratic will of the President. I repeat that the tremendous power in the President's hands is more potent for evil over the legislative department of this Government than if one-third of the silver men in each body were to, within an hour, openly declare for the gold standard. If the wonderful transformations which the country saw in the Fifty-third Congress is any criterion by which to judge the probable conduct of men, I venture the assertion that if we had had in the White House a President who was an American patriot that the last Congress would have stopped the issue of bonds, would have passed a free-coinage bill, and would also have passed a graduated income-tax bill.

Besides, there is another danger. The President has the power of veto. Any measure we pass that conflicts with the interests of organized greed is sure to meet his veto. This done, it requires two-thirds of each House of Congress to overcome a single stroke of his pen, and every Senator on this floor knows that it is next to impossible to get two-thirds of both bodies, at the same time, to favor any one measure to give the people relief and justice. You may pass ninety-nine bills in this body for the relief of the people by a majority vote where you can pass one for the same purpose by a two-thirds vote. Hence, the veto power of the President alone practically amounts to absolutely controlling legislation. Therefore, no man with these lights before him can any longer justify himself in voting for a gold bug for President and then hope to get any relief for his people.

The men who claim to be for free silver, yet who vote for a gold man for President, are the most valuable agents that the gold bugs have. They do work for the gold combine that no one else could do; they have the confidence of the people at home. They betray that confidence and lead their people in the road of sure ruin and poverty. Therefore, in the coming contest, the test of every man's patriotism should be who he supports for President of the United States.

How can any honest, patriotic American citizen support a gold man for the Presidency? The man who favors the British gold standard is at heart opposed to every principle enunciated in the Declaration of Independence. He is un-American; he stands for trusts, combines, and monopolies, and for everything that is dangerous to American prosperity and American liberty. There are not enough such men in this country to elect a President. There are not enough such men in this country to carry a single State with their own votes alone. They can only succeed by the help of those whom they rob and oppress. But the danger lies here: This gold combine controls the machinery of the two old parties. It will use that machinery to write the platforms and nominate the candidates, and then appeal to a suffering people to stand by their party. Will the people submit to this again? The path of duty is plain. Let every man who is opposed to the wrongs that have been committed; let every man who is opposed to the rule of monopoly, trusts, and combines; let every man who is opposed to the tyranny of British gold walk out of these two old parties and draw the issue squarely between the people and the common enemies of our country.

Let the Democratic wing of the gold party nominate its gold candidate. Let the Republican wing of the gold party nominate its gold candidate, but let nobody vote for these agents of the gold trust except the gold men themselves. Let every man who is opposed to this British gold trust and to all the evils, crimes, and wrongs that it includes and signifies join his hand and heart with the great majority of the American people and combine their votes on the day of election under the people's banner for the people's candidate. Let us do this, and then we will surely put in the White House a man who is an American patriot, a man who is opposed to piling up a bonded debt in times of peace, and a man who stands for the true Democracy of Thomas Jefferson and the Republicanism of Abraham Lincoln, for they are one and the same.

As a further answer to the question asked on yesterday by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] as to what North Carolina wants, I will say that this is what North Carolina wants, and this is what a great majority of the American people want and are determined to have. They will get it. But it will be by repudiating the two old monopoly written parties of perfidy and dishonor; they will get it by enlisting in the next campaign under the American banner of the People's Party.

Mr. PEFFER. I desire to address myself to the subject before the Senate, but if it be agreeable to the members present I should prefer not to proceed this evening. I will simply take the floor, and will submit some remarks hereafter.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 14, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask the gentleman to withhold that for a moment.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the bill (H. R. 3616) to limit the time within which prosecutions may be instituted against persons charged with carrying on the business of a retail liquor dealer without having paid the special tax as required by law, or with being a manufacturer of tobacco without having given bond as required by law, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means; and also the House resolution by Mr. ODELL (House Res. No. 96), directing the Committee on Banking and Currency to report an amendment to the general banking laws, to be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the corrections of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HOPKINS in the chair.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield to my colleague from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] this morning, if no gentleman on the other side of the House desires to speak. We had two speeches yesterday in favor of the bill, and but one on the other side of the House. If no one desires to occupy the floor, I shall yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I am recognized in my own right as a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio in his own right, as a member of the committee.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I should not desire to be heard on this measure at all if it were not for the fact that yesterday the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] saw fit to criticise somewhat severely the action of the committee in reporting this bill. I do not know how long I shall be able to talk in the matter, as I discover I am very hoarse this morning, having caught cold; but I ask your indulgence while I respond to some of the criticisms made upon pension legislation, and especially upon the pending bill. The discussion yesterday took a very wide range, and, besides mentioning the bill briefly, it went over the full subject of pension legislation, and involved all of the criticisms which are showered upon the Pension Bureau, past and present. I may feel called upon to respond somewhat in that broad manner to the criticisms that have been made. I may criticise some, in what I have to say, the Pension Bureau and the administration of the Bureau; but I trust my criticism will be dignified, and will correspond with the facts in the case.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that anything is gained by rushing into unjust criticisms, for while we lose confidence in ourselves by that criticism, we are at the same time arousing the animosity and the fear of the soldier; and we ought not to do that. The pensioners of our country during the last two or three years at times have had enough to arouse their curiosity and timidity without our unnecessarily arousing it on the floor.

With reference to the pending measure, I will say that I do not know that any difficulty arose over any feature in the bill. I understand that every item in the bill is agreed to unanimously by the entire subcommittee and by the entire Committee on Appropriations, so that there is no controversy over any amount carried in the bill. I understand that there is but little opposition, so far as the committee is concerned, to any amendment offered to the bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] announced to the committee, to the House, and to the country that he reserved the right to oppose one or perhaps both of the amendments; and that was fair, for he announced his intention to do so. But besides that, besides his criticism on the amendment, I do not understand that he objects to any item in the bill. So I suppose that so far as the bill itself is concerned, carrying the appropriation, it is without opposition in the House, so far as I have heard; and the gentleman from New York nods assent.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the amount—that is, in round numbers, $140,000,000—carried by the appropriation bill. It is the wish of General Lochren that it should be that amount, and I do not object to it; but I do object to the new legislation.

Mr. NORTHWAY. So I understand; so that there is no controversy over the amount. The controversy occurs over the amendments that have been tacked on the bill. Besides the criticism which has been offered to the amendment, criticism has been offered on both sides as to the manner of the administration of the Pension Bureau, and I may venture somewhat, before I proceed with anything relative to the amendment, to pass over a little of the ground which has been traveled over here in criticising the administration of the Pension Bureau. In doing this I want to say that I do not care whether a pension is a vested right or a gratuity.

So far as I am concerned I found no argument upon the idea that pensions are a vested right. I found my argument upon the idea that pensions are higher than vested rights. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] yesterday spent a long time in arguing that pensions were not vested rights, that they were not given in accordance with the terms of any contract. For the sake of the argument let us agree to that. I will not quarrel with the gentleman from New York or with any other member of this House upon that proposition. Let us say, for the present, that pensions are not given responsive to the terms of a contract. Why, then, are they given? The gentleman from New York said they were a gratuity, an expression of the nation's gratitude to the soldier who fought to save the nation. For the sake of the argument I will accept that proposition of the gentleman from New York, and will then proceed to follow my own line of thought in reply to his argument. Accepting, then, the gentleman's proposition that a pension is a gratuity, let us see where we come out. How does the case stand from that point of view? Would a pension be of any higher authority or dignity if it were named in a contract than if it were merely a gratuity?

Can this nation say: "We give to the soldier a pension of $10 or $20 a month as a measure of our gratitude for the service he has rendered," and yet say that the relation between the soldier and the nation in that respect is of a lower character than if the money were paid under a contract to pay him that amount? Can a nation express its gratitude to a man and couple that expression with such conditions as to place that man in the attitude of a beggar or a thief? Can we stand here with a right to recall what we have given? As a lawyer I have always supposed that a gift when executed was as fixed and irrevocable as though it had been paid under the terms of a contract. If a man gives another $100 he can not recall it any more than if he had paid that amount under contract, and when a nation gives the same rule applies.

When this nation gives a man a pension, I care not whether it be given in accordance with the terms of a contract or as a gratuity, I insist that the nation is not in a position to recall that gift without belittling itself. Therefore, in what I say, I accept the statement of the gentleman from New York that a pension is in the nature of a gratuity and not a vested right. But does it then follow that because pensions are gratuitous the nation has a right to recall them, to cut them down, to insult the persons to whom they are given? I submit not. I submit that if the nation gives a gratuity to a soldier in recognition of his gallantry and patriotism in defending the nation, that gift stands upon the highest ground known to humanity, and the nation or the individual bestowing such a gift ought not and can not, in reason or in justice, undertake to qualify or to recall it, and certainly ought not to question the right of the person to whom it is given after he has received it.

So I submit that if pensions are gratuities they stand upon a higher ground, so far as the nation is concerned, than though they were vested rights. The nation can not afford to do anything to weaken the soldier's claim upon his country's gratitude. If this is so, then what should be the spirit governing us in the bestowal of these pensions? Should we treat the pensioner as a beggar? Should we treat him as an individual who comes and begs of the nation to bestow upon him something which is really his due? Should the nation hold out in one hand a gratuity and in the other a whip? Should it hold out in one hand a gratuity and say, "We give this to you because you gave your services for four years in the crisis of the national life," and then turn around and say, "But before you get it you must come and apply for it in the attitude of a beggar?" I submit not. The spirit which bestows a pension should be broad and catholic; it should be humane, it should treat the pensioner as a man—as a man who is crowned with glory because he fought to save his country, as a man fit to have bestowed upon him evidences of his country's gratitude, and that bestowal should not be made in a narrow spirit.

The pensioner should not be obliged to approach the Government in a cringing attitude and say, "Please, sir, give me this." The soldier should be able to stand up in the broad light of the sunshine of his country and feel that the nation places its hand upon his head in blessing, not in severity or humiliation. When we construe these pension laws and the duty of the Government to the pensioner, we should construe them all in the light of liberality, of humanity, of patriotism. We should not adopt any narrow interpretation of these laws or of our duty under them. If the nation is in duty bound to recognize the services of its gallant defenders, it should recognize those services in a broad, patriotic spirit, a spirit as broad as the nation which he saved, a spirit as patriotic as that which induced the soldier to offer his life, as it were, to save the life of the nation. Now, Mr. Chairman, from this view of the case how do we stand to-day? What is the spirit manifested in the Pension Bureau to-day relative to the bestowal of these pensions? Some things are palpable to the sense and yet indescribable in language. The sunlight is palpable to the sense, yet no human being can make use of language to fitly describe it. The blue vault of heaven is palpable to the sight, and yet who can describe it?

Not in the spirit of prejudice, but in a spirit of just criticism I appeal to your sense of justice to say whether there is not a spirit abroad in regard to the administration of pensions in our country to-day which is narrow, contracted, constrictive, and which seeks to heap a burden upon the soldier which no human people should ever place upon the gallant defenders of their country. It is a narrow spirit, a spirit of unfriendliness. We may not know just the acts to refer to; yet take altogether the acts growing out of the administration of the Pension Department we have this spirit just as clearly manifest as the spirit of patriotism is manifest to-day on the part of the American people as against one of the countries of the Old World. The spirit is manifest. Somehow we breathe it in—this idea that the administration of pensions in the Pension Department of to-day is unjust, is narrow, is unfriendly, and that the soldier is called upon to address the Department in a cringing attitude, bending low upon his knees and saying "Please, sir, have I not proven my case beyond the existence of a reasonable doubt?" I submit that this is a spirit which ought not to pervade this land. I submit that it is a spirit which ought not to meet the old hero when he comes to receive that which the nation in its gratitude should bestow with a liberal hand.

Then, too, besides the general spirit of illiberality, the want of humanity which pervades the administration of the Pension Department, we have many acts which are above the surface and which tell us clearly that there is a spirit of unfriendliness and that the soldiers are called upon to assume a burden which was never contemplated and which they never should be called upon to assume in this country when they come forward to ask that which the nation in its gratitude has seen fit to bestow.

Now, as we approach this subject we find that the period subject to our criticism may be divided into two parts, the criticism of the administration of the Pension Department under the old law and of the administration of that Department under the new law. It is well known that under the old law a soldier before he can receive a pension must prove that the cause of the pension originated in the service; that he was either wounded or injured in the service or contracted in it some disability, and that because of this he is entitled to a pension. That brings us down to 1890. The law of 1890 is founded upon a different consideration entirely. It grants a pension to a soldier who is disabled, unable to earn a living, whether that disability was contracted in the service or not. Now, in the administration of these two classes of legislation we may have reason to find fault or we may not. We may have reason to find fault with the administration under the one law and not under the other; or we may have reason to find fault with the administration of the Department under both laws.

I propose to say something with reference to this matter; and I do not want to venture one step without being backed by facts. If I allude to any case to-day I shall give the name of the soldier, with his company and regiment, so that anybody may know whether I am right or wrong. I will not venture a criticism in general terms. I will base my criticism upon the specific acts of the Department. Whether I am right or wrong shall be known by the facts in the case.

Now, take the law of 1890, for I consider that first. What is an applicant called upon to prove under that law before he is entitled to a pension of $12 a month? While I concede that the Department has a right to say that for total disability the pensioner shall receive $12 a month, and that he must prove total disability, nevertheless I submit that the determination of what total disability is, is in my opinion absolutely impracticable, and it calls upon the soldier to prove that which he ought not to be called upon to prove.

Let me refer to the very first case that came under my notice after I was elected to Congress. I do not recall the name of the soldier, but it was a case coming from Summit County.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman is now referring to the construction of the law by the present administration of the Pension Office?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes, sir. I am referring to the construction of the law of 1890 by the present administration. I was written to by about thirty individuals in a township of Summit County stating that a pensioner under the law of 1890 had had his pension suspended—taken from him; and the facts they said were these: The pensioner was an old soldier; since coming home from the Army he had lost in an accident one arm and one leg; he could not wear an artificial leg or an artificial arm. In this condition he was hired by a railroad company to sit at a railroad crossing where a gate was to be lifted and let down. With his left hand he could turn a crank and let down the gate. For attending to that duty the railroad company paid him $20 or $25 a month. Under these circumstances, as I was informed, the Department took from him his pension on the ground that he was not totally disabled from earning a livelihood. Yet he sat there, simply part of a man, one leg and one arm gone; and because he was able to let down a gate the Department held that he was not totally disabled. Now, I submit that any Pension Department that places that kind of construction upon the words "total disability" is not friendly to the soldier; and such a thing should cause a tingle of shame to any nation that submits to it or any Department that proposes to enforce it.

Here is a man who has given three or four years of his time to the service of his country, who met with an accident which took him out of the ordinary business avocations of life; a man whose condition was such that he could not chop wood or pick up chips, could not split rails or lay up a fence, could not plow, or hoe corn, or enter into any of the active walks of life, and yet because some railroad company happens to have enough sympathy for the old man to give him a stool, and allow him to sit at some railroad crossing to shut down the gates for the protection of the public who cross the road, the Department holds that he was not totally disabled, and takes his pension away from him. Whether it has ever been restored to him, I do not know. But that was the first case that came under my observation as a member of Congress. I did not know then how to manage in such a case, but I should know now what to say.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What is the test imposed by the act of 1890, as to what incapacitates a man to such extent as to deprive him of the power of earning his own support?

Mr. NORTHWAY. If the gentleman had listened to my statement——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York (continuing). Does not the act say in express terms "total disability to earn a subsistence"? Let us take the very instance the gentleman has himself cited. He was speaking of a man able to earn $25 a month. Was he totally incapacitated from earning a living?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Let me, in Yankee fashion, ask the gentleman from New York a question in response to his question. Would you take from that old man his pension of $12 a month because some railroad company charitably gave him an opportunity of earning a living? Do you back up the Administration in robbing him of his pension?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Let me answer the gentleman's question. If I was Commissioner I would construe a statute according to the written law. I should not construe it according to any other principle.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Then, how would you construe this law as applicable to the case of which I have been speaking?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should construe it that if the man was not incapacitated to such an extent as to deprive him of the power to earn his own support, then he was not entitled under that act to a pension. He could not come under the provisions of the general law. But as there are two or three thousand special bills introduced in Congress each year for just such cases, a bill could be introduced for his relief.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Very well, then; we have your answer. I do not believe that you are that kind, but I am sure we can find men who will say that a man who would agree to sell his carcass to some medical college for $100 after he is dead should not be permitted to draw a pension.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the construction of the law as to total disability is narrow, unjust, and unfair. I submit that this law is not in accordance with the great heart and spirit of the American people when it passed resolutions of sympathy for the soldiers of this country, and determined that they should be entitled to pensions. I submit that the hearts of the masses of our countrymen beat responsive to the idea that such a man as I have described should have a pension, and that he should not be sent "over the hills to the poorhouse" because the country fails to do its duty to him. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are many other constructions which have been placed upon this statute by the Department; but I must hasten on, for I do not wish to occupy all of my time if I can help it. There is another construction, and that is applicable to the filing of applications for pension. You will notice that the first amendment proposed in the bill relates to the filing of applications for pension, and prescribes that where an original application is rejected, and subsequently another application is made and the pension is allowed, that the pensioner shall be permitted to draw pension from the filing of the first application, provided that the proof shall show the disability then existed.

Now, I do not believe that that amendment is made necessary by any law. I believe a fair and honorable—no; I will withdraw the word "honorable" and say a fair and legal—construction of the law would give the pensioner his pension to date from the time of the disability; that is, if it did not go back before the date of June 27, 1890. But the Department holds that where a claim is rejected, and the pensioner is not on the rolls, if a subsequent application is filed it shall date from that time, even though the proof shows that he was entitled to a pension under the first application. It is to meet that construction that the amendment is offered. I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] agrees to that amendment. I do not understand that there is any disagreement about it. If a pensioner files one application and it is rejected, and then files another and shows that his disability existed at the time of the filing of the first application, he should have his pension from that date.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I wish to suggest to him that that ruling was made prior to this Administration.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I understand that——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do not want the gentleman to create the impression that it was established by this Administration. That has been the ruling ever since the law existed. He might also say that there is nobody here who objects to the amendment.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I understand so. I believe that is correct. I understand that the gentleman from New York agrees to it. You can see what an injustice the ruling has created which has made the amendment necessary. It is, in brief, this: An application is filed for a pension within the last two or three years, but rejected on some technical ground, because, for instance, the official who administered the oath was not perhaps competent, or on some like technical matter, and the application is rejected. After two or three years he files a new application, which is granted. And certainly it does not seem to be just that he should be deprived of his pension for the two or three years between the two applications. I submit that this amendment ought to be adopted as a matter of justice. If it is not the law it ought to be adopted as the law, and I do not understand there is any objection to it.

Now, another thing. This Pension Bureau has given a construction to the language applicable to widows which I do not believe is a fair and judicial construction of the terms of the statute. Here we differ. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] objects to this amendment and says that he proposes to oppose it, and has made a point of order against the amendment. I want to call the attention of the House to this matter. I submit that this second amendment ought to be adopted, even though you reject the other. We are dealing with widows. We are dealing with the widows of old soldiers. Now, in what spirit should you deal with them? In the name of heaven, has it come to this, that this Government will say to the widow of an old soldier, "If you are a pauper we will give you $96 a year, but if you are in receipt of $96 a year we will not give you anything, even though not one dollar of the $96 shall be expended for your support."

Look at the terms of the law which is applicable to widows who are without means of support other than their daily labor. How will you interpret the word "support"? Who does not know that the men who drafted that law and the Congress that passed it made use of the word "support" in its ordinary acceptation, as meaning that which pertains to the physical comfort and sustenance of the individual, and not to the receipt of money. Yet here is a widow who owns a little home, who owns a little piece of land mortgaged for all it is worth. She can rent that land for $96 a year, but it takes every dollar of that to pay the interest and taxes. Not a dollar goes to her support; yet the Department construes it that she is not without other means of support than her daily labor, and hence will give her no pension. I submit that that is not a judicial construction of the terms of the law. I submit that a fair construction of the law should be, if she is without means of sustaining herself and her family in matters pertaining to her physical wants, if she is without means other than her own labor, then she is entitled to a pension. But the Department, in its arbitrary manner, makes the construction that if she is in receipt of $96 a year, the amount that she would receive from her pension, then she is not without means of support.

I should be glad to know why the Department places that kind of a construction upon that law. The law does not say $96 a year. It says "without other means of support." It alludes to the entire support of the individual, not to the fact that she can pick up a crust; not to the fact that she can live upon the crumbs that fall from the rich man's table, but to the fact that the widow is without the entire means of support other than her daily labor. Yet they say, because she receives $96 a year she shall be entitled to no pension whatever. I submit that is not a judicial construction to place upon the law. But because that construction is placed there we come to this amendment and provide that widows who are receiving less than $500 a year shall be entitled to a pension; if in receipt of more than that, applicable to their support, then they shall not have it. Is not that a fair thing to say to these widows? I appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], does he want to go upon record as opposing these widows? Does he want to say that no war widow shall receive a pension unless she shall stand as a beggar shivering at the door of the Treasury? Does he want the widow of an old soldier and the mother of an old soldier's children to come and prove to this Government that she is a beggar or is obliged to wash for a living before you will stretch forth your hands and restore a small gratuity to her?

Mr. HULICK. I indorse nearly all that the gentleman has said in regard to this. The arguments in favor of these measures sometimes give us the interpretation of the committee. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. The amendment he proposes is that her net income shall not exceed $500 per annum. Now, suppose a widow owns a farm that may be worth $5,000, and yet the income of that, after the taxes and repairs are paid, is less than $500, say $450. Would the Pension Department be authorized to grant her a pension under this act?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I can not tell what the Pension Department would do. If I was the Commissioner of Pensions I should grant her a pension.

Mr. HULICK. You are a member of the committee.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I am, and that is the interpretation I should place upon it.

Mr. HULICK. Is that the view of the committee, that she would be entitled to a pension?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I do not know. That is the way in which I would construe it. How the other members of the committee would construe it I would not say.

Mr. HULICK. In other words, would you have the Pension Department inquire exactly what her income is, without reference to what the value of her property may be?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes; she has got to live upon something, and she can not live upon what she has, but upon something which comes out of what she has.

Mr. HULICK. Now another question. Suppose she has a farm of 200 acres which is not productive. Suppose that the income of the farm is less than $500. Would she be required to give the value of the farm, and be compelled, if necessary, to sell any portion of it? Would that be your idea?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I do not understand that. I do not think the committee understood that she would be required to prove the value of the property or anything except the income; that if she should be able to show her net income was below $500 she would be entitled to a pension, and if above that she would not be. That is my construction of the language.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Ohio to ask me a question. I understood him to appeal to me to know whether I desired to go on record in regard to a certain matter with reference to pensions. Was that a mere form of debate?

Mr. NORTHWAY. That was mere form of debate. I did not ask you a question with view to your making a speech in answer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I must hasten. I have spoken only thus far relative to the construction of the law of 1890. But it may be said that the law of 1890 is ironclad; and that there is no discretion vested in the Department. It may be said that all the Departments have given the same construction to it. So far as the construction of the law is concerned I want to call your attention to the old law, and the construction which this Department has placed upon it. I say this Department because the construction has been placed upon it by this Administration, where the construction has been placed on it by Commissioner Lochren and the Hon. John M. Reynolds, Assistant Secretary of the Interior. I want to call your attention to a case, and what was involved in it. We have found fault because the Department has suspended pensions that were granted under the new law, and have notified applicants that they must introduce additional proof within thirty days or they would be continued as suspended.

Now, I want to show you that this Congress or some Congress ought to do something to remedy the defect in the old law if the Department is right in its construction of the law. A constituent of mine, Amos L. Hood, living in the village of Niles, in Trumbull County, enlisted in the One hundred and seventy-first Ohio Infantry Volunteers. He had always lived there. He had grown up in that neighborhood; he enlisted there. He enlisted with those who had grown up from childhood with him, and men with whom he enlisted served side by side with him. When he returned from the Army he went to his old home, in the same neighborhood, and he has continued to live there from that time to the present. He is now a man beyond the prime of life, but he was born upon that soil and has gone in and out upon that soil for many long years. Now this is hardly a case where he could make a fraudulent claim, especially when he calls upon his neighbors for proof in his favor.

Now, let us see what was done in his case. One night—and his claim is proven by the hospital record—on the night of May 2, 1864, he was on Johnson's Island guarding prisoners. A rain came on in the early part of the night and it turned cold toward morning. He was without proper clothing, became chilled and took a severe cold; and the record shows that he had catarrhal fever for some length of time and that he became partially deaf, and now he is totally deaf in the right ear and almost deaf in the left. His claim was that of deafness, caused by catarrhal fever, resulting from that exposure, which is evidenced by the hospital record, which shows the length of time he was confined. The assistant surgeon of the One hundred and seventy-first Ohio Volunteers, who knew of his disease, testified to it and his attendance upon him. Then there is the affidavit of a second lieutenant, who swore to the same fact, that he had always known him, and knew that he was not deaf when he entered the service; and then the affidavit of his father's family physician, Dr. Bard, who is dead—died in July, 1886—in which he swears that he had known him for more than thirty years, that he had been his father's family physician for many years, and that he knew Hood from childhood, and swears he was not deaf when he enlisted, but was partially deaf when he came out of the service. Then there were the affidavits of three comrades who served side by side with the claimant, men who had enlisted with him, who came home with him, and who testified that he was not deaf when he went into the Army and that the deafness came on him afterwards.

Dr. Julian Hermann, now dead, one of the examining surgeons at one time of Trumbull County, swears that he had examined the case, and he gives it as his opinion that the deafness was the result of catarrhal fever. Then there is the affidavit of a doctor in Youngstown, who testified that he had examined the man, and gave it as his opinion that the deafness was the effect of catarrhal fever. Then there are the affidavits of half a dozen or more of his neighbors, each one of whom swears that they had known him from childhood, that they had attended the same school with him, had grown up with him, and knew that he was not deaf when he went into the Army, that he came home slightly deaf, and that it has increased upon him.

With this proof in the Department a pension was allowed to him of $4 a month from August 21, 1864, then $12 a month, then $14 a month, then $25 a month, and finally it was increased to $27 a month. He had been in receipt of his pension for many years, living in the very neighborhood where he was born, under the eyes of men and women who had known him all his life and with whom he had played as a child. But a man who had a lawsuit with him and who, as it appears, was beaten in the lawsuit, a man who had made an affidavit in support of the pensioner's claim, wrote the Department the deafness of this pensioner had existed prior to his going into the Army. Thereupon the pension was suspended on the 26th of June, 1894, and the Department notified the pensioner that a special examiner would be sent to reexamine his case and he would be permitted to attend the examination. Three special examinations were had. Those examinations resulted in bringing out contradictory evidence.

I will not go into the details, because I have here the opinion of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior Department, Hon. John M. Reynolds, which I propose to read to the House to show what has been going on in the administration of the pension laws. The result of these special examinations was that the Commissioner of Pensions, taking alone into consideration the result of the special examinations, held that the pensioner had not made a case establishing his title to a pension, and dropped him from the rolls. An appeal was taken to the Secretary of the Interior, or to the law bureau of that Department. At all events, the Hon. John M.

Reynolds, the Assistant Secretary, rendered an opinion sustaining the Pension Bureau in dropping this man from the rolls. Bear in mind what was submitted. There was no question of fraud, no claim that witnesses had sworn falsely; there was an overwhelming amount of testimony in support of the claimant, witnesses enough to send any ten men to the gallows, evidence which placed the case beyond a reasonable doubt, an overwhelming mass of evidence, the case not depending upon the testimony of any one man, but depending upon the testimony of the surgeon of the regiment, the hospital records, the lieutenant in command of the company, doctors, the family physician, neighbors, and others.

The Department sent to the nearest postmaster a letter of inquiry as to the standing of several of these witnesses. I have read the postmaster's reply, for the facts which I am now stating I have obtained from the Department. The letter of the postmaster states that he has interviewed three of the men, that they are all men of respectable character, and that they can not remember that the pensioner had any deafness before he went into the Army. The Department had all this evidence before it, and yet, without alluding to the evidence on file in the case, and taking into consideration only the evidence obtained by the special examiners, the man was dropped from the pension rolls. He took an appeal, and, as I have already said, I propose to read to the House the opinion of Hon. John M. Reynolds, the Assistant Secretary. After stating how the case comes before him Mr. Reynolds proceeds as follows:

This case was investigated by special examiners in 1893 and 1894, which resulted in great conflict of testimony. On one side witnesses who employed the applicant and worked with him as carpenter in 1859 testify that he was dull of hearing at that time. Nicholas Wender, with whom applicant served as an apprentice at the carpenters' trade during seven or eight months in 1858, says, "He (the applicant) was a little bit deaf, he could not hear well. I remember that claimant did not catch on well when talked to; he would say 'What?' Of course, he was not near so deaf then as he is now. Whenever I wanted to tell him anything I had to speak louder than I did to my other men. This deafness continued during the entire period he worked for me."

James H. Miller worked with applicant one summer before the war in building a barn for Samuel Goist, and noticed that he was hard of hearing. Jonathan Keefer, a comrade, testified that appellant was hard of hearing before he enlisted and at the time he was enrolled in Company D, One hundred and seventy-first Ohio Infantry. Jacob Miller remembers that the appellant was quite deaf at the time he worked for Samuel Goist in 1859.

On the other side—

however, a number of witnesses say that they were intimate with appellant from boyhood up to the date of his enlistment, but never noticed that he was dull of hearing until after his discharge from Company D, One hundred and seventy-first Ohio Infantry.

Now comes the argument; listen to it:

The witnesses who have testified to the origin of deafness prior to the service speak from personal knowledge, and as their reputations for veracity are unimpeached greater weight must be attached to the same than the negative evidence relied upon by the appellant. Some of the witnesses who testified against appellant appear to have had improper motives, but this testimony has not been considered in this opinion, but the appellant's right to pension has been determined upon other material evidence in the case; therefore, after a careful consideration of the facts of this case, the Department has failed to discover error in the said action of your Bureau. Action affirmed.

JOHN M. REYNOLDS,
Assistant Secretary.

The following order was entered in the Pension Bureau:

Hood was dropped from the rolls June 26, 1894, after due notice, under act of December 21, 1893, on the ground that pensioned cause existed prior to enlistment.

There you have before you the action of the Department, and it is just like this: A man under the law presents his claim for a pension; he introduces ten or a dozen affidavits, the men swearing most positively to facts which entitle him to a pension. They follow him from childhood up to the time when the application for a pension was made. The men who make the affidavits are men who knew him intimately. Upon that record the pension is granted and for years he is drawing it. Now, I submit that no power on earth ought to have strength enough to take from him that pension unless proof be introduced in some manner, of which he shall have due notice, which shows that he is wrongly in receipt of that pension. [Applause.] I submit that the Department which calls upon that pensioner after he has been suspended to introduce proof to show that he is entitled to that pension perpetrates an outrage which should stand as a blot upon the civilization of this nineteenth century. [Applause.] I do not care whether the law officers of the Interior Department or of any other Department sustain him or not.

See what is done. The man is suspended without taking into consideration the evidence filed originally in his case. The suspension is founded alone upon these special examinations. The ruling of the Assistant Secretary is founded alone upon the question whether Commissioner Lochren has committed an error in suspending the pensioner. He does not allude to one solitary word or line of the overwhelming mass of evidence upon which the pension was originally granted. The man is suspended before a trial is had, in which trial there is a conflict of testimony, and then, on appeal, the Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior affirms the suspension and supports his decision by an argument which ought to stand to his everlasting shame as a lawyer.

Look at it! The condition of a man as to his hearing is a fact, not an argument. That I can hear well to-day is a fact, and if anyone swears that I can hear, he swears to a fact. If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] who sits beside me swears that I can hear now, he swears to a fact; and, on the other hand, if the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] chooses to swear that at a certain time I was deaf and could not hear, he swears to a fact and not to an argument. And in each case the witness is swearing to a fact, and the testimony of neither is "negative" testimony in the legal sense. Yet the Assistant Secretary holds that the witnesses who swear that the man was deaf before he entered the service give positive testimony, while those on the other side give negative testimony, and that the witnesses who give positive testimony should have greater weight; and hence the decision of the Commissioner should be sustained.

Mr. DINGLEY. May I ask the gentleman whether the Pension Bureau had given notice to the pensioner of the proposed inquiry, so that he might have an opportunity to be present and cross-examine the witnesses?

Mr. NORTHWAY. The applicant was notified that the special examination was to be held.

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman will yield a moment, I desire to call his attention to another case in the line of the argument he is making in regard to the holding of the Department. In this case a woman was trying to prove the death of her husband who had been gone a great number of years and not heard from. This same officer of the Department held in this case that, regardless of the number of years the husband had been absent, the woman must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that he was dead.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes; and I know another case where the Commissioner of Pensions made a similar ruling. In this case the woman had been married away back in 1840, had been living with her husband up to the time of the war, and had raised a large family of children. Her husband went into the military service, came home, died, and left her penniless. She applied for a pension. She proved the marriage fifty years ago. Then she was called upon to say whether that husband had ever been married before he married her. And now that poor woman is struggling to find out where her husband came from before she knew him! He came from somewhere in the East to the West and married her. But she does not know from what particular part of the country he came; and that poor creature does not know where under heaven to go to prove that her husband never was married before he married her. As I have said, he and she lived together for fifty years; they raised a family of six or seven children, all of whom have gone across the river to the other shore. And she is denied a pension because she can not show that her husband who married her almost a quarter of a century before the war had no other wife living at the time. When the war came on, that husband took his gun, said good-bye to his wife and little children, and faced death that this nation might live. But now she is turned out of doors because she can not show that that brave old man was not married before he married her years and years ago.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow one question?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like the gentleman to give the names in these various cases. When a public official is attacked in this way, it is only fair that the name of each case upon which the attack is based should be given.

Mr. NORTHWAY. As soon as I go to my room I can give the gentleman the name of that case. I have given the name of Mr. Hood. The gentleman can go to the files of the Pension Office and find this case to be as I state it. I spent three hours in hunting down the facts on Saturday last, and I know what I am talking about.

Mr. GIBSON. If my friend from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] will yield to me a moment, I will give the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] a case. It is the case of Selena Brewer, widow of Daniel Brewer, Company E, Third Tennessee Mounted Infantry; number of claim, 590484.

She was required to prove by the affidavits of two credible and disinterested witnesses—

I am reading from the Commissioner's letter—

She was required to prove by the affidavits of two credible and disinterested witnesses who are able to speak from personal knowledge by reason of continuous acquaintanceship with the soldier back to 1839, when he was 20 years of age, and with you back to 1832, when you were 16 years of age, as to whether he or you were ever married prior to your marriage with each other—whether you or he were ever divorced from each other during the period from your marriage to the soldier's death.

Mr. NORTHWAY. There is one case which the gentleman from New York may investigate. But let me proceed with this Hood case. Since he was dropped from the rolls that old man has gone forward and has taken the affidavits of about fourteen individuals, every one of whom swears that he has known him from childhood. He has produced the evidence of doctors and of others, of our best citizens, many of whom I personally know, who swear that he was not deaf when he entered the Army. It appears that he was engaged at one time in building a barn for Mr. Goist, at Niles, and the son of Mr. Goist and other men working on the barn have testified that he was not deaf in the least. That is not all. One of the strong affidavits taken against him was that of an old man who, as it appears, was at the time of making his affidavit utterly incapable of caring for himself, so that the special examiner bulldozed him or he stated what he could not know. Now, Mr. Hood has filed those affidavits, and I myself asked the Department that on the case as filed the pension be restored. The reply was, "No; it can not be restored. If the man ever gets on the pension roll again, he must come in upon a new application for restoration"; thus cutting off his pension for a considerable period for which he is entitled to receive it.

Now, this is the fairest case the Department can have in its favor. If it has a right to suspend a pension in any case upon a reexamination of the evidence, it has that right in this case. Now, upon what ground has the Department acted in this case? Simply upon the ground that the adjudication of a former Commissioner of Pensions in granting a pension was wrong upon the facts; that is to say, that in view of all the facts the man ought not to have been drawing a pension. I submit that there is no construction of law in any court in any part of this land or in any other department under heaven that would sustain such a ruling.

What would a man think of a court of common pleas, in an equity case, rendering a judgment in favor of a plaintiff, and placing him in ownership and possession of a farm, of which he retains the ownership and possession for twenty-five years, and then another judge of the common pleas court picks up the journal and sees the evidence and affidavits and says, "I do not think I would have rendered such a judgment as that; I would not have rendered a judgment in that way on these affidavits," and therefore directs the clerk of the court to enter judgment in favor of the defendant, to oust the plaintiff, and give him time to make a new claim if he desires to do so? I say, What would be thought of a case of that kind? And yet that is simply a parallel case with the one we have here.

Take the case of this man Hood, of whom I have been speaking; he was required to furnish new testimony. But, Mr. Chairman, years obliterate the memories of men, they wipe out the recollection of events, they wipe away persons; for every year, continually, we are passing away, crossing the river. What excuse can be offered for a case of that kind? The case is proven by honorable witnesses, there were no taints of fraud or pretense of fraud, and the only question raised afterwards is that notwithstanding the ruling which had been made by the Department, on the testimony submitted in the case, the present Commissioner holds that it would not have been sufficient, if the case had been before him, in the first instance, to warrant the granting of the pension; and, therefore, he insists on the production of this new testimony. What do you think of telling him, after all the witnesses have crossed to the shadowy shore, of telling that poor old man, who fought for the nation, for the lives of the very men who make rulings against him, that he must make his title good, or that they will take away the pittance which the Government has been doling out to him for twenty-five years? Mr. Chairman, I pronounce it an infamy, I call it a shame, and the time has come in this nation when brave, patriotic American people, the people of this country, recognize what has been done for them by these old veterans, and will pronounce emphatic condemnation upon the men who heap burdens upon the old soldiers by such constructions of law.

Now, I am tired and I propose to leave the matter. I did intend to say other things, but shall not take longer the time of the committee. Only a few words in closing. Let me say to you that the subject of pensions is a vital one; a subject which is dear to the hearts of the American people. It may be that we have grown weary of the matter. It may be that the American people are somewhat tired of hearing of the subject of pensions; but the time is coming, and it will last as long as the nation lives, when the American millions will refuse to be tired in defense of the old soldiers.

The time is coming when millions of patriotic men and women of this land will rise up and say, "Blessed forevermore be the brave men who fought in defense of the Union." [Applause.] The time will come when history will record in characters of everlasting glory the story of the patriotism, the bravery, and the heroism of the men who saved the nation. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have no criticisms to make upon any man or upon any party. In the criticisms I have offered, I have offered not a word upon any man or upon any of the men who fought against the country. God grant that the hour has come, and if not, that it will speedily arrive, when we shall be brothers and friends under one flag and in one country, where we may all move forward to the grand and crowning destiny of the American nation. I have no word of bitterness for any. So far as I am concerned, from over the fields of Gettysburg, Lookout Mountain, Spottsylvania, Shiloh, and the Wilderness shall come no breezes freighted with hate, but they shall be soft with forgiveness for all the erring, but, as God is just above us, these breezes shall be forever soft with love for all the brave men who made these battlefields of the nation glorious. [Applause.]

After the Revolutionary war, after the Mexican war, after the war of 1812 the people tired somewhat of listening to the soldiers and to their claims; and yet years ago the people of this country crowned with glory the defenders of our country in those wars, until to-day the patriotic sons and daughters of the land are looking backward still to the old Revolutionary records to find some ancestors in whose veins their blood flowed—men who made glorious the battlefields of the Revolution. I can remember how, after the Mexican war, we tired of the soldiers; and yet to-day we are pensioning these old veterans. Years ago we ceased to be tired in defense of the soldiers of the Revolutionary war, and history long years ago ingrafted their names upon the pages of undying fame, and the man does not live who dares lift his hand or crook his finger against one of the brave defenders of his country who fought against the aggressions of the British. [Applause.]

So it is with the soldiers of the Mexican war. So it is with the soldiers of the war of 1812. If our nation lives, it shall live because men fought to defend it. If it shall live, just so certainly shall the defenders of this nation live in everlasting glory, and the soldiers of the war of 1861 shall, as certainly as the soldiers of the war of the Revolution or the war of 1812, pass to the zenith above as fixed stars in the firmament of our nation's glory, forever to shine undimmed while we have a flag and a destiny. All the brave men of our country, then, ought to stand here to defend those who fought for our land. We ought to stand here as a wall against any narrow, contracted interpretation of any law which holds out a pittance to these brave men. We ought to stand here and insist that the law shall be fairly executed and that a broad, catholic spirit shall sweep over all, until all of us are lifted up with a patriotic spirit, to say "Blessed evermore," in defense of the soldiers of our Republic.

I know that gentlemen upon the other side are as patriotic in defense of their country as we. We can join hands, then, in defense of those who saved the nation for you and saved it for me. All that is bad of the past is gone. All that is good of the past lives. So we can stand here to-day looking upon these matters in the broad spirit of humanity, and we can say most truthfully that bitterness has faded, that all things have changed, and that we stand here all as patriotic citizens in a redeemed country. And, remembering all of the past, its bitterness all gone, its glories all saved, with thankful hearts we can sing—

Take heart; the waster builds again,
A charmed life old goodness hath.
The tares may perish, but the grain
Is not for death.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take a few moments of the time of the House in discussing the amendment which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] will introduce later on.

I favor the gentleman's amendment, with a few exceptions. I do not believe that his amendment goes far enough. It provides that no pensioner shall be dropped from the pension rolls hereafter unless fraud is clearly proven and proven in the United States courts of the different States. Therein I believe he is wrong. In place of saying that the fraud should be established in the courts of the United States he should provide that fraud must be proven in any court of record in any of the States. If this amendment should prevail, in my State it would have this result: All persons who live in the southern or the northern end of the State would have to travel 200 miles to get to the United States court in which this question is to be determined, and it would take two years' pension of the ordinary pensioner, receiving $12 a month, to go to the place where his case would be tried and there employ counsel to have it determined.

Then, gentlemen, we have no reason to believe that the Attorney-General of the United States is any more favorable to the soldiers than is the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, and if he is not, the result would be that informations would be filed in the different United States courts, and men would be dropped from the pension roll by the hundreds because of their inability to go to court to defend their cases. For that reason I believe that that amendment ought to be amended when presented, so as to provide that in any of the courts of record in any State these questions can be determined, and that the pensioner should have the right to appear in the court in his own county to have a determination whether his pension is based upon fraudulent evidence or whether it was properly granted.

Now, I desire to discuss for a few moments the amendment of the law granting pensions to widows. It is strange to me that in the Pension Department of the United States a widow, in order to secure a pension, is compelled to prove a great deal more than she is compelled to prove anywhere else, in order to secure the amount due her as a widow, under the laws of any of the States. If you go into the Pension Department with one of these claims, what is it necessary for a widow to prove? She must first prove her marriage. Then she must prove that neither her husband nor herself had been previously married. If they were previously married, she must prove the death or divorce of the former husband or wife.

Now, what is the result of that? The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] a while ago asked the name of some person who has had difficulty in securing a pension of this kind. In my own district there lives a widow, a Mrs. Shaw, who had been married to her husband for forty-five years. They had lived together all that time. He had held her out as his wife; everyone there knew that she was his wife. She had given birth to children as his wife. Yet when he died, having served his country four years, the record of the marriage could not be found, because the records in the county in which they had been married had been burned.

She was confronted with this condition, and how could she secure a pension? We proved by citizens who had known her that for forty years they had lived together as man and wife. The answer came back that that evidence was not sufficient. We then had to advertise in the county in which they were married, asking anyone who was present at that marriage and remembered it to notify us. In that way we discovered an old gentleman who had been present at the marriage, and we proved the marriage by him. Then, after a great deal of argumant pro and con with the Pension Department, we succeeded in convincing them that that evidence was sufficient to grant the pension.

Why, gentlemen, out in the State of Indiana a man can be convicted of bigamy upon evidence of marriage that will not sustain the granting of a widow's pension in the Pension Department of the United States. In my own experience I convicted a man in the courts of Perry County, Ind., for bigamy, upon this evidence: He lived with a woman at Indianapolis for eighteen years, holding her out to the world as his wife, saying to those he met and those he knew, "This is my wife." Children were born to them, and he introduced them as his children. He afterwards deserted her, and came to the southern part of the State, where he married again. In the circuit court of that district we proved the fact that he had recognized these children as his children, and that he had recognized the woman as his wife, and that is the only evidence of marriage we had. We proved his marriage again in the southern part of the State, and one of the best judges of Indiana, and now one of the appellate judges of that State, decided that that evidence was sufficient and sent him to the penitentiary for two years; and yet that evidence of marriage would not establish the fact of marriage in the Pension Department, so as to allow a woman to get a pension.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Was any appeal taken?

Mr. HEMENWAY. There was an appeal taken, and the opinion of the court was sustained by the supreme court of Indiana, is my recollection.

I want to say to the gentleman from New York, as he has invited my attention here, that I believe he is in harmony with this Administration. I believe his opinions of the pension law are in harmony with the views of the Administration. He said yesterday upon this floor that he did not believe the act of June 27, 1890, was right. I believe he is honest in it.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I beg pardon, sir. I did not claim to make any statement in opposition to the act of June 27, 1890. I said the act was on the statute books. I knew it could not be repealed and I would let it stand, but I stated that I was against any enlargement of the act.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Did not you say that you were opposed to that legislation when it passed?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I did not have the pleasure of being in this House in 1890.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If you had had that pleasure, you should have voted against the act of 1890?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I do not make any statement in reference to that.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I did not suppose you would answer. Well, I will ask this gentleman a question. I know of a case in my district where an old German soldier enlisted in the Army. He was afterwards taken with smallpox and taken to a hospital in South Carolina, the records of which were destroyed, and are therefore not in the War Department. He came out of that hospital with the scars of smallpox all over his face, with one eye almost out, and his hearing partially gone; yet I say that that man can not secure a pension under the old law. Why? I say to the Commissioner of Pensions, "Is not the fact that he entered the Army a sound man and came out with the smallpox, in that condition, sufficient evidence to show that he contracted the disease in the Army?" He says, "No, because there is no hospital record," the records having been burned. "Is not that fact stronger than human testimony that he contracted his disease in the Army, when he was a sound man when he enlisted and came out with the marks of the disease upon him?" He says, "No; that might be, and still he might not have contracted the disease in line of duty." And so you see we can not grant a pension under the old law to a man who has lost the sight of one eye and almost lost his hearing, because of the fact that he can not prove the contraction of the disease in line of duty.

I believe the gentleman is also in harmony with the board of revision appointed by order of the Secretary of the Interior; and yesterday, while on the floor, the gentlemon from New York asked that some specific case be pointed out in which a wrong had been committed. I have a case before me, to which I call attention. It is No. 611234, adjudicated by the board of revision after that board of revision was appointed under the order of the Secretary of the Interior.

By Order No. 164 of the Bureau, all pensions under the act of June 27, 1890, are rated as pensions under the old law.

That is, if a man was disabled, the disability was rated just the same as the rating would have been made under the old law up to $12 per month. But after this Order 164 was issued, the order and manner of rating was changed. Now, the Secretary of the Interior also instructed Commissioner Lochren to change Order No. 164, and the Commissioner, in his report to the Secretary of the Interior of 1893, says:

The statement of the medical referee above mentioned made it appear probable that under Order No. 164 many pensions were illegally granted, and, pursuant to your order of May 27, 1893, a board of revision was formed of the ablest and most experienced men of the Bureau to examine the cases allowed under that act, and cull out such as had no legal basis to rest upon, but with instructions to disturb no case where, by the most liberal construction of the evidence, the right to the pension could be sustained under any law.

Now, you know he said the most able and experienced of the Bureau were appointed on the board of revision.

I want to call your attention to this case to show you how well this board of revision has complied with that order. In this particular case, in reply to a slip I sent to the Pension Bureau, I received this:

That the pension under the act of June 27, 1890, has been dropped and discontinued for the reason that the disability from disease of chest and rectum and eczema had ceased to exist in a pensionable degree under said act.

Now, I want especially to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the evidence in this case. They have determined here in this case that the diseases for which this man was pensioned had ceased to exist. I want to give you the evidence, and the only evidence, before the Pension Department. In the first place, this gentleman filed his claim for pension and swore that he had these diseases and that he was disabled by them.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What was the disease?

Mr. HEMENWAY. There was disease of the chest, of the rectum, eczema, and heart trouble. He furnished evidence that he was almost totally disabled. He was examined by the board of examining surgeons appointed by the Pension Bureau, and they found, as the report shows, that by reason of heart disease he was disabled four-eighteenths; that he was disabled by lung disease six-eighteenths; that he was disabled by eczema four-eighteenths, making a total of fourteen-eighteenths, almost complete disability. That was the report of the board of examining surgeons. That was the evidence in favor of granting a pension, and the pension was granted. There is nothing in the office to show why the case was ordered to be reviewed, but, for some reason that I can not discover, the case was ordered up for revision, an order sent to the board of examining surgeons near where the pensioner lived to reexamine him, and he was notified to appear before them and be reexamined.

He declined to be reexamined by that board, assigning as his reason, in a sworn affidavit, that one of the members of the board was his personal enemy. The Commissioner did not issue a new order for the reexamination of the pensioner before another board, but the Pension Office received a letter from the president of the local board of examining surgeons before whom the pensioner had declined to appear. Before quoting the language of the letter let me remind the House that this board had not examined the man at all, but the president of it writes a letter to the Pension Bureau in which he says, among other things, that this claimant is "a man destitute of principle," that he is "the blackest and meanest man he ever saw"; that he is "no more entitled to a pension than a man who never saw the war," and that "there are a great many more just such men in southern Indiana."

That is the only evidence furnished on that side of the case. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] says there have been no wrongs committed in the Pension Bureau. I have called his attention to the proof in this case upon which the pension was granted, and now, in the face of this evidence showing that the man, on his own sworn statement, on the sworn statement of two of his neighbors, and on the report of a board of examining surgeons, showing him to have been disabled fourteen-eighteenths, almost totally disabled—when the pension had been granted upon that state of facts, I ask the gentleman from New York whether it is just to disregard that evidence and deprive the man of his pension merely upon a letter using such language as I have quoted here, a letter written by a man that the pensioner swore was his enemy, and who this letter would convince any man was his enemy?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. In the first place, you have not stated the evidence in this case; you have stated merely the conclusion of the first examining board.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have given the House the number of the case. I have been compelled to summarize the case because I can not occupy sufficient time to go over it in detail. I have given you the number of the case and stated the nature of the evidence, including the report of the examining board showing fourteen-eighteenths disability, and I have read you a portion of the letter upon which the Pension Office acted in withdrawing the pension. Now, I ask you, first, whether the evidence on which the pension in this case was granted was not a sufficient basis for granting a pension?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. It is impossible for me to answer questions as to the weight of evidence when I am not conversant with that evidence.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Assuming that my statement is correct, what is the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman what evidence he has——

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Commissioner of Pensions would not allow me to bring the papers in here——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. But what evidence have you that the ex parte letter written by this man in reference to the condition of affairs in southern Indiana with regard to pensions was the motive which actuated the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I assume that it was because it is the only evidence on file in the Pension Office against this pensioner, and they have no right to hide away evidence in secret and pass adversely upon claims upon such secret evidence. Whatever evidence they have ought to be placed on file so that it may be inspected.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. If this claimant was really disabled, why did he refuse to undergo a second examination?

Mr. HEMENWAY. He made a sworn statement that one of the members of that examining board was his personal enemy, and if you, as a lawyer, had a witness produced in court and you knew that he had written a letter calling your client the "blackest and meanest man" on earth, you would contend that that witness's testimony was not worth anything and ought not to count for anything.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I see no reason to believe that that letter had any influence whatever on the action of the Commissioner of Pensions. The mere fact that an improper letter is written to a public official is no evidence that the action of the official is taken upon that letter, for which he is in no way responsible.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then why was this man dropped from the rolls? That letter is the only matter that is filed after the original evidence in the case.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. How many men were upon that examining board before which the pensioner was ordered?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Three.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. And because he objected to one of the three judges appointed to try an issue of fact he declined to appear before them.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You claim, then, that because this man declines to go before a personal enemy and have that man pass upon his case he ought to be dropped from the pension roll, notwithstanding the fact that three reputable physicians, appointed by the Government, had already certified that his disability amounted to fourteen-eighteenths, or almost complete disability.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. If I were ordered, either as a claimant or as an attorney or counsel, to appear before three judges or referees upon an issue of fact, and I were aware as matter of fact that one of those judges was my personal enemy, I should still deem it my bounden duty to appear before the tribunal and proceed with my case.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You would not do your client justice if you allowed him to be tried before a judge whom you knew to be his personal enemy, and I do not believe that you, as a good lawyer, would any more allow a client to be tried in a court presided over by his personal enemy than you would allow your own case to be tried by such a court.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I will say one thing, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. In my view, the fact that this claimant was unwilling to submit to another examination as to his physical condition must be taken as in itself strong proof against him.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then I am certainly correct in my estimate of the gentleman, that he is in harmony with this Administration; and I am very glad that he has nothing to do with passing upon the claims in the Bureau of Pensions; and I hope that in a short time the gentleman whose rulings I have been criticising will not have any such power.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I was speaking of the evidence in this particular case.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, if this is a sample of what this experienced and able board of revision has done in these numerous cases where pensioners have been dropped from the rolls, their action is a disgrace to the Pension Office.

I do not know how many cases of this class have been passed upon by this board of revision. I have had only a short experience here, and have looked into only a few of these cases. But if this is a sample of the work of that board, it is a shame indeed that those gentlemen were appointed as a board of revision to revise the pensions of the pensioners of this country.

Now, I have another case in point. The gentleman from New York asked yesterday that these cases of wrong be pointed out, and he seems to be unable to determine when a case of wrong is pointed out. That I very much regret. But I have another case in my district, where a man received notice to appear before the board and be examined, and he declined to appear. About thirty days later he received a notice that "pursuant to the report of the board of examining surgeons" his pension had been decreased from $12 to $6 per month. What does that indicate to any man who has good common sense? It indicates that the very minute that board took that claim down from the files they marked the decrease from $12 to $6 per month, because, notwithstanding the fact that the pensioner did not appear before the board of examining surgeons, here comes the letter that "pursuant to the report of the board of examining surgeons" the pension had been decreased from $12 to $6 per month.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman give the number of that claim and the name of the party?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I can give the gentleman the name of the party, and later on I will furnish him the number of the claim. The name of the party is John C. Schafer, of Booneville, Ind.

Mr. PICKLER. The woods are full of such cases.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There is any number of such cases where notice has come in that way, that "pursuant to the report of the board of examining surgeons" a pension has been decreased, when, as a matter of fact, the person has not been examined. I can furnish quite a number of such cases.

But I have desired particularly to call attention to the case where that man was dropped from the pension roll, although the examining surgeon had declared he was almost totally disabled—dropped simply upon the strength of a vile, mean letter of a man who happened to be upon the examining board. Yet the gentleman from New York can not see that any wrong was done. He certainly does not mean what he says when he gets up here and says that he really does not believe any wrong has been done in such a case.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. When a member of the House rises and says to me that I do not mean what I say, I must protest. I mean absolutely what I say.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then the gentleman will excuse me. I meant to say I hoped he did not mean what he said.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The gentleman proceeds upon a wrong assumption. He assumes that this improper letter influenced the Government official.

Mr. HEMENWAY. How can I assume anything else? It is the only evidence filed after the original case is made out.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have never known in any case an honest judge or an honest Government official who would be influenced by an ex parte attack; and I do not believe the Commissioner of Pensions was so influenced.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I coincide with the gentleman. I have never known an honest judge who would be influenced in that way. [Laughter.] The gentleman from New York, I have no doubt, is sincere in his idea concerning the pension laws. Surrounded as he is in his city with all the luxuries of city life, as all men are in ordinary circumstances in our cities, he does not realize the condition of these poor men out in the Western States who are receiving pensions. If you go down into the southern part of my State, or into Ohio or Illinois, or any of the great Central or Western States, you will find there these old men drawing pensions of $12 per month; and God knows they deserve them, for their pensions are generally their only support—all that they have to live upon. I have known such men during the last year to work for 40 and 50 cents a day.

This Democratic Administration that we have had to contend with for the last two years has been instrumental in throwing these men out of employment in the factories and other establishments in the cities, so that numbers of them have had to go out into the country. And I have known those poor fellows to be working for 40 and 50 cents a day, and trembling every day of their lives for fear their pensions would be discontinued.

During the last campaign there was a man in my district who came to me and said, "I am with you all right; I am a Republican; but I am afraid to say much at this time for fear I will lose my pension." That is the actual condition of things in that part of Indiana and all over the West. Men are so much afraid of losing their pensions that they hardly dare open their mouths. I do not blame them, because if a pensioner can be dropped from the rolls simply upon a letter from a member of a board of examining surgeons appointed by this Democratic Administration, a man has a right to fear that he may lose his pension. Why, if this practice is to continue, a man has no right at any time to believe that he is secure in the possession of his pension. Take the case cited by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY], the man who had lost an arm and a leg; if he can have his pension discontinued arbitrarily, what right has any man to believe that he is safe under the law?

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to make this suggestion: That they may be well alarmed about the condition of their pensions, and the probable loss of them, when the present efficient Secretary of the Interior, in a case of appeal, held that the excessive use of tobacco is a vicious habit and sufficient to deprive a soldier of a pension. I will bring in the decision in that case myself.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have no doubt of it. That is in line with the general idea.

Mr. Chairman, I have already stated I do not believe that the Administration believes in pensions under the act of June 27, 1890. I do not believe this Administration tries to carry out the law in its spirit and to its proper extent. They are seeking in every way, apparently, to avoid the purpose of the law, and prevent the securing of pensions under that law.

Now they say, "What are you going to do about it?" "How are you going to help yourself?" In the last Congress the Republicans came here and protested against the action of the Commissioner of Pensions in matters of this kind, but it had no effect, because in the last year 4,149 pensioners have been dropped from the rolls and 20,359 have been reduced in amount. Let me say right here also, in this connection, that in my opinion the Commissioner of Pensions has no more right to reconsider a case which has been passed upon by a former Commissioner than a judge who succeeds another on the circuit bench has the right to review the decision of a former judge where on the face of the papers there is no defect ascertained and no evidence of fraud. I do not stand here to say that when on the face of the papers there is open and palpable defect or manifest fraud the Commissioner should not have the power to reconsider it. But in those cases where there are no defects, where the evidence required by the law has been filed, where the examination of the board of surgeons has been held and their findings filed, which findings show the requisite disability, and when the papers are all right and in proper form, and there is no evidence of fraud, I claim that he has no right to review the case, and that he ought not to be allowed to do so.

I make this claim, Mr. Chairman, because if that is the law or if it is right, when is the pensioner safe in his right? If every succeeding Commissioner of Pensions has the privilege of reviewing the decisions of the former Commissioners, and if he can reduce pensions already granted to the extent of thousands upon thousands of dollars, employing examining boards to pass on the claims which have been already adjudicated, where is the thing to cease? Only last year, for instance, there was expended nearly $800,000 for boards of pension examiners in examining cases of this character. The letter to which I have just called attention in the case I referred to a few moments ago, in which the writer says there are "many just such cases" in southern Indiana, was evidently an invitation to the Commissioner to send out examining orders in other cases. Why? Because they say, "We can make $2 by examining each case; we can examine ten cases a day, and therefore we can make $20 a day. Send along your cases." How else can you construe such a letter as that when it says "there are many just such cases"? It is an invitation to the Commissioner to send out examination slips and to make other examinations.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Does the gentleman advance the proposition that no fraud, subsequently discovered, should be inquired into, and no ruling, however improper or fraudulent or corrupt, should be set aside by a subsequent Commissioner?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from New York ought to have understood my statement. I said that in any case where fraud could be proven the pension ought to be inquired into, or where on the face of the papers it appeared that the pension was granted by mistake an inquiry ought to be made. But where on its face it shows that the law has been complied with, and that the pension was granted according to law, it ought not to be, and in my opinion the Commissioner has no power under the present law to permit an inquiry to be made into the matter.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. You admit that whenever fraud taints the transaction, or wherever it appears upon the face of the papers that there is some illegality coupled with the granting of the pension, or wherever collusion appears, the pension can be set aside?

Mr. HEMENWAY. When it has been proven.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. That is, fraud, illegality, or collusion?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Now, let me ask the gentleman, after all your cry of fraud, after all the cry of fraud we have heard as to the pension roll, how many cases are proven of actual fraud? How many men have been indicted and convicted of actual fraud in procuring pensions?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I think we indicted one man in Indiana, and he was at once elected to be the mayor of the town or village.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That showed that your indictment was not based upon any evidence.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to answer the question of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. PICKLER. The year before last we gave the Department $400,000, and gave them 59 special examiners for the purpose of looking for fraud, and all the convictions they made were 39, and we do not know how many of those were soldiers. They were partly pension attorneys. That was the result reached by 59 examiners and the expenditure of $400,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. With nearly a million names on the pension rolls, and with the aid that this gentleman says was given to the Department, he states that 39 persons, pension attorneys and all, were found guilty of fraud. That was the result, notwithstanding there are nearly 1,000,000 persons on the rolls who draw pensions.

Mr. PICKLER. There were not 39 convicted of drawing pensions illegally, but there were only 39 convictions, lawyers and all. In some of the cases the attorney was guilty of some fraudulent transaction and was convicted, and in such a case as that the soldier was not concerned at all.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. With the permission of the gentleman from Indiana, I will answer.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You have my permission.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Very often a pension agent is responsible for the commission of thousands of frauds. In one case in New York a pension agent filed 8,831 fraudulent declarations or affidavits.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Do you charge that to the soldiers? I admit that in New York you had some men who were adepts in fraud. [Laughter.] Do you charge that to the soldier?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I believe one of the worst cases was that of a pension agent in the State of Indiana.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But do you charge that to the soldier?

A MEMBER. That Indiana agent was a Democrat.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am informed by a colleague here that the agent in Indiana who was convicted was a Democrat. Do you charge such a case as that against the soldier?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No; but in this Indiana case $439,000 were taken out of the Treasury of the United States. That money can never be recovered. The claimants themselves often were not cognizant of fraud, but still the money was taken out of the Treasury.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You are charging the crime of a New York lawyer upon the soldiers of the country.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I do not charge the soldiers with fraud except in those cases where they have committed fraud.

Mr. HEMENWAY. How many cases of that kind do you know of?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. There must be a great many.

Mr. PICKLER. Not by any means.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You have not been able to find them.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. There must have been a great many cases where the frauds have been committed.

Mr. PICKLER. Why do not they convict more of them, then?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. A great many applications have been rejected on the ground of fraud.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If you know of these cases, it is very strange that with three years of the Administration, with your detectives scattered all over the country seeking to establish fraud, that you have not been able to establish more than a very few cases where the soldier himself has been guilty of fraud.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up any more of the time of this House, but in conclusion I want to say that when we call attention to these things the only answer we get back is, "What are you going to do about it?" We have had this Democratic Administration with its troubles, with the distress that it has brought upon the country, and the old soldiers have had to suffer along with the rest of us. They have had their pensions taken away from them in many cases, as I believe, simply because some man high up in power in the Democratic party has suggested to the Commissioner of Pensions that the man ought not to draw a pension. I do not like to criticise the Commissioner, but when I have laid down before me evidence, as I have in this case, I feel like simply telling the truth, showing to the people of the country, as far as I can, some few decisions that this board of revision has made in the Pension Department; and in conclusion I desire to remind the gentlemen on this floor who may be opposed to the granting of pensions that it is a question that will not much longer disturb their peace of mind.

The grand old men who compose the Grand Army of the Republic, and who saved this country and are to-day an honor to the country they saved, are being followed to their graves by their comrades in arms, victims of injuries, wounds, and exposure contracted during service, until in the near future few of them will be left to annually decorate the graves of their deceased comrades, and to assure them further that the loyal young men of this nation in reverence for their deeds of valor will be found assuming those duties, and year by year decorating their graves and keeping fresh in the memories of the coming generations the lessons of patriotism they taught. Then, in reply to the question as to what we propose to do, we propose at the next election in this country, in November of this year, to elect a Republican President. [Applause.] And then we propose to go right at the root of this evil. We do not propose to place at the head of the Interior Department a man who comes from the South, whose sympathies can not be with the soldiers, but we propose to place there a loyal man from the North who will administer the pension laws of this country honestly and fairly, as they ought to be administered. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration has my hearty approval and support. I hold that it is not only a duty, but a privilege to vote for any measure that tends to brighten the declining years of the "boys in blue." They are, sad to say, rapidly passing away; not, as of yore, are they marching on to glorious victory in the cause of union and liberty, but silently, one by one, they are marching on to final review before the Great Captain, where soon they will have been mustered out forever. While they are yet with us let us hasten to do all in our power to smooth their pathway to the tomb. This nation has done much for the brave boys; it should do more; it can never do too much. To them we owe a debt which can never be paid. A pension is not a gratuity or charity; it is a sacred debt, which no statute of limitations will ever bar, for there is no limitation—must not be—to the honor and patriotism of the American people. [Applause.]

As I have said, the whole debt can never be paid, and we should cease this prating of economy in pensions. The idea of measuring patriotic service in a cause the grandest for which men ever fought and died is a narrow, sordid view. No gold can heal their wounds; no gold can restore their shattered health; no gold, though we had Crœsus's hoard, can purchase a balm for the broken hearts of the widows and orphans of our land. But by this measure and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois we can do something to aid them and cheer them during the few years they yet remain with us. And by this bill we can do more of great value. We can teach that patriotism is not mere sentiment, a thing apart from one's self, but a noble, constituent part of our very being. We can teach, best of all, to the youth of our land that this United States appreciates and loves a patriot and that this great nation is not unmindful of them and ungrateful to them. The value of this lesson, deeply implanted in the hearts of American youth, can not now be measured, and from generation to generation will be bearing rich fruit so long as this Republic endures. [Loud applause.]

But the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] said yesterday that we are "trying to deceive the soldier vote." I deny the statement, both for my party and myself. As for myself, I need not vote or speak to gain, should I ask it, the soldier vote in my district, which sent to the front as brave men as ever drew swords. Every man of them knows now, and I hope will ever know, that I am sincerely his friend. It is not a matter of very great importance to this country whether or not I, and many others on this side of the House, come back to Congress for another term, but it is a matter of very grave moment to the brave "soldier boys" that I and we, while here, see to it that we are not faithless to them and to our duty in their behalf. The Republican party has never forgotten and has never deceived the Union soldier. From the dark days of 1861 and all the way along through that great civil strife where death followed closely his every footstep, down to this very hour, we have protected, defended, and stood by him against all opposition, and we shall continue to do so despite the taunts of the gentleman from New York.

Among other irrelevant matter in his speech, he actually gives us the appalling statement that some one pension agent has lately been convicted of procuring false affidavits to obtain a pension—subornation of perjury. I may say the rarity of frauds in pension cases is most remarkable, and no class of cases in all our courts is as free from false testimony as in pension cases. But, suppose occasionally, or even often, the poor soldier gets a pension which he is not clearly entitled to, or a little more per month than the law and facts fairly entitle him to. What of it? It is better, infinitely better, that ninety and nine get more than entitled to than that one poor deserving soldier should be refused, and go down to his death—his last sight and thought being of an ungrateful country, which he defended in her direst peril. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I would go further than this bill. There should be larger appropriations for clerical and other help in the Pension Department to facilitate and hasten the granting of pensions, if the delay is caused by lack of help. I confess the ways of the Pension Department resemble the ways of Providence—in one respect only—its "ways are past finding out." It possesses neither justice, pity, mercy, nor any other attribute except mystery. Allow me to read a copy of a notice frequently sent to applicants:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., ——— —, 1896.

SIR: Relative to the above-entitled claim, you are advised that it is now being considered with a view to its final disposition. The result will be communicated at the earliest practicable date.

Should it be found, however, that additional evidence is required, a proper call for such testimony will promptly issue.

Very respectfully,

WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

This circular letter has a tendency to lighten the heart and brighten the prospects of the poor soldier, and the Pension Department is thanked for this much. But the poor, deluded soul waits weeks and weeks, and months and months, and no pension comes. He then writes his member of Congress again, who calls up the case, when, strange to say, it is discovered by the careful and generous officials in the Department that there is a conflict of testimony—one physician testifying that the applicant was afflicted with laryngitis, while another called it bronchitis, or perhaps one called it heart disease, while the other stated it was disease of the heart. [Laughter.] These are not actual experiences in given cases, but are fair illustrations of the trifling, technical excuses made by the Pension Department. Let me give you a copy of another familiar letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., ——— —, 1896.

SIR: In response to inquiry of Hon. ——, ——, for information as to the status of your claim for pension, above cited, you are advised that it awaits replies to letters of inquiry addressed by this Bureau to parties supposed to have personal knowledge of facts touching the merits of the claim. Upon receipt of the same the claim will have further attention.

WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

What do these "letters of inquiry" mean? Mr. Chairman, it is high time that the old soldiers and all other citizens of this land should know the truth. These so-called "letters" are nothing less than calling on postmasters throughout the country to give opinion as to the merits of the given case. All sworn testimony of applicant, of his comrades, of physicians and others is thrown aside, to be supplanted by the opinion only of some country postmaster, which is not even sworn to. I have been plain in this matter, because I feel deeply the injustice thus done the applicants for pensions. I desire to refer to another just cause of complaint. An applicant—a widow, for example—inquires the cause of delay in her case, and she is informed that "testimony is required that she has not remarried." She obtains and forwards this testimony, and then waits weary months, hoping and praying, and then inquires again, when she is informed that she must furnish testimony of her marriage to the deceased soldier. This she promptly gives, and then another long period of waiting, and she asks again the cause of delay, when she is requested to furnish proof of her husband's death. And so it goes, it being the apparent purpose of the Bureau to delay the granting of the pension as long as possible. How easy and fair it would be to request at one time the testimony needed on all points. A pension applicant who has a just claim ought to have it made as easy as possible, consistent with justice, to obtain a pension. Their pathway through life should be strewn with roses and not with thorns. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I especially favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF], which provides that a pension can not be arbitrarily taken away, but only by procedure in a United States court. The conduct of the Pension Department in cutting off pensions (to use a mild term) is most reprehensible. An order issues, according to the practice of the present Commissioner, that unless certain testimony is furnished within a very short time his pension will be cut off. Think, for a moment, what this means! Simply this: You, old soldier, your comrades, your physicians, and other witnesses have, in the opinion of the Pension Bureau, perjured yourselves, and unless you prove very quickly that you are not all perjurers we will cut off your pension. This is the order in sum and substance, and is an infamous reflection on American manhood and a disgrace to the American nation. [Applause.]

But the gentleman from New York fears, if this bill passes, that too many widows whose incomes are less than $500 will get pensions, and thus further deplete the Treasury. A pitiful and pitiable plea on the score of economy. Has it, indeed, come to this, that the brave soldiery of our nation and the deserving widows shall be deprived of pensions because of the free-trade heresy of the Democratic party? The gentleman referred yesterday to "our depleted Treasury," and to "our continuing deficit." Who depleted it, and what causes the deficit of millions per month? He knows the answer. The Wilson-Gorman bill of the Fifty-third Congress, passed by the Democratic party. You occupy, indeed, a desirable position before the country; you cut off revenues, deplete the Treasury, and then say to the soldiers and widows, You can not have any pensions because we have no money. Are not you proud of your conduct?

But I observed when we took a vote a few weeks ago on the revenue bill offered by my distinguished friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], which would give us some $40,000,000 of additional revenue, the gentleman from New York voted against that measure. So he is in this most peculiar and perplexing position: He will not vote for the pending bill, because the Treasury has no money to pay the pensions; and he did not vote for, but against, a bill that would give the Treasury the necessary money. I leave him in his midnight darkness, but first generously offering him this light and this text:

A protective tariff is the very inspiration of effort, while free trade is the lullaby of indolence.

I have prepared this thought for you; take it and ponder over it, and with your recognized ability I feel confident that you will never again give lack of revenue an excuse for depriving any soldier or widow of a pension. Had I my way, I would be most liberal with pensions, and by a protective tariff I would compel England to pay most of the bill.

I appeal to all of you to support this measure and the amendment, and thus show the soldier boys that we appreciate their heroism and patriotism, and that we love the Union they preserved. Let us see to it that the brave boys who gathered the roses of glory from the stone wall at Gettysburg, and plucked the rich, ripe fruit of human freedom on the field of Appomattox, shall not be forgotten. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, there is one point of view from which to examine the Pension Bureau which is not generally taken, and that is to consider it as a court. It is not only a court, but if we consider the multitude of cases adjudicated and the aggregate amount of judgments rendered, it is beyond all comparison the hugest court, not only in the world, but the hugest court that ever has been in the world. According to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the year ended June 30, 1895, for the last year there were 96,337 cases decided in favor of the claimants and 103,355 cases decided against the claimants, making an aggregate of 199,692 cases decided in all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in all the length and breadth of this world where is there a court that adjudicates so many cases? Not only that, but its judgments aggregate many millions of dollars, because every pension certificate granted is in the nature of an execution against the Government of the United States, which that Government honors and respects every quarter by paying the amounts allowed. There are now pending in that court 552,210 cases undisposed of. In the last year, in addition to the 199,692 cases adjudicated, 104,160 cases were acted upon by the board of revision. That board reduced 20,359 pensions, and graciously allowed 77,373 pensions to remain as they were in consequence of additional proof being submitted. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, here is a court, the most extensive that has ever been constituted in any Government upon the face of this earth, and yet, strange to say, there is not one syllable of law prescribing the pleadings, practice, and proof in that court. There is not a squire's court in the United States, there is not a recorder's court in any municipality of the American Government, that has not a law, enacted by the sovereign power, prescribing the pleadings, practice, and proof and the course of procedure, and yet the American people have stood by for thirty-odd years and allowed this pension court to go on in its adjudications without a syllable of law prescribing its procedure.

Mr. Chairman, what is the inevitable result of allowing a court to act exclusively on its own rules? I appeal to the lawyers of this House, what is the inevitable result of allowing a court to prescribe its own rules of procedure, to prescribe its own laws of evidence, to prescribe its own method of taking proof, and to prescribe its own way of adjudication when there is no appeal to a higher court? The result is that you have a court that is arbitrary, with a big A; you have a court that is sure to be technical; you have a court that is absolutely certain to be whimsical; and, what is worst of all, you have a court that is everlastingly certain to be despotic and tyrannical. [Applause.] I do not care what court it is. Those of us who practice in the United States courts, in those cases where there is no appeal granted to the Supreme Court of the United States, or to the court of appeals, know that many of them are intensely arbitrary and oftentimes domineering and tyrannical. Now, there is no appeal allowed from the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions except to the Secretary of the Interior, whose spirit oftentimes prompts the very decision complained of; and that sort of appeal amounts to no more than an appeal from a clerk to the judge presiding in the court. It is like an appeal from a servant for the injury done you by him to the master who inspired or commanded the injury you complain of.

Mr. Chairman, what are the results of the fact that we have a court with such stupendous jurisdiction, and yet no law prescribing its pleading, practice, or proof? The results are absurd rulings, arbitrary methods, and tyrannical decisions.

Let me go into particulars, and see if my general proposition is sustained by the facts which illustrate the history of the adjudications made by the Bureau of Pensions.

In the first place, let us take the question of marriage as it arises in the granting of pensions—for a large part of what I have to say here to-day will be in behalf of the widows of old soldiers. The old soldiers, to some extent, are with us still, thank God, to fight their own battles; and they have ballots in their hands which every man in this House respects; but the widows are poorly equipped to fight their battles; they have no ballots to wield and no voices to raise politically in their own behalf.

Where the question of marriage enters into the granting of pensions, and some special examiner of the Bureau of Pensions takes it into his head that a certain woman is not the lawful widow of the soldier, I care not what amount of proof is piled up in her behalf, that widow can never get a pension, or at least not without great difficulty. If any gentleman wants a case in illustration of this proposition, I will give him a case, the case of Mary F. Barker, for whose benefit I have introduced a special bill in this House. Mary F. Barker was found by a jury of the United States circuit court at Knoxville, Tenn., to be the lawful widow of James M. Barker, the man she claimed to have been her husband. The judge of that court, David M. Key, at one time Postmaster-General of the United States, once Senator from Tennessee, and for many years United States district judge for the eastern district of Tennessee—Judge David M. Key, who presided on the trial of that case, furnished a written opinion, which is now on file in the Pension Bureau, that, under the proof submitted in the case, the verdict of the jury was right, and that Mary F. Barker was the lawful widow of James M. Barker, the man whose widow she claimed to be. And yet, Mr. Chairman, that good woman, with a family of beautiful children, whom I have seen, has been declared by the Bureau of Pensions to have been an adulteress, and every one of her children have been branded as bastards.

When a widow undertakes to prove her widowhood, what obstacles are thrown in her way? I will recount some of them to show the absurd and arbitrary rules of this pension court. There may be gentlemen here who have not looked into this subject very thoroughly, and I ask them to give me their attention for a few minutes, because my duty to my constituents has required me to investigate this pension question thoroughly. When I was pension agent at Knoxville in 1883 I took pains to ascertain the number of pensioners in the different Congressional districts in the United States, and I found that at that time there were more pensioners in the Second Congressional district of my State than in any other district in the country. Those people are looking to me to see that their interests are properly represented here, and that their wrongs are brought to the attention of this Congress. For these reasons I have made the pension laws and the rulings of the Pension Bureau a special study, and I ask attention while I comment upon some of them.

First, then, as to the proof of marriage required of widows.

The Pension Bureau has a general letter, Form No. 3-360, requiring the testimony of "at least two disinterested witnesses having personal knowledge of the facts, showing whether the claimant was ever divorced from the soldier." That is the first thing put in her way to delay or defeat her pension. When the widow shows that her husband is dead, and proves that she had been married to him, producing her marriage certificate, then they send out this Form 3-360 requiring her to produce the testimony of "at least two disinterested witnesses, having personal knowledge of the facts, showing whether the claimant was ever divorced from the soldier." [Laughter.]

Now, what does that circular require? First, it requires the applicant for a pension to prove a negative. She must produce two disinterested witnesses who have "personal knowledge of the facts." What facts? Why, the facts or the fact that there are no facts. [Laughter.] In other words, that she never was divorced. Now, where is the court in the world that ever required in any case such evidence as that?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GIBSON. I thought I was to have an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman was given only ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GIBSON. I would like to have three-quarters of an hour. I would not have started off if I had thought I was to have only ten minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. All right. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee be allowed time to conclude his remarks.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON] be allowed three-quarters of an hour to conclude his remarks.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

Mr. GIBSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the next general letter sent out by the Commissioner is Form No. 3-470, requiring the affidavit of the widow to "show whether her husband served in the military or naval service of the United States prior to the alleged muster, and after the date of his alleged discharge; and if he did that the names of all organizations in which he served, and the period of such service, should be stated in the affidavit."

Of course, not one widow in a hundred can properly make such an affidavit as that, showing all the military organizations in which her husband ever served before the alleged muster and after the alleged discharge; yet the widow applying for a pension is required to specify all the organizations in which her husband served and the periods of his service.

After she has managed to satisfy the Bureau on this point, they bring on another general letter, Form No. 3-479, which reads as follows:

It should be shown by competent evidence whether the claimant or soldier had been previously married. If so, the death or divorce of the former wife or husband should be proved by a verified copy of the public record, or other competent evidence.

Then comes a fourth requirement which applies in certain cases, as in the case which I read to the House a while ago—the case of Selena Brewer, widow of Daniel Brewer, Company E, Third Tennessee Mounted Infantry; number of claim, 590484. She was required to prove "by the affidavits of two credible and disinterested witnesses, who are able to speak from personal knowledge, by reason of continuous acquaintanceship with the soldier back to 1839, when he was 20 years of age, and with you (the widow) back to 1832, when you were 16 years of age, as to whether he or you were ever married prior to your marriage with each other; whether you or he were ever divorced from each other during the period from your marriage to the soldier's death." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, that good woman, who lives in my county of Knox, and whose post-office address is Campbell, Knox County, Tenn., is obliged to hunt up witnesses who have known her continuously for the period of sixty-three years. Here is a woman 80 years of age, who is required to show by witnesses who have known her for sixty-three years "continuously" (that is the language of the requirement), and are "able to speak from personal knowledge by reason of continuous acquaintanceship" with her since 1832, that neither she nor the soldier who was her husband was ever married prior to their marriage to each other!

These are some of the impediments which are placed in the way of the widows of our gallant heroes to prevent their obtaining pensions. Now, after all this has been done here comes another general letter—Form 3-507. Why, actually there are not figures enough to enable the Pension Office to number their forms, and they have to go by a sort of reduplicating process! A poor widow writes on to the Department in terms something like these:

I have made all my proof; I have furnished everything that the Bureau of Pensions has required of me, and when, in God's name, is my pension coming? I am having a hard time. My husband had a hard time to support me and our children while he was living, and now he is dead—he has been dead for three or four or five years, and I and my fatherless children are starving. In God's name, shall we be forced to go to the county poorhouse? Let me know, Mr. Commissioner, what is to be done and why my claim has not been adjudicated.

And what is the answer she gets? He sends back Form 3-507, as follows:

Your claim, madam, awaits replies to letters of inquiry addressed by this Bureau to parties supposed to have personal knowledge of facts touching the merits of the claim.

[Laughter.]

How long does the Department wait for answers to these letters? It waits one, two, and three years. I have evidence in my possession showing that in some cases it has waited many, many months for answers to letters of inquiry addressed to these persons "supposed to have personal knowledge of facts." Now, who are these parties that have been written to by the Commissioner? Oftentimes personal enemies of the applicant for a pension; in a majority of cases political enemies—envious-hearted people, who would rejoice to see the widow and her children or the old soldier carted to the poorhouse. And how are the names of these parties obtained? By secret and confidential letters written by the Bureau of Pensions to the postmasters of the country, saying, in substance, that if they know of any suspicions, any rumors, any hearsay reports affecting the character of the claimant's witnesses and will write to the Bureau of Pensions about the matter, their communications will be treated as confidential. These are some of the ordeals these widows of soldiers have to go through in order to obtain pensions.

Mr. Chairman, what is the policy of the pension laws? The policy of the pension laws is that the prosecution of a claim shall be so plain and easy—that the road to the Pension Bureau shall be made so smooth—that any ordinary person can prosecute his claim without the assistance of an agent. And the law so declares by requiring the Bureau of Pensions to furnish the claimant with all the necessary forms and blanks. That is the policy of the law.

Now, what is the policy of the Bureau of Pensions? The policy of the Bureau of Pensions is to make the prosecution of a claim so difficult that not even a claim agent can understand how to prosecute one in accordance with the rules of procedure adopted by the Commissioner of Pensions. That is the difference between the two policies. The policy of the law is humane, is charitable, is patriotic; whereas the policy of the Bureau of Pensions is tyrannical and demoniac. [Laughter and applause.] I say here in my place that I do not believe the Commissioner of Pensions himself, if he were to assume the disguise of John Smith, could possibly get a pension claim through the Bureau of Pensions to save his life. [Laughter.]

Now let us see how easy they have made it for a claimant to prosecute his own claim. Let me read you Order No. 229.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1893.

[Order No. 229.]

In the preparation of testimony in support of claims in pension cases all statements affecting the particular case and not merely formal must be written, or prepared to be typewritten, in the presence of the witness and from his oral declarations then made to the person who then reduces the testimony to writing or then prepares the same to be typewritten. And such testimony must embody a statement by the witness that such testimony was all written or prepared for typewriting (as the case may be) in his presence and only from his oral statements then made, stating also the time, place, and person, when, where, and to whom he made such oral statements, and that in making the same he did not use and was not aided or prompted by any written or printed statement or recital prepared or dictated by any other person, and not attached as an exhibit to his testimony.

Any needless delay in the preparation of such testimony after such oral statement by the witness, or in forwarding the same to this Bureau, and any material alteration or erasure, will be cause for rejecting such testimony.

Approved:
HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

Under that circular it is almost impossible for anybody but a shrewd lawyer to prepare an affidavit in a pension case that will pass muster in the Bureau of Pensions. Wagonloads of affidavits are received at the Pension Bureau every day, and cartloads of those affidavits are rejected because they do not comply with Order No. 229.

Now, Mr. Chairman, after all this has been done, after pensioners have gone through all this trouble, is that the end of it? When the soldier or the soldier's widow thinks, "Now surely my pension will be allowed"—when the applicant writes to the Bureau to find out what is the condition of the case, what news is received in reply? The Commissioner writes:

It has been deemed necessary to refer the case to a special examiner, who will notify you of the time and place of his examination.

[Laughter.]

Who are those special examiners? They are clerks detailed from the Pension Bureau to go out into the country to examine claims; and while no particular commission is given them for that purpose, yet human nature is so constructed that as soon as a man becomes a pension examiner he considers he is doing good service to keep as many claims from being allowed as he can. He becomes a prosecutor of every claimant and oftentimes the persecutor of every claimant, and thinks he is doing good work if he prevents a claim from being allowed. If he succeeds in doing this, he glorifies himself, rejoices and exults. [Laughter.] If he manages to keep a poor widow or an old soldier from getting his claim, he rejoices with great joy; but if he is compelled, as he sometimes is, to report in favor of a claim, he apologizes for it to the Bureau and halfway promises that if he is pardoned that time he will try and not do so again. [Laughter.]

This is the class of people who are sent out to investigate the pension claims and—God save the mark!—the Pension Commissioner says he sends them out "to aid the claimants in perfecting their claims!" And so it is; the policy of the Pension Office is delay, delay, delay.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
To the last syllable of recorded time.

And the pensioner must wait patiently, and starve or perhaps die, before his claim is allowed. And after a pension has been granted, after the claimant has gone through the fiery furnace and escaped from the den of lions, so uncertain are the pensioner's rights that the Commissioner or any of his deputies can any day stop the pension and brand the pensioner as a fraud and a cheat. I hope there is no secret policy in these delays.

Now, sir, I was out in the Rocky Mountains several years ago, and I heard something there which may be of some use to the members of this House; and that is, that the regular soldiers out there do not want any of the Indians killed. They will chase an Indian for a thousand miles to capture him, and bring him back to the reservation; but they do not want to kill him. Why? Because when the Indians are all killed there will not be so much use for the Regular Army and its officers. [Laughter.] Now, I hope that no such spirit as that prevails in the Bureau of Pensions to cause this needless and vexatious delay in the granting of pensions. I hope that this spirit does not prevail there, and that the reason they do not allow pensions more rapidly is not the fear that when the claims are all allowed there will be no more work for the clerks and the examiners and other officials. I repeat, I hope that is not the spirit prompting the officials in the Pension Bureau, to so delay the decision of claims as to keep work for the clerks, messengers, examiners, Commissioner, and the deputy commissioners for the next one hundred and fifty years, they knowing that after these claims are all allowed there will be no more work in the Bureau for them to do and that Othello's occupation will be gone. I repeat, I hope that is not the spirit that prompts all these delays and all this denial of justice.

There is a class of people who find fault with the widow pensioners and the old soldiers, and would like to see all the pensioners dead. They are in their way, and whenever a pensioner dies they rejoice. They are ready to sing a song like that sung on one occasion by a lot of men who belonged to a society of undertakers. They had an undertakers' banquet, in which it was agreed that the best act of a man was to die. An undertaker does not have much use for a living man, but he has great respect for a dead one. [Laughter.] Some one at this banquet got up and sung the Indian plague song, with a glass in his hand, and the others with glasses in their hands:

So stand to your glasses steady;
'Tis here the revival lies;
A cup to the dead already—
Hurrah for the next that dies!

[Laughter.]

So, the enemies of our pensioners seem ever ready to rejoice when a pensioner dies.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I maintain that pension legislation has many grand features to commend it generally to the good opinion, not only of the American people, but to all mankind. In the first instance, the one hundred and forty millions of money expended in pension payments in this country is no burden on the people. It comes mainly out of the pockets of the rich and those who consume the luxuries of life, and goes largely into the pockets of the poor. It remains in the country, circulating freely everywhere, and it has tended more than anything else in this country to lessen and soften the hardness of the times through which we have been going as a result of a Democratic Administration. In the next place, it is a payment of a lawful debt—an honest obligation.

There may be some old soldiers present who remember that in May, 1865, when Grant's army and Sherman's army were marching up Pennsylvania avenue in this city, those war-scarred heroes, those veterans of a thousand battles, those saviors of the Union, those preservers of the grandest nation that God has ever permitted to live in all the annals of time—as they marched up Pennsylvania avenue with martial tread, and a hundred military bands thrilling the hearts of all, every tree blossoming with the Stars and Stripes, every window filled with the faces of beautiful women and gayly clad girls, and the sidewalks thronged with thousands and tens of thousands of patriotic men—as these old soldiers marched up the avenue there was seen placarded in front of this Capitol in enormous letters these words: "The only debt this Union can not pay is the debt it owes to the Federal soldiers." [Applause.]

Suppose a man had saved my life ten or twenty years ago? Could I afford to allow that man to suffer for the necessaries of life, even though he had not been injured a particle in his struggle to save my life. On the other hand, if he had lost his life or been injured, and I were to refuse to come to the rescue of his family in the day of their distress, I would be branded by all right-thinking people as a mean-spirited man, whose life was not worth the saving. Well, if it would be right and proper for an individual to reward a person who had saved his life, how much more so in a great nation? A man lives a few years and then passes away, and is gone and forgotten, but a great nation lives forever.

Do not let us flatter ourselves that we are going to have no more wars. How old are we as a nation? Only a little over a hundred years. And how many wars have we had? The war of the Revolution, the war of 1812, the war of 1846–1848 with Mexico, and the great rebellion from 1861 to 1865. Now, more than thirty years have passed by without any war. Never before in the history of the United States have we had so long a period without a war as the period between 1865 and 1896. Wars are bound to come, and when the next war comes—we know not how soon nor from what quarter; when the flag is run to the top of the pole, and the drum is beaten and the bugle blows; when the President issues his proclamation calling upon the sons of freedom to rally to the defense of their country's cause, what then?

Why, the sons of these old soldiers and the sons of their widows will spring up as from the ground, 6,000,000 strong, ready to bare their breast to any foe in defence of their country's rights, remembering that if they fall their widows will be cared for; if they are wounded or diseased they will be cared for, and that what they lay upon the altar of their country, their country will generously reward them for. [Applause.] On the other hand, suppose the country fails to take care of her old soldiers and of the old soldiers' widows, and then war comes in the land, what will they say? They will say, "I can not afford to risk my life for a country which, when her life has been saved, and my health is gone, will not care for me, or should I rest under the sod of the battlefield will not care for my widow or my orphan children."

So, Mr. Chairman, this pension legislation is a patriotic policy. It is big wisdom, it is grand statesmanship, it is lofty justice, and I hope never to live to see the day when my country fails to take good care of all old soldiers and all their widows and children. [Applause].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 25) to extend the time for making an assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 628) to provide an American register for the steamer Miami; and

A bill (S. 43) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof."

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. HOPKINS in the chair.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this question I had hoped to remain a listener only; but some remarks made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] in my opinion make it necessary that I should say a word on behalf of the people of my State. The gentleman in his remarks said, "We will elect a Republican President and will place at the head of the Interior Department a man who does not come from the South, whose sympathies must be against the soldier, but some one who will fairly sanction and approve of the pension laws of the United States."

As a representative from a district of the State of Virginia, as the only Republican representative of that State, as a Confederate soldier who followed the fortunes of the Confederacy from Manassas to Appomattox, I rise to say that the gentleman misapprehends the sentiments of my people and the sentiments of the Southern soldier. [Applause.]

I rise to say that in my district and in my State there is no sentiment, no feeling against the Government paying pensions to the Federal soldiers, to their widows, and to their orphans.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. My remark was, "no gentleman from the South whose sympathies are against the Union soldier."

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I am glad to accept the correction of the gentleman. I want to say that with few exceptions, and those exceptions men who have no influence in my State or section, there is not a sentiment against paying pensions to the Federal soldiers. [Applause.] I come to speak here for the Confederate soldier, and I speak the truth when I say every Confederate soldier not only approves, but sanctions from the bottom of his heart the policy which would reward and keep from want and from suffering the men who fought for the Union in the war. [Applause.]

I want to say here to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] that there is a loyalty to the flag of this Union in the South to-day which can not be appreciated or understood by gentlemen who have not mingled with our people and who do not understand their sentiments and appreciate their principles upon this question.

Mr. Chairman, this is all I desire to say. I wish to put myself upon record in behalf of my people, and to say to the gentleman that you may well trust the fortunes and pensions of the Federal soldiers to the old soldiers of the South and to the people of Virginia. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the time of the committee but a few minutes, especially to speak on the amendment submitted by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF]. Before doing so, however, I wish to make a few remarks on the matter of pensions generally. There are two theories upon which pensions are based, as recognized by the best writers upon that subject. One grants pensions by the Government for wounds received or disease contracted while in line of duty. These have always been recognized as debts, and just debts, which our Government has recognized as binding by the act of July 14, 1862, which provided that these pensions should be paid. Every Union soldier who enlisted after that time, or who was in the service at that time and reenlisted as a veteran, had, at least, the right to regard the law providing the pension in the same light as the law that gave him his pay and his clothing. In the one case he got his pay by provision of law, in the other he received his pension by provision of law; and there was the same duty upon the part of the Government to discharge the one obligation as there was the other, and there was the same right of the recipient to receive one as the other.

The soldier who served was entitled to his pay; the soldier who was disabled in the service was entitled to his pension. There is another theory upon which pensions are granted—that is, upon distinguished services. These have been regarded by the best writers upon that subject as gratuities. A citizen is bound to render the best service that he can to his country in whatever capacity he may serve, whether in civil or military life, and the Government owes him nothing for bringing to the discharge of those duties the best efforts of his life. Now let us come to the act of June 27, 1890. I will concede for the purpose of this argument that that act taken by itself was a gratuity. It was not based upon wounds received or disease contracted in line of duty. But in order to fairly construe that act of June 27, 1890, we ought to consider a little antecedent history. Before that time many of the survivors of the late war who were unable to obtain a pension under the general laws had become enfeebled by age and disease.

Some of them were in poorhouses and almshouses throughout the land. Some of them were getting along as best they could through the charity of their friends. It became the policy of the Government, and that policy was crystallized in the act of June 27, 1890, that the old soldier who was so feeble or disabled by disease as to incapacitate him for manual labor, not the result of his own vicious habits, should, to the extent of $12 a month, be pensioned; that he should not be subjected in his poverty, weakness, and old age to rely upon the charity of the municipality in which he lived; that no charity need necessarily come to him from a municipality perhaps that had no sympathy with him or the cause for which he fought. To the extent of $12 a month it became the policy of the Government that he could look for a support to that Government whose uniform he had worn, whose arms he had carried, and whose flag he had followed, and for whose safety he had risked his life. It was the voice of the people as expressed through their representatives upon a question of policy; it was right. The voice of the people in a republic upon a question of policy is the voice of God. It then became as much the duty of the Government to fairly construe the act of 1890 as the act of 1862; and there is no difference in principle between pensions under the two acts.

It is said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] that pensions are a gratuity, and that the Government is only under a moral obligation to pay them, and not under any legal obligation. Assume that to be true, the moral duty and obligation upon the part of the Government is the same as the legal duty and obligation would be if it were a citizen from whom the duty or obligation was due on the same facts. It is the duty of the Government to make its moral obligations its legal obligations. Strictly speaking, in time of war there is no vested right between the Government and its subjects. Strictly speaking, the Government, for its preservation and safety, may invoke the service of all its ablebodied citizens. It may take their property. It may pay them for it or it may withhold that pay if it sees fit. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON], who spoke a few days ago, called attention to the fact that there were loyal people in Tennessee who had furnished provisions to our Army during several months, and although thirty years had passed away the Government had not yet seen fit to pay them, and all the remedy it had given was to refer them to the Court of Claims. Even after a favorable judgment there the Congress might defeat it by refusing to appropriate money for its payment.

Now, these amendments that have been suggested by the committee are right. Take the first. We are making an appropriation for pensions, and ought we not to be allowed to determine under what conditions and how it shall be used? Yet, Mr. Chairman, I do not, however, rely upon either of these as giving very much relief to the old soldier. The difficulty is not so much in the law as it now exists as in the construction of the law by the Department. After we have adopted this bill with the amendments suggested by the committee, an unfriendly Commissioner and an unfriendly Secretary of the Interior may nullify all we do here.

Mr. PICKLER. Will my colleague allow me an interruption?

Mr. WOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. It seems to me it may be considered somewhat encouraging that only one gentleman on the other side has risen to defend the Bureau.

Mr. WOOD. On the question of any defect or any informality in the application upon which a pension shall hereafter be allowed, the gentleman from Tennessee has suggested a way that can very easily dispose of any relief that could be had under this first amendment. All that is necessary is for the Commissioner to write a few letters of inquiry to persons who are supposed to have some knowledge of the merits of the case and not to receive any answer to the letters. That could be easily done, if the parties inquired of were judiciously selected, and the application thus stayed until after this appropriation has expired.

The same is true with regard to that part which refers to the widow. There is only one method that has been suggested by this bill, so far, that will give much relief to the old soldier. That is by incorporating in it the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. GRAFF. And why should we not do it? We are appropriating the money. Why should we not say who shall have that money? We merely say that those now on the pension rolls shall have it; but why should we not say that those who are in danger of being cut off by the action of the Pension Bureau shall not be excluded from its benefits?

It is the people's money. We appropriate it. Ought we not to impose the conditions upon which it shall be distributed? The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF], if adopted, would probably give some relief. All the other provisions proposed are subject to unfriendly construction at the hands of an unfriendly Commissioner of Pensions. I was much interested in the Circular No. 229, read here by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON]. I have great respect for the legal ability of the gentleman from New York, who addressed this House yesterday. I have a high appreciation of the great sacrifice he made in quitting a very lucrative practice and coming here to make points of order against old soldiers. Yet, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that he, or any other man on this floor, is good enough lawyer to prepare the evidence in a pension case under Order 229 and be certain that it will not be rejected for some defect or informality.

It is required that the evidence shall be written by the witness or dictated by him and reduced to writing or typewriting, and shall be furnished without any needless delay, either in doing the work or in forwarding it to the Bureau, and that any such delay shall be cause sufficient for its rejection. Who determines what is "needless delay"? That question is determined by those who administer the laws, and I must say that, with a hostile Commissioner making the decision an old soldier would not have much more chance of getting a pension than a negro voter would have of getting a vote when he gave an interpretation of the provision of a State constitution to the satisfaction of an election officer in Mississippi or South Carolina. [Laughter.] After all, the best remedy to reach these evils, so far as this bill is concerned, is to adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, and God knows whether even that would do the work or not. Some Bowler might arise and make a point of order on that. [Laughter.] Possibly it might be "held up." It might be "decided" that the bounty of the Government, through its chosen representatives, should not be extended to the man who went out to defend his country in its hour of peril any more than it should be extended to the misguided and unsophisticated Louisiana sugar planters, who went out seeking "tariff reform" and came back shorn. I hope the amendment may prevail. [Laughter. Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, the people of my district are deeply interested in the bill under consideration, as well as the amendments proposed thereto. They are a loyal, patriotic people, who believe in pensions, not only in pensions, but in liberal pensions, to the old soldier of the late war, their widows and orphans, and there is no divided sentiment on that subject.

There does not seem to be any objection on the part of any gentleman on this floor to the bill now under consideration. There is, however, some objection to the provisos in the bill as well as to some of the amendments proposed. Now, I am inclined to believe that these provisos were inserted with the idea that, like the revenue bill passed the other day, it was to operate only temporarily; in other words, until the Democratic party ceases to control the nation. The committee, I apprehend, did not suppose for a moment that by inserting this proviso they could compel the Bureau of Pensions to correct the wrongs inflicted upon the old soldiers of this country, and I regret that the committee felt the necessity of adding these provisos. The language of these provisos is as follows, to wit:

During the fiscal year 1897, in expending this appropriation, whenever a claim for pension under the act of June 27, 1890, has been, or shall hereafter be, rejected, suspended, or dismissed because of any defect or informality in the application, and a new application shall have been, or shall hereafter be, filed, and a pension has been, or shall hereafter be, allowed in such claim, such pension shall date from the time of filing the first application, provided the evidence in the case shall show the disability to have existed, or to exist, at the time of filing such first application, anything in any law or ruling of the Department to the contrary notwithstanding.

During the fiscal year 1897, in expending this appropriation, it shall not be necessary for a widow, in establishing her claim to a pension under the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, to prove that she is without other means of support than her daily labor: Provided, That before she shall be entitled to a pension under the provisions of said law she shall prove that her net income does not exceed $500 per annum.

There is much reason for attaching these provisos to this appropriation bill, and I apprehend that we shall have little difficulty in ascertaining what motive prompted the committee in this respect. The reason is manifest to the most casual observer. It is the narrow and unpatriotic construction placed upon the pension laws of this country by the Pension Bureau. It is the extraordinary requirements demanded of the pensioner that induced the committee to attempt to relax some of these technical and complex rules established by the Bureau.

I want to invite attention for a few moments to some of the extraordinary rules and presumptions now prevailing in the Pension Bureau. I say "extraordinary" because I apprehend that in no other tribunal on the face of the earth are such rules and presumptions to be found. I shall ask attention first to some of the presumptions indulged in by this Bureau in passing upon the question whether or not an applicant is entitled to pension. First and foremost, it is presumed by this Bureau that the man who enlisted in the service of his country in the prime and vigor of his youth, after having been examined by a physician and surgeon appointed by the Government of the United States to determine whether or not he was sound and fit for service, and after his three or four years of service, enduring all the hardship incident to a soldier's life, the Pension Bureau presumes that that man, at the time he entered the service of the Government, was unsound, diseased, and wholly unfit for military duty, and he is required to prove the contrary. That is the first presumption indulged in by the Bureau.

The next presumption indulged in by this Bureau, to which I ask attention, is this: After the soldier has enlisted, served his three years, and undergone all the hardships incident to a soldier's life on the battlefield and on the march, sleeping upon the cold ground, exposed to the burning sun of summer and the storms of winter, frequently without food, many times without sufficient clothing, after all this the presumption of the Bureau is that when the soldier was mustered out of the service he was absolutely sound in body and free from disease! I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that presumption is indulged in by the Pension Bureau because every soldier who applies for a pension is required to prove that at the time of his discharge he was in fact suffering from disease, wounds, or injuries to entitle him to a pension.

I invite attention now to another presumption indulged in by the Bureau—that is, when the soldier makes his application for a pension the presumption is that he is unworthy of belief; and he is required to support his application by the testimony of at least two of his neighbors. Not only that, but the character of these neighbors for truth and veracity is inquired into usually by the Bureau before it will accept their testimony.

Now, there is another presumption indulged in by the Bureau—every witness testifying in behalf of an old soldier is presumed to be unworthy of belief. The officer before whom his testimony is taken is required to certify that the witness is entitled to full faith and credit, that he is honest and truthful. Not only that, but the officer is required to write that statement in his own handwriting. It is provided that the ordinary method resorted to—typewriting—shall not be resorted to in this particular case, but the officer must write the statement with his own hand, certifying to the honesty and integrity of the witness.

It would seem, Mr. Chairman, that this precaution ought to be sufficient; yet, after this testimony has gone in, secret letters of inquiry are sent out and investigations made to determine whether or not the Bureau can rely upon the statements of the witnesses.

In the next place, boards of examining surgeons are presumed to be either incompetent or unreliable, because the power to determine the rate of the pension to be awarded is withdrawn from such board. I submit that a board of examiners, authorized and empowered by the Government to examine the soldier, having the soldier before them and able to look into his face, to examine his wounds and injuries, is better qualified to determine the character of the disease and the rate of pension which should be awarded the soldier than any board of review to whom the claim may be referred. And yet that power is taken away.

What is the next presumption indulged in? In case the old soldier dies—his claim perhaps pending for years—and his good wife makes application for a pension, then what is the presumption? The presumption is that the soldier whose widow makes this application had at the time of his marriage at least one living wife, if not more, from whom he had never been divorced; and the widow is required to prove the negative proposition, that such was not the case. Nay, more; the presumption of the Bureau is that the wife herself prior to her marriage with the soldier had at least one living husband, if not more, from whom she had never been divorced; and she is required to rebut the presumption indulged in by that Department by competent proof.

These are not mere idle statements. They are statements of facts which have come within my observation and experience in looking after pension claims.

Again, when an application is made on behalf of the children of a deceased soldier, the presumption indulged in by this Bureau is that these children are illegitimate, and the mother or their guardian is called upon to establish the fact of their legitimacy by showing not only the marriage of their parents in due form but that neither had a former husband or wife living from whom he or she had not been divorced.

I may be permitted to say, Mr. Chairman, that there is one class of individuals against whom these presumptions may not rest. There is one class of men who have the presumption running entirely in their favor, and in whom the Bureau seems to have the utmost confidence; and that class is the Democratic postmasters throughout the country.

Mr. BLUE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I assure the committee that I will not occupy very much more time.

There was no objection.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I say the only presumption which seems to be worthy of adoption by this Administration is that the Democratic postmasters throughout the country are reliable and absolutely truthful; that the Department may rely upon their unsworn statements in all these cases; no improper presumption can run against them while this Administration lasts.

Now, sir, before proceeding further with my remarks I would like to read from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions a passage which is found on pages 11 and 12; and I commend to this committee the patriotic statements of the Commissioner therein expressed.

PATRIOTISM AND PENSIONS.

Every citizen owes to his country the duty of defending its chosen government, when endangered, against all foes, at the peril and, if need be, at the sacrifice of his life. Whoever does this freely and promptly, as soon as the occasion arises, does patriotically what his duty requires. Such men deserve their country's gratitude, and a grateful people, admiring their courage and devotion and thankful for the preservation of their country and its chosen institutions, will not allow such soldiers to suffer for the sacrifices they have made without such reasonable relief as can, under the circumstances, be given. This is the basis for pensions, and the only rational justification for expending the revenues of the Government, which are drawn from and belong to the public, in the way of pensions to soldiers. In this country such pensions are granted liberally, cheerfully, gladly, and with the consent and approbation of everybody, to all of the class of soldiers referred to who have been wounded or otherwise disabled in the service, or who have from any cause, save their own vice, become disabled from earning a support.

Now, I want to call attention to a few cases that have come under my observation, and I apprehend that other members have been confronted with similar experiences. I do this for the purpose of showing that the Department does not practice what it preaches, and that in many instances, under the intricate rules devised by the ingenuity of this Bureau, it is rendered utterly and absolutely impossible for a worthy claimant, in many instances, to obtain a pension, however just the claim may be.

I wish to call attention to the proofs required in a particular case—a case now under consideration by the Bureau. I do this for the purpose simply of showing that these intricate rules, these uncalled-for demands—these unpatriotic requirements, as they seem to me—are calculated to deter, to drive away from the Pension Bureau hundreds and thousands of worthy claimants. I received a communication from this lady humbly requesting me to look into her claim and see why it had not been allowed. Two years the claim had been sleeping in the Department without a word to gladden her heart, and she wished me to ascertain what had taken place in reference to it. I made a request at the Department and in due time received the information, which I forwarded to her. What do you suppose was still required after all the proofs she had offered? I will state the requirements, not in the exact language of the demand, but I will give the substance. She was required—

First. To show by two members of the soldier's company, officers or enlisted men having knowledge of the fact, when, where, and under what circumstances the disease of the lungs was contracted by the soldier.

Suppose, Mr. Chairman, for a moment, if you will, that this requirement was made of any man under the circumstances in reference to any case. Let us stop for a moment and analyze this requirement. The widow is required to show, by the comrades who served with her husband, when, where, the time and place, where the disease of the lungs was contracted. Let me suggest to you the difficulty of making this proof, whether he contracted this disease on the march with Sherman to the sea, or whether in the swamps of Alabama or Mississippi, wading some swamp, sleeping on the cold ground from day to day and month to month.

I submit in all fairness he could not remember or prove in many instances the time and place or circumstances under which he contracted the disease. There was no particular time, no particular place; it was the culmination of the hardship, the privations, he endured through a series of years. Nevertheless, his widow is required to give a specific account of the place, time, and manner in which the disease was contracted. She must establish the identical time and place where his lungs became affected. Hundreds, yes thousands, of men whose lungs became diseased during that terrible struggle are to-day unable to point to the time and place where the disease was contracted or the circumstances surrounding the same. Why? Because they contracted cold here or there; they slept in the rain or snow at one time, waded a cold stream on a wintry day at another, marched through rain and storms on another, fought a great battle on another. They were exposed to hardships at all times during their entire service, and the combination of all these hardships and sufferings resulted in diseased lungs; but it would be impossible for them to point out the place where or time when it actually took place. One thing is certain, and that alone should be sufficient, all that a patriotic people demand: It was contracted in the service of the United States, and in the line of duty.

But what was the next demand of the Department?

Second. The claimant should show by the testimony of the surgeon, assistant surgeon, or hospital steward of the soldier's regiment when and where the soldier was treated for disease of the lungs.

Thirty years have rolled by, and yet this woman is supposed to be able to hunt up the surgeon, the assistant surgeon, or the hospital steward and secure the testimony of some one of them as to where this man, her husband, was treated for the disease of which he died. I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that hundreds, yea thousands, of men contracted diseased lungs during the war who were never treated in any hospital during their service, but who, without a murmur, stood firm and remained in the field until the last gun was fired.

Third. The claimant should show by medical testimony the physical condition of the soldier at the time of his discharge from the service and from that time to October, 1876.

That is, Mr. Chairman, she is required to show by medical testimony this condition of things. The testimony of his neighbors, the testimony of his friends, the testimony of those who knew him, who were in daily contact with him, is not sufficient. It must be the medical testimony, whether the soldier was ever treated by a physician during that time or not, and none other will be received until it is shown that medical testimony can not be obtained.

Fourth. The claimant should show by some one having personal knowledge of the facts whether the soldier served in the military or naval service of the United States prior to August 9, 1862; and if so, give each organization in which he served.

Fifth. It must be shown by competent evidence whether or not the claimant or soldier had been previously married prior to the time of his marriage with the claimant.

That must be shown by competent testimony in order to rebut the presumption I suggested in the first place.

Sixth. If either the soldier or the claimant were married prior to their marriage with each other, the death or divorce from such former wife or husband must be shown by competent testimony.

I have in mind a similar case in which the claimant is absolutely unable to comply with the rules of the Department relating to the proof of marriage, where every neighbor is as well satisfied of the truth of the proposition as they can be of any fact they did not witness with their own eyes or hear with their own ears.

Mr. PICKLER. May I interrupt the gentleman for a suggestion?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. I expect to bring in a case on some other discussion where the Pension Office actually set aside the findings of a court in a suit in a divorce case and declared that it was improperly granted.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I should not be surprised at any ruling or order that might be suggested.

As I was stating, in the case I had in my mind the wife of a soldier died while they were removing from the State of Texas to the State of Kansas. He subsequently married in the State of Kansas, and in eight or ten years thereafter died. His widow having made application for a pension was called upon to prove the death of the first wife, and learned that but one human being aside from the deceased husband was present at his camp at the time of her death; and that such witness had departed somewhere, the Lord only knows where, and that woman to-day is in her poverty, with no hope unless these arbitrary rules can be abolished and common-sense rules substituted therefor, and, Mr. Chairman, I apprehend before the adjournment some relief will be obtained, and I express the hope that any widow making application for a pension will be permitted to establish her marriage by proving the fact that at the time of the death of the soldier she and the soldier were living and cohabiting as man and wife and were recognized as such in the neighborhood in which they lived.

Seventh. It must be shown by the testimony of two witnesses that the widow has not since the death of her husband remarried.

Eighth. It must be shown by competent testimony that the claimant was not divorced from the soldier.

You see, they are hedging and guarding this matter in every particular. So afraid are they that the woman with whom the soldier lived all of his years, the mother of his children, is not the lawful wife of the soldier, that she is required not only to prove the marriage but must do so by record evidence if it can possibly be obtained.

Ninth. It must be shown by competent testimony whether or not the children claimed for are still living—

I apprehend in this case that the claim has been pending so long that the presumption has arisen in the Pension Office that the children are dead, and they desire additional proof to show that they are still alive—and if any of them have died, the date of such death must be established by competent evidence.

Now, those are the requirements asked from this poor woman down in Kansas, three or four or five printed pages stating the testimony required. They send that back to her in her lonely cabin, and let her look over the demands of this great Government her husband gave his life to serve. Do you wonder that she fails to respond, or make the proof?

Let me call your attention to another case, to my mind more remarkable than this. That also came under my observation. The testimony required in that case is as follows:

First. The plaintiff should state under oath when, where, and under what circumstances he received the injury to left shoulder complained of.

Second. He should furnish the testimony of two additional persons, members of his company, showing when, where, and under what circumstances he received such injury.

Third. The claimant should show by medical testimony if possible whether or not claimant was disabled from the performance of manual labor by reason of such injury from April 23, 1895, the date of his application, to August 7, 1895, the date of his examination.

In other words, this pensioner made an application on April 23, 1895, and on the 7th day of August of that year he was examined by the board of examining surgeons. It was determined by the board that the soldier was absolutely unable to perform manual labor. Upon this the Bureau called upon him to prove that this disability found by the board existed at the time he filed his application and had continued up to the time of such examination. He had already testified to this in his application, and his testimony had been corroborated by two witnesses at least, and now the Bureau comes back at him with this proposition: "We want medical testimony showing that all the time from April 23, when you made this application, until August 7 of the same year, when you were examined, you were incapable of performing manual labor."

There was the examination of the board on the 7th of August, which showed his disability. There was his affidavit, in the first instance, that he was disabled, corroborated by two witnesses, and yet under the rules of this Bureau he is required to offer medical testimony covering that period of time. The thing that alarms me most, Mr. Chairman, is that before we can possibly get that testimony it will be several weeks at least, and then I fear we must submit to another examination to determine if we have not recovered since the last examination. After the second examination, then we will doubtless be required to go back and prove that during the time between the first and second examinations we were still unable to perform manual labor. These are some of the rules and regulations of the Bureau of which these old soldiers justly complain.

Now, I want to call your attention to that remarkable order or rule which has been referred to as No. 229, which I suggest is absolutely uncalled for, unpatriotic, calculated and designed, in my opinion, to hinder and delay the securing of pensions by old soldiers. It reads:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1893.

[Order No. 229.]

In the preparation of testimony in support of claims in pension cases, all statements affecting the particular case and not merely formal must be written, or prepared to be typewritten, in the presence of the witness, and from his oral declarations then made to the person who then reduces the testimony to writing, or then prepares the same to be typewritten. And such testimony must embody a statement by the witness that such testimony was all written, or prepared for typewriting (as the case may be), in his presence, and only from his oral statements then made; stating also the time, place, and person, when, where, and to whom he made such oral statements, and that in making the same he did not use, and was not aided or prompted by, any written or printed statement or recital prepared or dictated by any other person and not attached as an exhibit to his testimony.

Any needless delay in the preparation of such testimony after such oral statement by the witness, or in forwarding the same to this Bureau, and any material alteration or erasure, will be cause for rejecting such testimony.

WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

Approved:
HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

Now, I want to submit that there is not one attorney in a hundred, possessing the highest degree of skill, that could prepare an affidavit in compliance with that order unless he had the order right on his desk before him. This rule is not required by any court of justice in the land, and it seems to me that the purpose of this rule is only to hinder and delay these old soldiers and their widows in securing their pensions.

I want to suggest, although it may not be germane to this discussion, that many amendments or changes should be made to the existing pension laws and to the rules of practice in the Department to obviate as far as possible the wrong and injustice to which these old soldiers are now subject. First, the applicant for a pension should only be required to state the fact of his disease and disability to the very best of his ability. It is not to be supposed or expected that he should go to a physician and be examined in order to technically describe the disease of which he complains. It ought to be sufficient for him to set forth the injury of which he complains in his own language. He may call it heart disease, and yet his heart be not affected. He may complain that his lungs are affected, and yet the doctor's decision be to the contrary. He may complain that his spine is affected, and yet the doctor decides that it is his kidneys. So, I say, it should be unnecessary for the applicant to specifically give the ailment of which he complains; but when the testimony is received the pensioner should be awarded his pension if the testimony shows that he is entitled to the pension, notwithstanding the declaration he may have filed does not specifically describe the disease. In other words, if he alleges in his declaration that his spine is affected and the proof develops it is the kidneys, the pension should be allowed to him precisely as though he alleged his kidneys were affected in the declaration. That is the common-sense way that should prevail in any court of justice.

Again, the soldier should be presumed to have been sound when he entered the service of his country. It is unjust and unpatriotic to every man who entered the service of his country to suggest to him thirty years after he has devoted his time and energy and offered his life in defense of his country that he was unsound and diseased when he entered the service, and to require him to prove that he was capable of being a soldier. His three years' record upon the battlefield ought to be sufficient to satisfy the most skeptical upon that subject. [Applause.] The marriage of the soldier should be presumed to be valid, and no widow should be required to offer proof that her marriage to the man with whom she lived was not invalid.

Fourth, the children of the soldier should be presumed to be legitimate, and no proof of the marriage should be required of the mother except that the father and mother were living and cohabiting in the community in which they lived as man and wife, and were so recognized by their neighbors.

Neither the soldier nor the soldier's widow should be presumed to have had a former wife or husband living at the time they entered into marriage with each other. The witnesses of the soldier should be presumed to be honest in making their affidavits in attempting to prove up his claim under the law.

It has been suggested that there is an occasional case of fraud. That would naturally arise, regardless of all precautions you may take. Men will commit crime; and because an attorney in the State of New York, or in the State of Iowa, or in Nebraska, New Hampshire, or New Mexico may have violated the pension laws, committed crime, that is no reason why injustice should be practiced upon every pensioner throughout the length and breadth of the land.

There is another thing to which I desire to call attention. First, the soldier who carried the musket in the line when he comes to testify on behalf of his comrade is entitled to the same credit as the man who wore the shoulder strap. The evidence of the regimental physician should not be required except when shown by the record. Other evidence should be received on that subject. Thirty years have gone. Many of these physicians are dead; many of them entirely beyond the reach of the pensioner; many of them without any record or memoranda; and they must rely wholly and solely upon the record for their information. Therefore the only record testimony that should be required is that which is within easy reach and convenient to the Pension Bureau.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, notwithstanding the 300 or 400 or 500 pension bills pending before this body, introduced for the purpose of correcting some of the evils and abuses which I have pointed out, and notwithstanding many of those bills may be enacted into laws, I am clearly of the opinion that but little can be accomplished while an unfriendly Administration controls and dictates the policy of the Pension Bureau. No bill can be framed that will compel the issuance of liberal pensions by an Administration that does not believe in pensions.

There is but one remedy, and that remedy will come, in my judgment, early in November of the year 1896 [applause on the Republican side], when an indignant, patriotic people will rise in their majesty and power and set their seal of condemnation on the party at whose hands they have suffered these wrongs. And, Mr. Chairman, when that time comes you will see those old soldiers from one end of this land to the other, stooped with age and bowed with disease with their wounds and scars, together with their sons and their sons-in-law, standing up in solid phalanx on that November day, and you will hear their shouts and huzzahs as they march triumphantly to the ballot box to drive from place and power the party that has dealt so unjustly with them. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

That is the remedy. The remedy is not in these bills that we introduce here. Why, gentlemen, turn your eyes toward the east to-day and behold the spectacle! In the last Congress that whole side of this Chamber was not sufficient to contain our Democratic brethren, and now look in that direction. How and why did this great change occur? It was brought about by an indignant people visiting their judgment upon the unpatriotic party that had proven itself so incapable of controlling this country and its destinies. Yes, the Democratic party must again retire for a quarter of a century at least, until the people forget its incapacity and folly. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, if my friend from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] who addressed this body yesterday lived in my district, entertaining the sentiments which he has expressed on this floor, he could not be elected as pathmaster in a single road district in all that section of country. [Laughter.] We have a patriotic people out there. More than 6,000 of the old war veterans find homes in the district that I have the honor to represent, and not only the old soldiers but our patriotic people, regardless of party, are in favor of pensions, liberal pensions, to the men who saved the country. They believe in breaking down the barriers that have been interposed by this Administration and welcoming these old heroes to the public Treasury they offered their lives to save. They believe in clearing the way, removing barriers, and bidding them welcome to their own. Then, and not until then, will a patriotic people feel that justice has been done to the nation's defenders. [Loud applause.]

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words on the pending pension bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from New York proceeds, I will ask him how much time he desires.

Mr. POOLE. Ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Very well. I give notice, Mr. Chairman, that as soon as the gentleman from New York shall have concluded his remarks I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to give me five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Of course. Anything that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] wants, he must have. [Laughter.]

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] who entertained us yesterday with a speech, which I looked for in vain in the RECORD this morning. The honorable gentleman said that he had favored all the pension legislation of the past up to the dependent pension act of 1890; but, claiming to speak for the Democrats of New York, and also for many Republicans, he was opposed to further pension legislation looking toward more liberal pensions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I admit the gentleman's right to speak for the Democrats of New York, but I deny his right to speak for the Republicans. We have on this floor 28 Republicans from the great State of New York, all of them in favor not only of all past pension legislation, but ready to vote for the pending appropriation act, including the amendment proposed by the committee. Furthermore, they are ready to vote at the proper time for more liberal pensions to the soldiers and the widows of the soldiers of the late war. [Applause.]

They are simply waiting, Mr. Chairman, till the time comes when we shall have a Republican President who will carry out the wishes of the Republican majority in the House of Representatives and in the Senate. That time, they believe, will come early in November next, when the people of this country will have elected as President of the United States one of their own political faith, possibly the honorable gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] who presides with such ability over the deliberations of this body; possibly the distinguished protectionist, Mr. McKinley, of Ohio, who has so ably served his country upon the field of battle, in the halls of Congress, and as governor of his State; possibly the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who has been this day re-elected to the position in the Senate of the United States which he has adorned for so many years and where he has done his party and his country great service; or possibly the good sense of the Republican convention that will assemble in St. Louis may lead it to choose the candidate presented by New York, the able statesman and financier, who served his country well upon the floors of Congress, as minister to France, as Vice-President of the United States, and who is now the model governor of the Empire State, Hon. Levi P. Morton. [Applause.] Either of these gentlemen, or any one of half a dozen others who may be nominated, can be elected, and will cooperate as President with the Republican majority in the Senate and House of Representatives in doing justice to the veteran soldier, and who will gladly sign bills giving them more liberal pensions, and in due time the service pension, which they have waited so many years for.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] speaks entirely for the Democrats of that State. I know there are many Democrats in his own district who will resent his speech by their vote next November.

A prominent Democratic soldier of the State of New York, Maj. Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, was on this floor yesterday and listened to the remarkable speech of the gentleman from New York, and was heard to express a wish that he had the opportunity to again speak upon the floor to the people of the country in opposition to the position taken by his former colleague from New York.

In regard to the pending bill, and particularly the amendments offered by the Appropriations Committee, I shall have but little to say. The first amendment, Mr. Chairman, simply provides that—

Whenever a claim for pension under the act of June 27, 1890, has been, or shall hereafter be, rejected, suspended, or dismissed because of any defect or nformality in the application, and a new application shall have been, or shall hereafter be, filed, and a pension has been, or shall hereafter be, allowed in such claim, such pension shall date from the time of filing the first application, provided the evidence in the case shall show the disability to have existed, or to exist, at the time of filing such first application, anything in any law or ruling of the Department to the contrary notwithstanding.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is always easy to criticise the administration of the Pension Bureau, but at all times we should do justice even to our political opponents. There are enough things in the present administration of that Bureau to criticise, but the fact is that the existing law, the act of 1890, is defective in some particulars, and I do not find much fault with the Pension Bureau because it rules under that act that if there is a defect in the original application, and a second application is made and the pension is finally allowed, that the pension shall date only from the time of the second application, even though allowed upon the original testimony.

That seems to me a fair construction of the law as it now exists, but it works unfairly to the pensioner. Now, in the State of New York within the last two years there have been unearthed some of the most stupendous frauds in connection with pension matters that have possibly ever been unearthed in this country. I refer to the frauds in the city of Buffalo. A man residing in that city who had at one time been connected with the United States Pension Bureau, and who claimed to have unusual facilities for the prosecution of pension claims, advertised far and wide his ability to secure pensions, and obtained a very large amount of business.

After he had filed some 2,000 claims in the Pension Office, it was discovered that he was doing "crooked" work, that many of the claims presented by him were fraudulent. An investigation was started which finally landed that agent in the State prison. And nearly all the cases which had been in his hands were rejected because of the fact that he had systematically, in the preparation of those pension claims, perpetrated frauds upon the Government. He had employed in his office young ladies as stenographers and bookkeepers who were accustomed to sign declarations as identifying witnesses and make oath to them as such, who afterwards admitted that they had no acquaintance with or knowledge of the applicants.

Now, I understand from officials of the Pension Bureau that over fifty of the claims which were rejected because of these irregularities were finally allowed and the applicants granted pensions; but they were not allowed until there had been long and tedious examination, nor until a period of two years had elapsed from the date of the original application. Then these men, upon the evidence already on file in the Pension Office, were allowed their pensions; but these pensions commenced only from the date of the second application, though the irregularities in the original declarations were in no case the fault of the claimants.

The amendment now offered by the committee as a part of this appropriation bill obviates this defect in the law. In each of these cases the Government has obtained the benefit of the difference of time between the original declaration and the declaration on which the pension was finally allowed. In some of the cases I have referred to the pensioners were defrauded of between two and three hundred dollars to which they were in equity entitled.

It is manifestly unjust that, because of any informality in the original declaration, the applicant should be deprived of a benefit which it was the intent of the law to secure to him. That intent the proposed amendment fully indicates.

Now, the second amendment reported by the committee, relating to proof necessary in widows' claims under the act of June 27, 1890, I approve of for the reason that it goes a part of the way toward remedying an existing wrong. Under the present rulings of the Pension Bureau, in order that a widow may obtain a pension under this law, she is virtually obliged to prove that she is a pauper. I hope the time may speedily come when every such requirement shall be wiped from the statute books of the United States; therefore I approve this provision of the bill that the soldier's widow shall be allowed a pension unless she has a net income exceeding $500. This seems to me to be a step in the right direction. In order to do full justice, the dependent clause should be eliminated from the law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF], I can not, speaking as a soldier and as a pensioner, approve of that proposition. It proposes (I have it not before me) that the Commissioner of Pensions shall not have the power during the year 1897 to suspend or reduce any pension unless the pensioner's right to a pension shall have been decided against him by a court of the United States.

Mr. POOLE. I should like to have three minutes more.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be allowed five minutes additional.

There was no objection.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Chairman, I shall oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois because it lets down the bars too far. It is a dangerous amendment, and it would not have been proposed in this House had not many members doubted the wisdom and possibly the integrity of the Commissioner of Pensions. It would be a dangerous thing to adopt such a proposition. Speaking as a soldier and as a pensioner, I desire above all other things to keep the pension rolls clean and honest [applause], and I object to any amendment that will prevent the punishment of fraud.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not venture into any defense of the Commissioner, but I want to say I believe it would be a dangerous thing for this Congress or any other to declare that the Commissioner of Pensions shall not under any circumstances be allowed to drop a pensioner from the rolls, for I know from experience that there arise from time to time undoubted cases of fraud—such cases have come within my knowledge—in which the Commissioner should have the right to suspend payment of pensions until further investigation shall determine whether a fraud has been committed or not.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that we can afford, as old soldiers, to allow these safeguards to be taken away. In our endeavor to protect the pensioner we are in danger of passing a law which will work to his injury. Most of us know something of the expense of conducting a suit in the United States courts. Suppose the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] shall become a law. How easy it would be for a man who held a grudge against an old soldier to make some malicious charge against him and drag him before a United States court, where he would be compelled to defend himself against the injustice sought to be done him by his enemy. He might, and possibly would, in the course of time, be able to clear himself and prove his right to his pension, but in doing so he would probably sacrifice every dollar he had in the world in costs and expenses.

These old soldiers should be granted every possible safeguard which can be thrown around them by the law for their protection, but it is no favor to them to subject them to the possibility of such an infamous wrong as that. I believe this proposed amendment to be ill considered and ill advised. I hope it will not prevail.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I wish to say that we have before us for consideration several bills, one of which will probably be introduced at a very early date, which seeks to protect the pensioners in their just rights. We believe in vested rights. Most of us on that committee are old pensioners ourselves, and we may be safely trusted to fully protect our comrades. We do not want to see any legislation adopted that will jeopardize their rights or subject them to greater evils than they now endure. [Applause.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I shall heartily support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF]. [Applause.] I shall raise no objection to it. It is a step in the right direction, whether it goes out on a point of order or not. It is time that something radical was applied to the Pension Office. [Applause.] There is not a soldier's widow, not a Union veteran to-day drawing a pension who is not standing daily and hourly under the apprehension of a cowardly blow from this office. It comes silently like a thief at night. It strikes the widow and orphan from the pension rolls without warning and without a hearing. [Applause.]

After years of patient waiting, after board upon board has examined and reported upon his case, he finally receives his pension. Suddenly, without warning, it is withdrawn from him. No charge is made against him, and if so, no opportunity is offered him to repel it. As the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois aims to strike at the root of the trouble, I take off my hat to it. By its adoption we may be able to ascertain why it is that the Union veterans are stabbed in the back from the very quarter where they should receive encomiums, encouragement, and justice. [Prolonged applause.] At all events we shall arrest the hand of the hidden despoiler, restore peace to many an apprehensive heart, and save many a hero from undeserved sorrow and shame.

I have a case in my own mind of a printer, a man with whom I have set type at the case, a man with whom I served in the Army. He was so honest that after he had received a pension he discovered that his health had improved. He was able to earn his own living. Governed by an exquisite sense of duty to his country, he asked the Commissioner of Pensions to withdraw his name from the rolls. He needed the pension no longer. The name was withdrawn. Within two years he was again taken sick. He was placed in a hospital in New York City, and was supported there by Typographical Union No. 6. In vain did he apply to the Pension Department for reinstatement. To-day he is without a pension, dependent upon the generosity of his fellow-craftsmen and the soldiers who served in the field with him. Twice has his application been rejected.

Now, I make no charges against the Pension Commissioner, but I do say this: Repeatedly instances have come to my attention where boards of examiners have steadily declared that the soldier was entitled to a pension, and yet it was rejected in the office here in Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Is it not true that for the last two and a half years the Pension Bureau has been emphatically hostile to the pension claims of old soldiers?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I can not say that—but it has been emphatically unjust to them. [Applause.] There should be no further opportunity to continue the abominable practice.

Now, sir, the speech I heard from my colleague [Mr. BARTLETT] on this floor yesterday is not calculated to remove the painful apprehension from the minds of the dependent soldiers and widows. Cold sophistry may be good, but it ought to be applied to railroad legislation and to the Supreme Court rather than to the claims of pensioners. [Loud applause.] I repudiate that speech. [Applause.] On behalf of the constituents I represent, Republicans as well as Democrats, I repudiate it. [Applause.] I repudiate the speech on behalf of the Union veterans of New York. [Applause.] I repudiate it on behalf of all Grand Army posts and of the sorrowing widows who are drawing pensions in the city of New York. I repudiate the speech on behalf of the Democracy of New York City—on behalf of the Tammany Hall Democracy of New York. [Laughter and applause.]

Sir, I have not forgotten, and my fellow-members will not forget, on whichever side of the House they stand, that the Tammany Society organized, equipped, and sent to the front one of the finest regiments that ever appeared in the Army of the Potomac. Their bravery and their gallantry at Balls Bluff, at Gettysburg, and elsewhere challenged the admiration of the world. On behalf of the veterans of this regiment and of their dead comrades I enter my protest. [Applause.] Tammany Hall has always been intensely loyal to the Union. She has always been loyal to the veterans of the war. Her beautiful monument to her patriotic dead at Gettysburg is a living exemplification of her sentiments. I challenge any man to point out one flaw——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Can you not go a little further and repudiate the speech of the gentleman who said that every neighborhood was honeycombed with pension frauds throughout this country?

Mr. CUMMINGS. If I was the Commissioner of Pensions I might be able to do so knowingly. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I speak on behalf of every veteran, on behalf of every widow and of every orphan who draws a pension in the United States. They are all included in this nefarious work at the Pension Office. One exposure of fraud ought not to punish forty innocent people. It is monstrous. I believe that for every fraudulent pensioner who has been stricken from the list or suspended at least a thousand who were receiving only their just dues from the Government have been unjustly punished. Let us stop such work now and forever.

I shall vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois with pleasure. If it fails it will have a good effect. It will call the attention of the Commissioner of Pensions to the fact that the patriotic people of the country are aroused and that in time we shall have a tribunal, either here or elsewhere, that will do absolute justice to the men who fought in the Union armies, and that will never supplement its action by gross injustice. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. PICKLER. Pending that, I should like to inquire of the gentleman how much longer it is expected that general debate will continue?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I am unable to answer that question. There are a large number of members who wish to speak on this bill, and unless the committee having it in charge are advised that some other measures are pressing for the attention of the House, I feel disposed, so far as I am concerned, to let the debate run for a day or two, at least.

Mr. PICKLER. There seems to be a great unanimity of opinion.

The motion of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOPKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3537) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CURTIS of New York, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 4043) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to reserve points of order on the bill, and to make the inquiry whether or not, under the practice of the House, it will be necessary to reserve points of order on appropriation bills when they are referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The impression of the Chair is that it is necessary so to do.

REPRINT OF A BILL (H. R. 3010).

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. TAWNEY, leave was granted to reprint the bill (H. R. 3010) defining cheese, and also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of "filled cheese."

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a resolution with reference to printing for the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be, and is hereby, authorized to have printed and bound such documents and papers for the use of the committee as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by said committee during the Fifty-fourth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to ask the gentleman if the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have heretofore had that privilege?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know. I think it is proper that they should have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not favor extending this privilege to committees which have not had it heretofore. Possibly some member of the committee can state whether it has had that privilege heretofore or not. I do not think every committee of the House ought to have the privilege of printing and binding every document that comes before it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the important subjects before that committee are of a nature which certainly ought to lead to the granting of this privilege. There are some very important subjects before that committee. I am not certain whether they have had the privilege heretofore, but the subjects now before them are of unusual importance.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I shall not object to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REPRINT OF THE PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Before moving that the House adjourn, I ask for a reprint of the bill now under consideration. Copies of the bill are all exhausted, and there have been numerous inquiries for them. I ask a reprint of the bill and report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill

(H. R. 3537) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and the accompanying report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMISSIONERS OF CHICKAMAUGA NATIONAL PARK.

The SPEAKER appointed as Commissioners of the Chickamauga National Park Mr. GROSVENOR, Mr. KIEFER, Mr. STRONG, Mr. AVERY, Mr. BOWERS, Mr. WHEELER, Mr. COX, Mr. MADDOX, and Mr. CRISP.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS.

The SPEAKER. The admission of the State of Utah into the Union has rendered necessary the appointment of Territorial Delegates to certain committees, to supply the places left vacant by the Delegate from the Territory of Utah. The Chair announces the following appointments:

To the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. FLYNN.

To the Committee on Mines and Mining, Mr. MURPHY of Arizona.

To the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, Mr. MURPHY of Arizona.

The Chair would like the consent of the House that the Committee on Agriculture remain as appointed by the Chair, one more member having been appointed than the rules permit. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WOODMAN, for five days, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker, as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, reporting the terms of the lease of public property made by him during the last calendar year, in accordance with 27 Statutes at Large, page 321—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a concurrent resolution to authorize the printing of 300 copies each of the proceedings of the annual meeting of the Board of Supervising Inspectors of Steam Vessels for the years 1895 and 1896—to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting the annual report of the expenditures of the contingent fund; report of the finances of the Department; report showing all contracts that have been made by the Department, other than for carrying the mails, and the report of the postal business and agencies in foreign countries for the fiscal year ended June, 1895—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bill and resolution were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker, as follows:

A bill (S. 650) to incorporate the Post Graduate School of Medicine of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A concurrent resolution to print, index, and bind in cloth all of the acts as they appear in the United States Statutes heretofore passed by Congress imposing duties on imports—to the Committee on Printing.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the following changes of reference were made:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 15, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BRIGHTWOOD RAILWAY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting annual report of the Brightwood Railway Company of the District for the year ended December 31, 1895; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

BELT RAILWAY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the Belt Railway Company of the District of Columbia, transmitting a report of the names of stockholders and the number of shares held by each, together with a statement of the receipts and disbursements for the year ended December 31, 1895; which, with the accompanying statement, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, transmitting a report of the names of stockholders and the number of shares held by each, together with a statement of the receipts and disbursements for the year ended December 31, 1895; which, with the accompanying statement, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF CONNECTICUT AVENUE EXTENDED.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in compliance with a requirement in the deficiency appropriation act of March 2, 1895, a report relative to the reassessment of the cost of improving Connecticut avenue extended, in the District of Columbia, together with a draft of a bill prepared by the attorney of the District; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the assembly of the State of New York, praying for the speedy recognition as belligerents of the Cuban patriots in their struggle for freedom; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition, signed by the mayor and sundry other citizens of Utica, N. Y., praying the Congress of the United States to use its influence as may seem most wise and efficient in speedily arresting the awful persecutions now in progress in Turkey and Armenia; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SQUIRE. I present a petition of the Tacoma Chamber of Commerce, calling attention to the fact that for many years past the Chamber of Commerce and the citizens of Tacoma have maintained at their own expense a voluntary weather bureau, furnishing an office, rent free, for the use of the Signal Service observer. The Chamber of Commerce of Tacoma desire that a Weather Bureau station be established at that city by the National Government. This petition sets forth that the deep-sea craft stop at this place constantly, going and coming, the arrivals amounting to over 400 annually, with an average tonnage inward amounting to 600,000 tons, and that the tonnage of the Sound craft at that port arriving and departing exceeds 1,000,000 tons annually.

The petitioners state that they have been informed by the Chief of the Government Weather Bureau that no other State in the Union has so many Weather Bureau stations, or has received so large a share of the appropriation for the maintenance of the national meteorological service; but the Chamber of Commerce suggest that no other State in the Union has such an extent of coast line as the State of Washington, which must of necessity call for larger expenditure in this direction. Therefore the petitioners seek to have a larger appropriation made, for the purpose of establishing a Weather Bureau station at the city of Tacoma.

The petitioners go on to speak of the constantly increasing traffic between Tacoma and Oriental ports, as well as the United Kingdom, carried on by steamers and sailing vessels, requiring the shipping to be protected from danger and loss by such signals and information as is given by the Government at other ports. They humbly pray that this rising seaport may be accorded the measure of justice in this respect to which it is fairly and justly entitled.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I present a memorial of the Daughters of the Revolution of the State of New Jersey, praying that Miss Eliza Sandford, daughter of William Sandford, orderly sergeant in the Revolutionary war, be granted a pension. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Pensions, a bill granting a pension to Miss Sandford having been introduced and being before that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL presented resolutions adopted by the Lafayette Reformed Church, of Jersey City, N. J., favoring protection for the Armenian people and indorsing the resolution introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in relation to the troubles in Turkey; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of L. T. Yeoman and 92 other citizens of Essex County, N. J., and the petition of Joseph McComb and 14 other citizens of Jersey City, N. J., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Massachusetts Wholesale Lumber Association of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of the Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Henry W. Sears and 21 other citizens of Middleboro, Mass., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. GORMAN presented sundry petitions of citizens of Bakersville, Mondel, Sharpsburg, Cumberland, Boyds, Damascus, Cedar Grove, Darnestown, Shepherdstown, Clarksburg, and Downsville, all in the State of Maryland, praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. ELKINS presented the petition of L. E. Showalter and 2,000 other citizens of the State of West Virginia, praying for the passage of the bill to regulate immigration, known as the Stone bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of sundry citizens of St. Louis, Mo., and a petition of sundry citizens of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the Massachusetts Wholesale Lumber Association of Boston, Mass., praying that an appropriation be made for the deepening and widening of the channels of Boston Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Massachusetts Wholesale Lumber Association of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of the Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Newton, Mass., expressing their approval of the Senate resolution introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to support the President in the most vigorous action he may deem fit to take for the protection and security of American citizens in Turkey; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition, in the form of resolutions adopted at a meeting of the High Street Congregational Church, of Lowell, Mass., praying that Congress will take such action as may be deemed fit to establish law and order in the Turkish Empire, and commending the efforts of the Red Cross Society as worthy of cordial support; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present three petitions of citizens of Missouri, in favor of the passage of what is known as the Stone immigration bill, which passed the House of Representatives during the last Congress and is now pending in that body, it being the purpose of the bill to restrict immigration. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present a memorial of the representatives of the Religious Society of Friends for Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware to the President and Congress of the United States, on the subject of Venezuela and the questions relative to the boundary of that country. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HILL presented petitions of sundry citizens of New York, praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. GRAY. I present a memorial from the representatives of the Religious Society of Friends for Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware to the President and Congress of the United States, on the dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela relative to the boundary of the latter and the intervention of the United States. The memorial is not very long. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the President of the United States and the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the representatives of the Religious Society of Friends of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware respectfully represents: That we have participated with many others of our fellow-citizens in anxiety and regret at the threatened disturbance of amicable relations between our Government and that of Great Britain relative to the boundary dispute between the latter and Venezuela, in South America. The efforts made by the Executive and Cabinet of the United States for months past to induce Great Britain to refer this question to arbitration meet with our cordial approbation and sympathy. We believe this is the true and Christian solution of all differences that may arise between either individuals or nations, in accordance with the benign rule instituted by the Supreme Lawgiver in his Sermon on the Mount: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." (Matthew vii, 12.) But we think our Government is liable to lose the firm ground thus assumed in its peaceful intervention between the contending parties by holding out a menace against one of them that in case she did not accept our good offices in the mode we had prescribed the United States would "resist by every means in its power, as willful aggression upon its rights and interests the appropriation by Great Britain of any lands, etc., which, after investigation, we have determined of right belong to Venezuela."

The intense agitation of the public mind, both in the United States and England, which has followed the publication of the late state papers on the Venezuela question, involving as they do the thought of the possibility of war, indicate the sensitiveness of the thinking part of the two nations to anything that would refer to the arbitrament of the sword a difference between them. Surely nothing that we could gain by entering upon a contest of arms with Great Britain in such a cause could ever compensate for the unspeakable loss, both moral and material, which must result to both nations by such a conflict! Should not the minds of all good men shrink with horror from initiating even the entering wedge of so dire a calamity by using intemperate or offensive language in dealing with the question at issue, either in diplomatic or state papers, or by their public utterances when in official positions? For wars, in many instances, owe their origin more to the offended pride of rulers on trivial occasions than to the invasion of the just rights or property of the combatants.

The Saviour of men, who is the "Prince of Peace," has bestowed His blessing on the peacemakers; and His inspired Apostle declares that "the wisdom which is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, and the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace." (James iii, 17, 18.) It is this peaceable wisdom and a just regard for the rights of all at this critical period that we desire to commend to our rulers, and to beseech you that no haste to vindicate what may be supposed to be the honor and prestige of our beloved Republic may obscure the benign purpose of the religion we profess, which was ushered into the world by the angelic anthem of "Peace on earth and good will to men." We feel that any occasion should be carefully avoided which might kindle the flames of animosity between two of the foremost nations of the globe, who are bound to each other by the ties of a common language and race, commercial intercourse, and Christian civilization.

Signed by direction and on behalf of a meeting of the aforesaid representatives held in Philadelphia on the 3d day of the first month, 1896.

JOSEPH WALTON, Clerk.

Mr. HANSBROUGH presented a petition in the form of resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Tower City, N. Dak., praying that relief be granted the suffering Armenians; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

Mr. GRAY. I present the affidavits of Robert J. Hanby, State senator in the general assembly of Delaware; William T. Records, Charles A. Hastings, John B. Pennington, and Edward D. Hearne, all citizens of the State of Delaware, which I move be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I present sundry affidavits—that is to say, the affidavits of J. M. C. Moore, George Fisher Pierce, Samuel Alrich, Edgar T. Hastings, John S. Prettyman, jr., Frank Reedy, and George L. Townsend, and also portions of the senate journal of the legislature of the State of Delaware of April 9, 1895, pages 742 to 748; senate journal of legislative session of that legislature of Thursday, May 9, 1895, from 11 a. m. until noon, pages 1172 to 1183; senate journal of joint assembly of the State of Delaware on the same day, from noon to 3 p. m., pages 1183 to 1231, all relating to the question of the election of Mr. Du Pont by the legislature of the State of Delaware.

I ask that the affidavits and journal be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and printed as a document, not the whole journal, but the portion I have indicated. The senate journal is a very large document. I have indicated the pages that it is desired to have printed, and the only part of the journal which relates to the case. I move that the affidavits and the journal, as I have indicated, be printed, and that the whole be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1176) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road," reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 214) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 636) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Chamberlain, in Brule County, and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 25) authorizing the Dyersburg and Mississippi River Railway and Improvement Company to bridge the Obion River, in the State of Tennessee, reported it with amendments.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 90) for the relief of William P. Buckmaster, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 32) for the relief of the legal representatives of John C. Howe, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 271) for the relief of the Newberry College, Newberry, S. C., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MCBRIDE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 708) to amend section 4 of an act to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 654) to prevent citizens of the United States from soliciting or receiving and accepting titles, patents of nobility, or degrees of honor from foreign nations, and for other purposes, to report it adversely.

The committee are of opinion that it is hardly worth while to dignify with the form of legislation the fact that some American citizens receive titles from a foreign Government; that they ought to be laughed at rather than be sent to the penitentiary for a crime. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 39) making an appropriation to defray the joint expense of locating the boundary line between the Territory of Alaska and the British North American territory, to report it without amendment. I ask to have the joint resolution considered at the present time.

Mr. MILLS. I hope no Senator will ask unanimous consent this morning to bring before the Senate anything that will take up the time of the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. I do not think this measure will take any time.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to take the floor after a while during the morning hour, and my friend, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] has it at 2 o'clock. There will be ample time hereafter to pass all such measures.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will take but a moment to pass the joint resolution.

Mr. MILLS. I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I gave notice yesterday morning that I would object to the consideration of bills when reported unless in a purely exceptional case.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator——

Mr. COCKRELL. I will hear the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a case where a commission is now at work, a commission on the part of Great Britain and on the part of the United States, fixing the boundary in Alaska. The fund has run out and it is necessary that money shall be appropriated immediately or else the work must be suspended.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the joint resolution be considered if it leads to no discussion. I think it is to meet an emergency.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for information.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in view of the expediency of forthwith negotiating a convention with Great Britain for marking convenient points upon the one hundred and forty-first meridian of west longitude, where it forms, under existing treaty provisions, the boundary line between the Territory of Alaska and the British North American territory, and to enable the President to execute the provisions of such convention without delay when concluded, the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, under the direction of the President, to defray the share of the United States in the joint expense of locating said meridian and marking said boundary by an international commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PETTIGREW introduced a bill (S. 1569) allowing certain Lower Brulé Indians to take allotments of land on the Rosebud Reservation, south of White River, in the State of South Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1570) for the relief of Joseph Schwarz; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1571) to amend the homestead laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1572) for the relief of W. L. Hall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1573) for the relief of Dr. A. S. Brown; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 1574) for the relief of the First National Bank of Newton, Mass.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 1575) for the relief of M. M. Beavers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1576) for the relief of the Little Rock and Memphis Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 1577) for the relief of James A. Mitchell, of Sebastian County, Ark.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1578) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth L. Traweek, of Sebastian County, Ark.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1579) to authorize the Arkansas and Choctaw Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Choctaw Nation, in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 1580) granting a pension to Dennis Sheedy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1581) increasing the pension of Frank Hight; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (S. 1582) to pay to the widow of Samuel F. Miller, a justice of the Supreme Court, a sum equal to the balance of his salary for the year in which he died; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 1583) for the relief of L. Robert Coates & Co., of Baltimore, Md.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SQUIRE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1584) to provide for the establishment of national patriotic memorial universities; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 1585) to authorize and direct the Auditor for the Post-Office Department to credit the account of George H. Tice, postmaster at Perth Amboy, N. J., for postage stamps and money-order funds stolen from his office; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COAST DEFENSE INQUIRY.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Coast Defenses be, and the same is hereby, authorized, in the consideration of bills before said committee to provide for fortifications and other defenses, to sit during the sessions of the Senate, to visit such points as in the opinion of the committee may be necessary, to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer; the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee.

PAYMENT OF COIN OBLIGATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. BUTLER relative to the purpose of Congress to keep gold and silver at a parity by investing the Secretary of the Treasury with the discretion of paying the coin obligations of the Government as they mature in either metal.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from North Carolina being absent from his seat to-day, I suggest the propriety of letting the resolution lie over subject to call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FINANCIAL POLICY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MILLS, as follows:

Resolved, First. That the United States legal-tender notes now outstanding should not be retired, canceled, or funded into interest-bearing bonds, but when received into the Treasury they should be paid out again and kept in circulation.

Second. That the whole of the silver bullion now in the Treasury should be coined as rapidly as possible. The coins from the seigniorage should be paid out in the current expenditures and the other in the redemption of the Treasury notes issued on its purchase.

Third. That when from any cause there should be a deficit in the Treasury, the Secretary of the Treasury should issue legal-tender notes sufficient in amount to meet all demands for current expenditure, and when said notes are returned into the Treasury they should be destroyed.

Fourth. That all laws now existing which authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell interest-bearing bonds of the Government should be repealed.

Fifth. That it is not only the established policy of the United States to keep all kinds of money issued under their authority at par, but it is also the established policy of the United States to require all creditors, public and private, to receive the gold and silver coins in payment of all obligations where the terms of the contract stipulate for coin payment, and that it is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay United States notes when presented in both gold and silver coins.

Sixth. That we repudiate the idea that a public debt is a public blessing; on the contrary, it is a burden which the interests of the people and the preservation of the public credit demand should be removed as rapidly as practicable.

Seventh. The sinking fund established by law should be rigidly complied with, and the amount now provided should be reenforced so that the whole interest-bearing debt should be extinguished as rapidly as possible without imposing unnecessary burdens upon the resources of the country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, there has been for many years a controversy over the settlement of the financial question. It is as earnestly pressed to-day as it has been at any period in the past, and it will continue to be pressed until it is settled on he right principle.

The bill sent to the Senate from the House defines to some extent the line of policy to be pursued by those who hold one extreme and the substitute reported by the Finance Committee represents to some extent the other extreme. The substitute, instead of joining issue squarely with the policy outlined by the bill, rather avoids and presents its side without sharply antagonizing the measure of the House. What is the real power behind the House bill? What is the irrepressible force that for years has been opposing all silver circulation and demanding the retirement of all Treasury notes? Why is it so persistently demanded that the noninterest-bearing Treasury notes shall be converted into an interest-bearing bond of the United States? Why is it that one hundred and seventy-five millions of silver bullion is kept locked in the vaults of the Treasury instead of being coined and put into circulation?

Sir, all these results have been produced by a wealthy and powerful class who are interested in finding a safe and profitable investment for their money and having conferred on them the power to issue and control the entire circulation of the country. We have had this class with us from the beginning of the Government, and it has grown in strength as it has grown in years, and is to-day more powerful than at any other period in our history. It is to-day imperiously demanding that the Government shall abdicate its sovereign power and create corporations and invest them with the power of issuing, contracting, and expanding the circulation. Their slogan is, "The Government must go out of the banking business." The result of which is that the banks must go into the governing business.

The issue of currency, whether coins or paper, never was a part of banking business. It is a necessary function of sovereignty. Receiving deposits, lending money, buying and selling exchange, and discounting paper are the legitimate functions of banking. To create and regulate the currency is as much the function of government as to create and regulate an army or navy or post road.

I confess to some astonishment when I hear the advocates of these measures characterize them as Democratic. I would be glad if some Democrat who is old enough and well enough posted in the history of the great battles that have been fought by that party from its beginning would tell me when it became the advocate of bank circulation. Mr. Jefferson tells us that "coinage is peculiarly an attribute of sovereignty." Does not the coin and the paper currency perform the same function? Does not each have the same effect on property? He did not see any difference. When speaking of bank currency he said:

> Bank paper must be suppressed, and the circulating medium must be restored to the nation to whom it belongs. * * * Let banks continue, if they please, but let them discount for cash alone or for Treasury notes.

Again he asks:

> Are we to have no banks? Are merchants and others to be deprived of the resource of short accommodations found so convenient? I answer, let us have banks, but let them be such as are alone to be found in any country on earth except Great Britain. * * * No one has a natural right to the trade of a money lender but he who has the money to lend. Let those, then, among us who have a moneyed capital, and who prefer employing it in loans rather than otherwise, set up banks and give cash or national bills for the notes they discount.

Again:

> I have ever been the enemy of banks, not of those discounting for cash, but of those foisting their own paper into circulation and thus banishing our cash.

When the first bank of the United States was created, in 1791, it is well known that he earnestly opposed it. He not only denied the power of Congress to create it, but he opposed it on the ground of expediency as well. In 1803 he said it was an institution "of the most deadly hostility existing against the principles and form of our Government."

These words of Mr. Jefferson prove conclusively that he claimed it to be the right of the sovereign alone to issue currency in both coin and paper, and that it was the duty of the Government to interdict the issuance of either by corporations, companies, or individuals.

Mr. Gallatin, who was Secretary of the Treasury under both Jefferson and Madison, held that—

> The right of issuing paper money as currency, like that of issuing gold and silver coins, belongs exclusively to the nation, and can not be claimed by any individuals.

Mr. Crawford, who was Secretary of the Treasury under President Monroe, said:

> Coinage and the regulation of money have in all nations been considered the highest acts of sovereignty. * * * As a paper currency is issued upon the national credit the whole property of the nation is pledged for its redemption whenever by any circumstance it may become the interest of the community that it should be redeemed. It is therefore manifest that it should not issue upon the credit of any individual or association of individuals. A part can never be equal to the whole. The credit of any individual or association of individuals can not be equivalent to that of the nation of which they form a part.

Another Democratic Secretary of the Treasury repeated the principle of Jefferson. Robert J. Walker said:

> I am opposed to investing in banks the power of manufacturing a paper currency. This power of creating a currency for a nation is one of the highest and most important attributes of a sovereign power, and more deeply affects all the diversified interests of society than the exercise of any other power whatever.

These are some, and only some, of the footprints that mark the road our Democratic fathers trod, the road we are now urged to abandon. Open, earnest, and undisguised opposition to bank paper has been the creed of Democracy from the days of Jefferson. When the first bank was created, General Washington, then President, called on Jefferson and Hamilton, his Secretaries of State and Treasury, for their opinions. Mr. Jefferson strongly opposed the charter and said to the President:

> The incorporation of a bank and the powers assumed by this bill have not, in my opinion, been delegated to the United States by the Constitution.

All through the life of that great statesman, the greatest, perhaps, in the history of the world, certainly the greatest this country has ever produced, he opposed banks of issue as unauthorized and mischievous, and never at one single moment of his life did he ever advocate a national-bank currency or any bank currency, but from the beginning to the end, whether in public or in private, he always claimed that the issue of currency was the prerogative of sovereignty, and always opposed the creation of corporations of any kind, either by national or State authority, and investing them with authority to issue notes to circulate as money.

One of the chief arguments of the advocates of the bank of 1791 was that it would regulate the currency and keep it uniform throughout the country.

From the date of its passage to 1811, when its charter expired, the country was deluged with the wildest of all the wild-cat currency that it had ever known in its history. State banks sprang up like mushrooms and issued paper money in dollars and fractions of dollars. Scarcely any of it circulated at par with coin even in the immediate vicinity of the banks. Little of it circulated 50 miles away. By overissues of notes specie was driven out of circulation. The standard of value was paper, and different in every locality, and elastic enough to satisfy the cravings of the most zealous advocate of "better banking facilities." This was followed, as it always must be, by collapse. On examination the banks were found to be bankrupt. All the banks of Massachusetts did not have as much specie as one of them had issued paper.

In 1812 the Eastern States became surfeited with bank elasticity, and imposed a penalty on all banks that refused to redeem their notes in coin when presented; but the banks south and west of New England continued to issue without restraint, and the result was that New England soon got all the specie, while the other States got all the elasticity. In 1811, when the first bank of the United States expired, the State banks had out $46,000,000 of their notes; in 1813, $66,000,000; in 1814, $70,000,000. In all the States south and west of New England the banks suspended payment, but went on issuing notes.

In 1815 the circulation of the State banks was $110,000,000 and in 1816 $200,000,000, based on $19,000,000 of specie. What was the result of this large extension of "banking facilities" so urgently demanded now? The paper money grew cheaper as its volume grew larger, and property of every kind went up just as paper went down. Note holders were offering everywhere to buy property, in order to get rid of the paper money that was every day growing less valuable. Others borrowed from the banks to buy property to sell again in order to profit by the rise. Speculation took the place of legitimate business and buying and selling was like betting on a game of chance.

From 1814 to 1817 prices continued to rise until in some localities they touched 200 per cent above the specie standard. It was a period of wild-cat money and wild-cat speculation. Everybody seemed to be drawn into the whirlpool, for whirlpool it was. In 1817 the elasticity began its retrograde movement. The banks began to contract their circulation. The notes began to rise in value and the property to fall. The agonies of contraction resulted in a panic in 1818. Property was changing hands. The debt of the country was twice the value of all its property. In 1819 the circulation of the banks was $45,000,000, a sum less than that of 1811. Lands that had sold in Pennsylvania at $35 per acre in specie in 1813 sold for $150 per acre in paper and on paper credit in 1816, and at $35 per acre again in 1819. Mr. Jefferson tells us that in 1819 good lands in Virginia were selling for one year's rent, and good horses at $5 apiece. The man who borrowed money from the banks in 1816 to buy land at $150 per acre sold his land in 1819 at $35 per acre, and still owed $115 per acre. In their desperation they offered 36 per cent for money to get them out of the depths into which "banking facilities" had plunged them. But there was no money to be had.

Mr. Benton came to Congress from Missouri in 1820, and he says that—

He traveled from the Mississippi to the Potomac amidst the crash of failing banks, the wreck of a paper currency, and the lamentations of a suffering nation.

These lessons have been repeated since, and always from the same cause. And we are asked now to adopt the same system, or a kindred one, and send the country again through the same mournful experiences.

And these measures are now urged by Democrats, and we are told that they are in harmony with Democratic principles. In 1813, when the country was entering upon this era of paper prosperity, Mr. Jefferson wrote to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives that—

Paper is liable to be abused, has been, is, and forever will be abused in every country in which it is permitted; that it is aready at a term of abuse in these States which has never been reached in any other nation, France excepted. * * * Instead, then, of yielding to the cries of scarcity of medium set up by speculators, projectors, and commercial gamblers, no endeavors should be spared to begin the work of reducing it by such gradual means as may give time to private fortunes to preserve their poise and settle down with the subsiding medium.

In 1814 he says:

We are now without any medium. Congress may now borrow of the public and without interest all the money they may want to the amount of a competent circulation by merely issuing their own promissory notes of proper denominations for the larger purposes of circulation, but not for the small. Leave that door open for the entrance of metallic money.

We now have $500,000,000 of these notes issued by Congress without interest, but we are told they must be funded into "long-time" bonds, bearing interest, and bank notes for that amount must be issued and loaned at interest to the people instead of the Treasury notes which they have without interest.

In 1815 he said:

We are undone if this banking mania be not suppressed.

It was not suppressed then, and the country was swept with a desolating cyclone a few years after. We will be undone again if we do not now suppress the banking mania. During the same year he said:

Our money is much or little, real or imaginary, as our bitterest enemies choose to make it.

That is, it was elastic while the country was "dancing along the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire."

He was constantly warning the people of the perils that bank notes were placing in their path.

Put down the banks—

He said—

and if this country could not be carried through the longest war against her most powerful enemy without ever knowing the want of a dollar, without dependence on the traitorous classes of her citizens, without bearing hard on the resources of the people or loading the public with an indefinite burden of debt, I know nothing of my countrymen.

In vain did he warn them against the "frothy bubbles" and the "legerdemain tricks on paper." In vain did he beseech the legislatures—to avert from their constituents such a catastrophe as the extinguishment of two hundred millions of paper in their hands.

Great as was Jefferson always with the democratic people of the United States, the bank mania was greater than he. It was a scourge then which he characterized as belonging to the family of "hurricanes, earthquakes, and other casualties." He told the bank maniacs that our medium was then "dropsical" and their cries for more bank facilities was "dosing dropsy with more water"; that no man knew what his property was worth; that while he was calculating it was "bloating."

In spite of all the warnings of the pilot, with flowing sails and bending masts, they sent the ship on the rocks, where it was broken to pieces. That is what we are urged to do now. Principles are the same now that they were then. Names only have changed. Jefferson did not call it "elasticity" then. He called it "bloating." He did not speak of the authors of these mischiefs as "business men," who he thought were endowed by Heaven with the exclusive right to dictate the kind and amount of currency for a self-governing people. He called them "speculators," "jugglers," "projectors," and "commercial gamblers."

Such has been the history of bank paper from the beginning of the Government up to 1861, when the Democratic party went out of power. There has been a struggle all the time against all banks of issue by a large part of our people, and a struggle between the advocates of State banks and those of national banks. Sometimes the friends of the two paper systems worked in harmony and sometimes in opposition. At last the national banks crushed the State banks by the 10 per cent tax on their circulation. The national-bank currency and the Treasury-note currency came into the circulation together during the civil war. And as soon as the conflict ended the banking fraternity began a war to the knife and the knife to the hilt against its rival, the Treasury note. There was no silver then in circulation against which it could direct its blows. The Treasury note was its sole antagonist, and it marshaled its clans to exterminate its adversary.

On the 12th of April, 1866, Congress passed an act to retire the Treasury note permanently from the field. As soon as it became known the people began to murmur, and the murmur swelled into tempest, and Congress was compelled to retrace its steps, and on the 4th of February, 1868, they repealed the law of 1866 and restored the Treasury note to the field of circulation. The banking forces, beaten and routed in this campaign, like a beaten army, went into winter quarters, drilled and disciplined their forces, reenforced their ammunition chests, and got ready to try results with the enemy again.

On January 14, 1875, Congress, at the demand of the banking interests, for the second time decreed the death of the Treasury notes. Again the storm gathered and broke with fury at the law that decreed the death of the Treasury note; and again Congress was compelled to restore it to the circulation. And on the 31st of May, 1878, a Democratic Congress, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] said the other day, in defense of a Democratic money, repealed the act of January 14, 1875, so far as it required the elimination of the Treasury note from our system. The contending forces are again on the field. The Treasury note now is reenforced by $500,000,000 of silver. The prize to be won is a field of twelve or fifteen hundred millions of circulation. The plan of campaign is to keep the $175,000,000 of silver bullion now in the Treasury from coming out to aid the $500,000,000 of coined silver and the $500,000,000 of Treasury notes. That bullion after a while must be sold for gold. The gold will be paid out by the Treasury and gathered in by the banks, and, using it as the basis of circulation, they will supply the whole circulation, fifteen hundred millions, with these notes, except such as can be supplied only by fractional coins and to a very limited amount.

The bank notes, in order to circulate throughout the Union, must circulate on the credit of the United States, and to have that credit, and at the same time to increase their profits, they must have United States interest-bearing bonds. And to make the system as permanent as possible, and as invulnerable to the attack as possible, bonds must be long time, and placed as far beyond the reach of the people as possible, so that when it is once established, no convulsions, no popular upheavals, neither Congress nor the people, can unseat them.

This is the plan, this is the prize to be won or lost. Now let the banking fraternity come on the field openly, with their drums beating and colors flying. Let them say openly and frankly what they demand, and then let the people decide. The party that dares to go before the country and honestly proclaim in its platform that it favors a permanent bonded debt as a basis for a permanent system of national-bank circulation, and for retiring the Treasury notes and funding them into long-time, interest-bearing bonds for the benefit of the banks, will, when the campaign is over, need the services of a first-class undertaker. I want to read some of the utterances of Democratic State conventions when the two efforts were made to destroy the Treasury-note circulation and put the bank-note circulation in its place. I have gathered these expressions from all parts of the Union, and they expressed then, as they do now, the sentiments of the Democratic people. I shall not quote from Republican platforms. I am sure there are many Republicans who favor the Treasury note in preference to the bank note, though a majority of that party are the other way. What said the Democratic convention of Arkansas? I will take them alphabetically. In 1878 they said:

National-bank notes shall be retired, their further issue prohibited, and United States Treasury notes substituted therefor. The power to issue paper money and coin as a legal tender is only vested in the National Government.

This is pure Jeffersonian Democracy. Mr. Jefferson said coinage was peculiarly an attribute of sovereignty, and that bank notes should be suppressed and the circulation restored to the nation, to whom it belonged. Such substantially were the words of Crawford, Gallatin, Walker, Benton, and the other great leaders of that party. To say that Congress should give to corporations the power to issue and control the circulation of the country is to me as absurd as to say that Congress should give power to corporations to declare or wage war, or to raise and support navies. These are powers that belong exclusively to sovereignty. Why not give to corporations the power to lay and collect taxes? All these are incidents of sovereignty. But let me proceed with the State platforms. They declare the principles of the Democratic party on national debts, national banks, and Treasury notes.

COLORADO.

In 1878 Colorado denounced "the retirement and destruction of legal-tender notes, and the maintenance of the national banking system," and said:

No further increase in the bonded debt and no further sale of bonds for the purchase of coin for resumption purposes; a gradual extinction of the public debt by the redemption of the interest-bearing portion thereof in such currency as the law will permit.

ILLINOIS.

That the present system of national banks can and should be abolished at once, and the notes of such institutions redeemed and their place relieved by noninterest-bearing notes of the Government, thus saving to the people annually $20,000,000.—Illinois State Democratic platform, 1868.

That it is the exclusive prerogative of the United States to issue all bills to circulate as money, and a right which ought not to be exercised by any State or corporation. That the national bank notes should be redeemed, and instead thereof there should be issued by the Government an equal amount of Treasury notes.—Illinois State Democratic platform, 1878.

INDIANA.

That the national-bank system organized in the interest of bondholders ought to be abolished and United States notes substituted in lieu of the national-bank currency, thus saving to the people in interest alone more than $18,000,000 a year, and, until such system of banks be abolished, we demand that the shares of such banks in Indiana shall be subject to the same taxation, State and municipal, as other property of the State.—Indiana Democratic State platform, 1868.

We are in favor of the repeal of the national-bank law and the substitution of greenbacks for the national-bank currency.—Indiana State Democratic platform, 1874.

1876: We declare in favor of the adoption of measures looking to the gradual retirement of the circulation of the national banks and the substitution therefor of circulating notes issued by the authorities of Government.

1878: The right to issue paper money as well as coin is the exclusive prerogative of the Government. * * * We demand that the national-bank notes shall be retired, and in lieu thereof shall be issued by the Government an equal amount of Treasury notes with full legal-tender quality.

IOWA.

That the national-bank system, organized in the interest of bondholders, ought to be abolished, and United States notes substituted in lieu of the national-bank currency, thus saving to the people in interest alone more than eighteen millions of dollars annually; and until such system of banks shall be abolished, we demand that the shares of such banks in Iowa shall be subject to the same taxes, State and municipal, as other property of the State.—Iowa State Democratic platform, 1868.

1869: A national debt is a national curse.

1875: We favor a sufficient supply of national currency for business purposes. Opposition to the present national banking law.

1876: The resumption law should at once be repealed.

1877: We favor the retention of a greenback currency, and declare against any further contraction, and we favor substitution of greenbacks for national-bank bills.

We deprecate the funding of our noninterest-bearing debt. * * * We oppose any further retirement of the United States notes now in circulation, and favor the substitution of national Treasury notes for national-bank bills.—Iowa State Democratic platform, 1878.

1879: We are in favor of the substitution of United States Treasury notes for national-bank notes, and of the abolition of national banks as banks of issue. * * * We favor a reduction of the bonded debt as fast as practicable and the application of the idle money in the Treasury to that purpose.

KANSAS.

We demand the repeal of the national bank law, and that the Government shall issue a legal-tender currency direct from the Treasury.—Kansas State Democratic platform, 1874.

1876: We demand that the act of Congress creating the national banking system be repealed; that the notes of the national banks be withdrawn from circulation, and in lieu thereof the paper of the Government of the United States be substituted. That as Congress has the sole power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, it should also have the sole power to provide a paper currency for the people.

1876: We are opposed to all banks of issue, whether chartered by Congress or the State legislature, and we desire that banking on the part of corporations or private individuals shall be confined by law exclusively to exchange, discounts, and deposit.

That as Congress has sole power to coin money and regulate the value thereof under the Constitution, it should also exercise the sole power of providing a paper currency to be used as money. * * * That we favor the retirement of national-bank notes and substitution of Treasury notes, commonly called greenbacks, in their stead.—Kansas State Democratic platform, 1878.

LOUISIANA.

1878: The Louisiana Democracy demands that the national banking system should be abolished and national-bank notes retired, and in lieu thereof that the Government of the United States should issue an equal amount of Treasury notes, commonly known as greenbacks.

MASSACHUSETTS.

1868: Every dollar received by taxation from the people not absolutely necessary for the economical and legitimate expenses of the Government to be applied to the payment of the public debt.

1877: Resolved, That the practice of borrowing money for other objects than those of strict public necessity has generated schemes of extravagant expenditure, until taxation has become well-nigh an intolerable burden. Honesty, economy, and "pay as we go" should be the rule in all the appropriations of the people's money. The power of the State, counties, cities, and towns to borrow money ought to be rigidly limited, so that an end may be put to the system which "anticipates the labor of coming ages and appropriates the fruits of it in advance; which coins the industry of future generations into cash and snatches the inheritance from children yet unborn."

MICHIGAN.

1879: We demand that all money, whether paper or metallic, shall be issued by the General Government only, and made a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, except as to such contracts heretofore made as were originally payable in coin. We are opposed to all banks of issue, and demand that greenbacks shall be substituted in place of national-bank bills.

MINNESOTA.

1878: We are opposed to any increase of the bonded debt, to the sale of bonds for the purpose of obtaining coin for resumption purposes. We are in favor of the gradual substitution of national Treasury notes for national-bank notes and making such Treasury notes the sole paper currency of the country, and placed on such basis as that the same shall be equal in value with coin, and as a legal tender the same as coin.

MISSOURI.

We regard the national banking system as being oppressive and burdensome, and demand the abolition and retirement from circulation of all national-bank notes and the issue of legal-tender notes in lieu thereof, and in quantities from time to time sufficient to supply the wholesome and necessary business demands of the entire country, and that all greenbacks so issued shall be used in the purchase and retirement of the bonds of the United States, so that the interest-bearing debt of the country may be lessened to the extent of the greenbacks thus put into circulation.—Missouri State Democratic platform, 1878.

MAINE.

That so long as the currency consists in whole or in part of paper money, issued under the authority of the National Government, such paper should be issued directly by the Government itself, and that the great and valuable privilege of issuing three hundred millions of this money, yielding a profit equal to eighteen millions annually in gold, has been too long enjoyed by favored individuals associated under the national-bank law, and should be forthwith assumed by the people represented by the political authority of the United States.—Maine State Democratic platform, 1868.

1878: The payment of the bonded debt of the United States as rapidly as practicable. No further issue of Government bonds whereby equal taxation with the other property of the country is avoided. * * * We are opposed to an irredeemable currency, but believe in a currency for the Government and people, the laborer and officeholder, the pensioner and soldier, the producer and the bondholder. We are opposed to the present national banking system and in favor of the gradual substitution of greenbacks for national bank bills.

NEBRASKA.

1878: We demand the gradual substitution of United States legal-tender paper for national-bank notes and its permanent establishment as the sole paper money of the country; the immediate repeal of the national banking act; no further issue of interest-bearing bonds; no further sale of bonds for the purchase of coin for resumption purposes, but a gradual extinction of the public debt.

NEVADA.

The substitution of the United States currency for the national-bank notes. No further sale of interest-bearing bonds for coin for resumption purposes, but the gradual reduction of the public debt.—Nevada State Democratic platform, 1878.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

1878: One currency for the Government and the people, the laborer and the officeholder, the pensioner and the soldier, the producer and the bondholder. That whatever currency is issued by the Government should be issued for the benefit of the whole people, and not for the benefit of capitalists at the expense of the people.

OHIO.

1869: We denounce the national banking system as one of the worst outgrowths of the bonded debt, which unnecessarily increases the burden of the people $30,000,000 annually, and we demand its immediate repeal.

1870: We are opposed to the system of national banks, and demand the immediate repeal of the law creating them, and that in place of the notes of such banks Treasury notes of the United States should be substituted.

1871: Honor and duty alike require the honest payment of the public debt.

Believing that a better system can be devised, and one that will be free from unjust privileges, we are in favor of abolishing the franchises of the national banks to issue a paper currency as soon as the same can safely and prudently be done, and that the notes so withdrawn by the banks be replaced by the Government with legal-tender currency.—Ohio State Democratic platform, 1874.

1875: That the policy already initiated by the Republican party of abolishing the legal tender and giving national banks the power to furnish all the currency will increase the power of an already dangerous monopoly and the enormous burden now oppressing the people, without any corresponding advantage, and that we oppose the policy and demand that all the national-bank circulation be promptly and permanently retired, and legal tenders be issued in their place. * * * No paper currency except such as may be issued directly by and upon the faith of the General Government.

1876: The gradual but early substitution of legal tender for national-bank notes. * * * The issue by the General Government alone of all the circulating medium, whether paper or metallic.

1877: We favor the retention of greenback currency as the best paper money we have ever had, and declare against any further contraction. * * * We favor the issue by the General Government alone of all circulating mediums, whether paper or metallic, to be always of equal tender and interconvertible.

1878: The gradual substitution of United States legal-tender paper for national-bank notes and its permanent establishment as the sole paper money of the country. * * * No further increase in the bonded debt and no further sale of bonds for the purchase of coin for resumption purposes, but the gradual extinction of the public debt.

1879: The issue of money in any form and the regulation thereof belong to the General Government alone, and ought not to be delegated or intrusted to individuals or corporations. We oppose the perpetuation of the present national banking system as a means of control over the currency of the country, and demand the gradual substitution of Treasury notes for national-bank currency.

OREGON.

1875: The institution of the system of national banks was a fraud upon the country and an injustice upon the laboring classes, and we demand such prudent legislation as will gradually bring this vicious system to a close; that all currency which may be issued shall be convertible into coin upon demand and be issued directly by the Government.

That the gratuity of nearly $24,000,000 now paid to national banks by the Government is simply levying tribute upon the people for the benefit of the capitalists. We therefore favor the repeal of the law under which they were established and the direct issue by the Government of currency, receivable for all public dues, sufficient to supply the place of the present bank-note circulation.—Oregon State Democratic platform, 1878.

PENNSYLVANIA.

1875: That the policy already indicated by the Republican party of abolishing legal tenders and giving the national banks the power to furnish all the currency will increase the power of an already dangerous monopoly and the enormous burden now oppressing the people without compensating advantage, and that all the national-bank circulation be promptly and permanently retired and full legal tenders be issued in their place.

1875: The honest payment of our just debts and the sacred preservation of the public faith.

1876: The honest payment of the public debt.

1878: Gold, silver, and United States legal-tender notes at par therewith are a just basis for paper circulation.

NEW YORK.

1874: Honest payment of the public debt in coin.

TENNESSEE.

That we favor the abolition of the present odious national-bank system and the payment of the bonds of the Government by issuance of its noninterest-bearing notes, according to the contract expressed and implied at the time of the creation of such obligations.—Tennessee Democratic State platform, 1874.

The substitution of Treasury notes for national-bank currency at the earliest moment practicable.—Tennessee State Democratic platform, 1876.

1878: The odious national banking act be repealed and greenbacks be substituted for the circulation of the national banks. * * * That no more interest-bearing bonds be issued; that all loans required by the Government be raised by the issuance of noninterest-bearing Treasury notes.

TEXAS.

1878: We favor one currency for the Government and the people, the laborer and the officeholder, the pensioner and the soldier, the producer and the bondholder. * * * The substitution of United States legal tender for national-bank notes and its permanent reestablishment as the sole paper money of the country.

No further increase in the bonded debt; no further sale of bonds for the purchase of coin for redemption purposes, but a gradual reduction of the public debt by payment according to the original contract by which it was created.

VERMONT.

1878: The honest payment of the public debt in such currency as its terms imply, and the preservation of the public faith.

One currency for all. We oppose the present national banking system and recommend the gradual substitution of greenbacks for national-bank bills.

WISCONSIN.

1877: Declares its opposition to a longer continuance of the national-bank currency and demands that the Government furnish its own notes in the place thereof.

I also submit here an extract from a speech delivered by the Hon. Allen G. Thurman at Hamilton, Ohio, in 1878, in support of the declarations contained in the platforms above quoted. In that speech Senator Thurman spoke as follows:

FELLOW CITIZENS: I have seen several statements in the public press to the effect that the object of my appointment to address you to-day was that I should "sound the keynote of the campaign." I wish, in the very outset of my remarks, to disclaim any such pretension. Under free institutions it is for the people to give the keynote; and so far as the Democracy of Ohio are concerned, they have discharged that duty in the platform adopted by our late State convention. I stand squarely on that platform. I have advocated its principles heretofore and I shall continue to advocate them. Perhaps this is all I should say about myself; but, inasmuch as in certain quarters I am denounced as a man who has surrendered his convictions to appease a popular clamor, it may be pardonable in me to occupy a few moments in repelling this charge. The accusation has reference to my support of the financial plank in the platform.

Now, what is this financial plank? It condemns contraction of the currency; demands the repeal of the resumption act; advocates "the removal of all restrictions to the coinage of silver, and the reestablishment of silver as a money metal, the same as gold—the same as it was before its fraudulent demonetization; the gradual substitution of United States legal-tender paper for national-bank notes, and its permanent establishment as the sole paper money of the country, made receivable for all dues to the Government, and of equal tender with coin—the amount of such issues to be so regulated by legislation or organic law as to give the people assurance of stability in the volume of currency and the consequent stability of the value; no further increase in the bonded debt, and no further sale of bonds for the purchase of coin for resumption purposes, but the gradual extinction of the public debt, rigid economy, the reduction of expenditures in all branches of the public service, and a tariff for revenue only." These are the financial doctrines of the platform, and now I confidently defy my critics, one and all, to name any vote that I have given during the nine years that I have sat in the Senate that was inconsistent with these principles.

I have steadily opposed contraction ever since it was inaugurated. I spoke and voted against the resumption act when it passed, and at the last session of Congress voted for its repeal. I worked hard to restore silver to the place it held before demonetization. Several years ago I drew a resolution for our State convention favoring the gradual substitution of greenbacks for national-bank notes, and that resolution, injudiciously amended, as I believe everyone now admits, was passed by the convention. I was one of the first to propose in the Senate that greenbacks should be receivable for customs duties, and at the last session I voted for the bill making them thus receivable. I have been the advocate of a stable currency, and your platform demands stability. I have contended that the precious metals ought not to be demonetized, and the platform asserts the same doctrine. I have spoken and voted against an increase of our bonded debt. I have advocated, to the best of my ability, strict economy, reduction of expenditures, and a revenue tariff. My course, therefore, has been perfectly consistent with the platform of our convention, as the journals and debates of the Senate will show. And I beg leave to add that I have never given a vote in the nine years I have sat in the Senate to which exception was taken by the Democracy of Ohio, so far as I know or have ever heard.

Fellow-citizens, I trust that I have not offended propriety or good taste by making these few remarks about myself. You are a portion of my constituents, and I have a right to know whether I have represented you correctly or otherwise. If I have a reputation worth preserving, it is for your interest as well as mine that it shall not be unjustly tarnished. But enough upon this theme.

When the currency part of the platform is carefully scrutinized, it will be found that its principal feature is the substitution of greenbacks for national-bank notes. I think that I do them no injustice when I say that the leaders of the Republican party are in favor of directly the opposite course—that is to say, they would retire all the greenbacks in order that their places might be filled with national-bank notes. Let either course be taken and the metallic money of the country remains the same. Use either kind of paper and the amount of coin in actual circulation, apart from the small coins used for change, will be comparatively small, so long as one and two and five dollar notes are freely used, for such notes always drive coin out of circulation. And whenever conversion into coin is practicable and desirable, it will be just as easy to convert greenbacks as to convert bank notes. The question then is narrowed down to this, Shall our paper money be national-bank notes or greenbacks? For several reasons that I will briefly state I think that the latter are preferable.

1. In the first place, a national-bank currency means the indefinite perpetuation of the national debt. The national banks, so far as their circulation is concerned, are founded on that debt. It is the security for their notes, and whenever the debt be paid the banks must retire their circulation and cease to issue notes. In order, therefore, to perpetuate their privilege of issuing notes they must strive to perpetuate the national debt; and you may rest assured that they will do so, and the influence of more than two thousand such institutions spread all over the country will be very powerful indeed.

Now, I am not one of those who believe that a national debt is a national blessing. I believe that the reverse of that is true, and that such a debt is a national curse. To say nothing of its corrupting influences, its drain of the resources of the people to pay interest is fearfully oppressive, especially when a large portion of the debt is held abroad. In a comparatively brief period the amount of interest paid exceeds the principal of the debt, while the drain continues in undiminished force. Heavy taxation is the necessary result, and everyone who has studied the subject knows that oppressive taxation is one of the worst foes to the industry and prosperity of a country. It is true that the national debt can not be speedily paid, but we ought not to put unnecessary obstacles in the way of its payment. The national-bank notes are such an obstacle, and for that reason are objectionable. Your platform wisely advocates "the gradual extinction of the public debt." It thus favors its honest payment and opposes its indefinite perpetuation. And, in strict harmony with this principle, it condemns the bank-note system that tends to perpetuate it.

2. A second objection to the national-bank system is, that it tends to combine, concentrate, and intensify the money power. I shall indulge in no declamation against the money power. I seek to excite no passion, no prejudice. I wish to reason fairly, and I wish you to judge fairly. And I do reason fairly when I say that, in view of the undoubted fact that during the whole period of the unlimited sway of the Republican party the legislation of Congress steadily favored the moneyed interest and thereby greatly added to the burdens of the people; that the purchasing power of money has immensely increased, while the exchangeable or purchasing power of everything else has remained stationary or has diminished; and in view of the further fact that the national-bank system confers special privileges upon the banks that no other institutions and no individuals enjoy; that it combines more than two thousand institutions now, and, if perpetuated, may combine a thousand more, in a common purpose and with a common interest to maintain their power and prolong their privileges; that these institutions are scattered all over the Republic and, acting openly or in secret, are able to influence legislatures, Congresses, and thousands of voters, it is not injustice, but, on the contrary, it is the expression of a wise anxiety to suggest that such a system is fraught with danger to the prosperity of the people and to the purity of their Government. If in the time of Andrew Jackson the existence of a national bank with a capital of only $35,000,000, and a few branches here and there, was considered dangerous to the welfare and the institutions of the country, what shall we say of a widespread combination of two thousand national banks now wielding nearly five hundred millions of capital, and destined, if perpetuated, to vastly multiply in number and to control thousands of millions?

3. A third objection to the national-bank circulation is, that it is a special privilege that puts many millions of dollars annually into the pockets of the shareholders and takes many millions annually out of the pockets of the people.

The general rule is, that a person pays interest upon what he owes; but in the case of a bank note this rule is reversed. The note is a debt due by the bank, but instead of paying interest upon it, the bank is authorized to loan it as money and take interest upon the loan. It thus enjoys a privilege that no one else enjoys. It draws interest upon its own indebtedness, and this privilege of the national banks brings them an annual income of probably $20,000,000. Their aggregate circulation is in round numbers three hundred and twenty-two millions. I think it may be reasonably assumed that three hundred millions of these notes are loaned at an average rate of interest of at least 7 per cent. If so, the annual interest they receive from the loan, not of money, not of capital, but of their own indebtedness, is $21,000,000. And this sum is taken out of the annual product of the country, before that product is divided between labor and capital. The general rule is, that the product of human industry is ultimately divided between labor and capital; but when a bank-note circulation is used, the banks first step in, and, by virtue of their special privilege, take a large slice in the shape of interest upon their own indebtedness. In the case of our national banks, this slice, as we have seen, amounts to twenty-one millions every year. Now, if there can be no sound paper currency but bank notes, then there is nothing left for us but to bear this burden or try to reduce the amount of the exaction. But if the greenback is as good as the bank note, and nobody denies that it is, why should it not be substituted for the bank note and an end put to the exaction?

And consider further that for every greenback it has issued the Government has received value. That greenback has paid for services rendered, or materials furnished, or it has discharged a portion of the interest-bearing public debt. There is thus a saving to the Government or to the people of an amount equal to interest upon the outstanding greenback circulation; for, had the greenback not been issued, the Government would have had to raise the money by loan or taxation to meet its expenditures. If it raised it by loan, it would, of course, have to pay interest for the loan. If it raised it by taxation, the taxpayers lose the interest their money would have earned had they not been compelled to give it to the Government.

The greenbacks now outstanding amount to $346,681,016. Computing interest upon this sum at the lowest rate at which the Government can borrow money, 4 per cent, and we have an annual saving to the people, resulting from the use of greenbacks, of $13,867,240. But if the greenbacks were substituted for the three hundred and twenty-two millions of national-bank notes now outstanding, there would be a further saving to the people of 4 per cent annually on that sum, namely, $12,888,000—making a total annual saving by the use of the greenback of $26,747,240. From this, however, deduct the taxes on their circulation paid by the banks, amounting to about three millions annually, and the net saving would be about twenty-three and three-quarter millions. Perhaps, in strictness, this deduction for taxes ought not to be made, for it is probable that the banks throw the burden of the taxation upon their customers, who in turn shift it to the shoulders of those with whom they deal, until, like all other taxation, it finally falls upon the great body of consumers, the people.

All these declarations show that when the issue was made and Congress attempted to destroy the Treasury-note currency and substitute that of the banks, the democratic people spoke with one voice against it. They demanded the extinction of that currency which was issued by corporations on the credit of the Government and loaned to them on interest, and the substitution of that which was issued directly by the Government, based upon the civilization, wealth, and honor of the people, and which costs them nothing for interest to the issuer. Why, then, in the light of our past history, is it now so persistently demanded that Congress shall sweep away this circulation and give to banks the sole power to provide the whole paper circulation of the country?

There are two very strong reasons why the corporations desire it and why the people oppose it. The silver and Treasury notes now outstanding supply a circulation of about one thousand millions. This costs the people nothing in the way of interest to maintain. But if it is swept away its place must be filled by bank notes. The bank-note system must stand on a pedestal of bonds which draw an annual interest from the people. Then we must have a thousand million of bonds. The annual interest charge at 3 per cent would take from the people thirty millions a year. If the notes are issued to the full face value of the bonds, as is recommended, a thousand millions of bank notes must be issued. They can only be put in circulation by lending. They will be loaned at from 5 to 10 per cent per annum. In the Eastern States the rate will be about 5 per cent; in the West, 7; in the South, 8 and 10 per cent. It will be safe to say the average rate will be 7 per cent. Then a thousand millions of bank notes will be loaned at an average rate of 7 per cent. That will make a tax of seventy millions annually. With the interest on the debt and the interest on the notes the people will be taxed one hundred millions annually. The silver and the Treasury notes cost the people nothing for interest. This is one reason why the banks want the circulation and the reason why the people do not. They do not want a circulation that loads their necks, shoulders, and backs with such an intolerable burden.

I regret that I must differ from the President on this question, but this is a Government that derives its vital force from public opinion. It is a Government where the freedom of speech and press are essential factors in the production of a correct public opinion. Public opinion to be right demands the freest and fullest discussion of all public questions; and I shall not hesitate to express my difference in opinion from the President and Secretary of the Treasury, highly as I respect them both. They both urge Congress to fund the five hundred millions of Treasury notes into "long-time" interest-bearing bonds and authorize the banks to issue notes to the face value of the bonds and reduce the tax on bank notes from 1 to one-fourth of 1 per cent. The President says he does not see why the bonds should not be payable fifty years from their date, and to bear interest not exceeding 3 per cent per annum. He says:

> We of the present generation have large amounts to pay if we meet our obligations, and long bonds are most salable.

And again:

> The increase of our bonded debt involved in this plan would be amply compensated by renewed activity and enterprise in all business circles, the restored confidence at home, the reinstated faith in our monetary strength abroad, and the stimulation of every interest and industry that would follow the cancellation of the gold demand obligations now afflicting us.

The statement that this generation has enough to bear now, and therefore it ought to be relieved by converting a noninterest-bearing debt into one that bears $15,000,000 a year, is to me rather strange. In addition to this, five hundred millions of bank notes are to be put into circulation by loans at 7 per cent, making $35,000,000 more. The measure recommended by the President adds fifty millions more to the burdens of the people annually, and yet he sees great advantages to the people in the change. And this is only a part of the plan. When the field of circulation is swept of the silver coins and Treasury notes it will require a thousand millions of bonds for a thousand millions of notes. The interest on both will cost one hundred millions a year, and in fifty years the people will pay five thousand millions of dollars for the maintenance of the system. This is an enormous price to pay for a circulation that now costs nothing.

It is something strange to me that it is considered no burden to pile a monument of taxes on the backs of people now living and curse with slavery our children, and children's children who are not yet born. This is slavery, and a slavery from which no power can extricate us or them. Ordinarily, if unwise legislation is enacted in one Congress a subsequent Congress can remove the evil. But if we issue and sell bonds redeemable only after fifty years we place ourselves, our children, our children's children, and our children's grandchildren and great grandchildren beyond the region of hope, for no power that Congress possesses can redeem them.

Mr. GRAY. May I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I should like, if it does not interfere with the argument of the Senator from Texas, at that point to ask him whether he is in favor of the Government of the United States issuing Treasury notes and notes payable on demand which are never to be redeemed?

Mr. MILLS. Just on the same principle as I am in favor of keeping up taxation which is never to be stopped so long as the Government needs taxation to support it to keep it in existence and to protect the rights and liberties of the people.

Mr. GRAY. Does not that mean fiat money?

Mr. MILLS. No, sir.

Mr. GRAY. That is my idea of it.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, no. Everything the Government does is a fiat. The Government speaks in the language of command. When the Government puts legal tender on gold, silver, or paper it is fiat. When it says the bank note shall be receivable for all Government dues it makes the bank note a fiat money. When it imposes taxes and commands the collectors to gather them it is fiat. When gold and silver is coined at the mint it is fiat money. All this is fiat in one sense. But the sense in which "fiat money" has been used is a paper dollar which has no basis of intrinsic value. It does not promise to pay either gold or silver. It does not circulate on the credit of either. It is not intended by its advocates to be at par with either. This is not the situation with the Treasury note. It is redeemable—that is, it is exchangeable for gold and silver and kept in circulation.

The Senator from Delaware understands "redeemable" to mean the notes are to be taken up and destroyed and not returned to the circulation. The people who advocate Treasury note circulation understand "redeemable" to mean the notes are to be kept at par with the standard of value, equal in value with all other dollars, with the right of the holder to have a gold dollar or silver dollar in exchange for it when demanded of the Government, and the note to be paid out again and kept in circulation.

This brings me to the question of the redemption of these notes in coin. The President contends that they are gold obligations and must be paid in gold alone when presented. I maintain, on the contrary, that they are coin obligations, and payable by express statute in coin. But it is contended that, while the statute makes them payable in coin, the public credit would be impaired and the country put upon a silver standard if they were paid in silver. Both of these propositions I deny. I understand it to be a principle that is disputed by no well-informed person that where two kinds of money are authorized to circulate without limit as to volume the cheaper will supplant the dearer and become the sole circulating medium. And, again, that money takes its value in proportion to its units, everything else remaining unchanged. Mr. Jefferson recognized this law. Writing to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House in 1813 in reference to the proposed charter of a national bank, he said:

> They authorize this bank to throw into circulation $90,000,000 (three times the capital), which increases our circulating medium 50 per cent, depreciates proportionably the present value of a dollar, and raises the price of all future purchases in the same proportion.

Mr. Calhoun says:

> If we turn our attention to the laws which govern the circulation we shall find one of the most important to be that as the circulation is decreased or increased the rest of the property will, all other circumstances remaining the same, be decreased or increased in value exactly in the same proportion.

Mr. Clay says:

> The great law of price is determined by supply and demand. Whatever affects either affects the price. If the supply is increased, the demand remaining the same, the price declines; if the demand is increased the supply remaining the same, the price advances; if both supply and demand are undiminished, the price is stationary, and the price is influenced exactly in proportion to the degree of disturbance to the demand or supply.

I have read the definitions of many statesmen and economists, but none of them, in my judgment, have expressed this law so clearly as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] in his very able and exhaustive argument made in this Chamber two years ago. This is what he says:

> There is one principle of monetary science that, if held steadfastly in view, will constitute an unerring guide through what would otherwise be a path of inextricable difficulty. That principle is, that the value of the unit of money in any country is determined by the number of units in circulation. In other words, the value of every dollar depends on the number of dollars out. The greater the number of dollars out, other things being equal, the less will be the value of each dollar; the fewer the number out, other things remaining the same, the greater the value of each, and this without any regard whatever to the material of which the dollars are composed. This is the key to the financial situation of the United States. Much more, it is the key to the financial situation in many lands. Without this key it is in vain that the student attempts to unlock the door leading to the arcanum of monetary knowledge. Unlike many of the locks made by men, the lock on that door is unpickable.

Ricardo says the principle is "incontrovertible." Every dollar, therefore, put in circulation takes its value according to the number of dollars in circulation. If the circulation is one thousand millions, every one represents the value of 23.22 grains of gold. If, in the United States, we add to-day one hundred millions in gold, the dollar will depreciate 10 per cent, and, as Mr. Jefferson says, it will flow out of our circulation to restore the level. If we add to the circulation $100,000,000 of silver and $100,000,000 of paper, they will each take the place of $100,000,000 of gold because of their superior convenience. The gold would leave the circulation and the silver and paper would enter it, but the standard would remain the same. And until the silver and paper increase in volume beyond a thousand millions they will circulate at par and be exactly of the same value as the gold dollar. This fact is stated in the Herschel report, with which my friend, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], is familiar.

In Brazil, that report states, there is little or no gold, but their paper circulation is at par with gold, and kept at par by limiting the number of units. We maintain the equal value of all our dollars by limiting the number of the subsidiary dollars that circulate on the credit of the standard. The market value of the gold in a gold dollar is the standard in the United States to-day, and by limiting the units of silver and paper, and investing them with the power to pay every obligation in that standard, we make them precisely of the same value as the gold dollar. Then if the silver dollars are of the same value as the gold dollars, why should our Government give to note holders the option to demand gold alone in their payment? Every debtor has that right. Why should not the United States exercise it for the benefit of the people?

When the conspiracy was formed to attack the gold reserve, so called, it was intended by the large bankers and money owners of the world to bring our Government to its knees and bully the people into submission to their terms. They wanted a safe and profitable investment for their money. There is no longer room for profitable investment in railroads, mines, manufactures, and banks. And these "business men" demand that Congress shall permit them to invest their surplus in the muscle, blood, and sweat of the American people, and fix that investment far beyond the power of emancipation. When their demand was made, if the Secretary had said to them, "Back up your carts; I will fill them with silver dollars," the play would have ended. But the Secretary says that would have put the country on a silver basis. I have shown that the standard of value can only be changed by increasing the number of dollars in the circulation. No manipulation can do that. As long as every dollar, whether gold, silver, or paper, has the same value, will pay the same amount of debts, and purchase the same amount of property, neither the payment of the one nor the other will affect the standard. If the Secretary had paid the notes in silver, would it have changed the price of cotton, wheat, or corn? Would not the silver dollar have bought just the same amount after as before? Would a gold dollar have bought any more? Would silver dollars have paid any more debts after than before? That is the point upon which the standard changes. Then why continue to sell bonds to raise gold?

We have sold $162,000,000 of bonds, and in a few days it will be two hundred and sixty-two million. Why put this annual tax of more than eleven millions on the people to pay interest to these bondholders? If the Secretary had coined the silver bullion in the Treasury and paid it out, as Congress asked him to do, there would have been no deficit. Why was it not done? Because when silver once got into circulation it would occupy a field which the bankers wanted for their notes, and it would be more difficult to get it out than to keep it out; so the silver is kept under lock and key. Step by step they move upon the Government, sapping and mining as they go, blowing up one outpost after another until they get into the citadel and take it by storm. All this is done to preserve the public credit!

Did anybody ever hear of any man's private credit being injured by his performing with religious fidelity the terms of his contract precisely as he made it, at the time, at the place, and in the manner he contracted? Has anybody ever read in history of any nation on the globe that ever lost its credit or had it impaired by performing its contract in the very terms and letter of that contract? I am sure I never have. The note holders came to Congress in 1869 and asked Congress to declare that the Treasury notes should be paid in coin, and Congress so declared. The bond holders came in 1870 and asked Congress to declare that the bonds to be sold under the act of July 14, 1870, should be paid not only in coin but coin of the then standard value. It was done as they requested. And the notes and bonds are both payable in coin.

What is coin? When we speak of coin, what do we mean? We mean the gold and silver pieces struck by the mints of the United States. If, when the notes are presented, the Government tenders performance in the terms of the contract, there is neither a breach of public faith nor danger of going to a silver standard. I am as much in favor of the gold standard as anybody. I would do anything in my power to bring the silver up to gold. I am sure we all want both metals to be standard money. But this is no question of standards, neither is there involved in it any question of public credit. The question is, will we use both metals equally when coined in payment of debts contracted to be paid in either?

Will we treat the powerful moneyed syndicates just as we treat our own people? The Democratic and Republican parties both, in their platforms in 1892, declared that they held to the use of both gold and silver. Then why not use it and save the people from taxation? In 1869 and 1870, when they had Congress to declare the notes and bonds payable in coin, silver was worth 3 cents more than gold in our dollars, and while the silver dollar is now as valuable as the gold dollar, they demand gold, because silver will not enable them to carry out their purpose. They want bonds and bank notes. They demand gold, and the Government gives it until it is compelled to have more, and then it sells bonds to get it. The Treasury then pays out the notes again and the syndicates get them and repeat the same performance. And so goes the endless chain, effecting nothing, but carrying our people along into captivity to the money holders of the world.

The President admits that it accomplishes nothing. Then why continue it? He tried the experiment with the first fifty millions of bonds, then another fifty millions, then sixty-two millions; now we are to sell one hundred millions more in a few days, and it is admitted that this is to be followed by still another hundred millions in a few months. This policy was established by the Republican party. It has been adhered to by a Democratic Administration, and if it is to be continued in the future, it is only a question of time when our interest-bearing debt will go to fifteen hundred millions and more. For there is no stopping place until all the gold in the world that can be cornered and controlled by syndicates shall be safely invested in American muscle and our posterity delivered into hopeless slavery.

These much-coveted long-time bonds are never intended to be paid. They are to be perpetuated. Many years ago, when I was a member of the House of Representatives, a member of that body introduced a bill to refund the bonds—then soon to become due—into fifty-year bonds. I got ugly, as it is sometimes said I do, when I found him seriously urging such a measure, and I talked ugly. I said to him, if we were to recommend such a measure and it should become a law the people of the United States ought to hang every one that supported it, when he returned to his home. The bill was reported to sell forty-year bonds redeemable after twenty years. I spoke in the House against it. I showed that with the same rates of taxation and the same revenues coming to the Government we could pay the seven hundred millions in six years. The bill was greatly modified in the House and passed. President Hayes vetoed it because he said it contained—

> Provisions which, in my judgment, seriously impair the value and tend to the destruction of the present national banking system of the country.

Here were the banks again trying to perpetuate the public debt. What was the result? All the seven hundred millions were paid in six or seven years. Every dollar of that debt was extinguished. And in the controversy between Congress and the President our children and grandchildren were saved from the great evil.

It would seem from the expressions of the President in his message recommending the funding of the Treasury notes, that he does not entertain the same views about public debts that were held by the fathers. He speaks of the gold obligations that are afflicting us, as though there were any such. I have shown that there are none, and I trust in God that the American people will never let Congress make any gold obligations that will afflict us. The President seems to think there is much good that comes from public debts; that they bring in their train renewed activity and enterprise, restore confidence, and reinstate faith in our monetary strength abroad. This is a very different view of public debts from that entertained by his predecessors. I have not been able to find in any State paper a single expression in line with it. In 1865 Jay Cooke, who was agent to aid the Government to dispose of its loans, issued an address in which he said:

> The debt is public wealth, political union, protection of industry, secure basis for national currency, the orphans' and widows' saving fund.

In this address he says, in capital letters:

> We lay down the proposition that our national debt made permanent and rightly managed will be a national blessing.

He maintained that the national debt was necessary as a basis for national banking, and in a few years from that time we would want one thousand millions of bank notes and the generation then living had burdens enough to bear without having to pay the debt. This was the view of an enthusiast for bank-note currency and protective tariff. But these were not the views of the fathers.

I present to the Senate some of the utterances of our great leaders on the subjects of public debts and bank currency. I will begin at the beginning. These are the words of Mr. Jefferson:

> It is a wise rule and should be fundamental in a government disposed to cherish its credit, but at the same time to restrain the use of it within the limits of its faculties, "never to borrow a dollar without laying a tax on the same instant for paying the interest annually, and the principal within a given term; and to consider that tax as pledged to the creditors on the public faith." On such a pledge as this, sacredly observed, a government may always command, on a reasonable interest, all the lendable money of their citizens, while the necessity of equivalent tax is a salutary warning to them and their constituents against oppression, bankruptcy, and its inevitable consequence, revolution. But the term of redemption must be moderate and at any rate within the limits of their rightful powers. But what limits, it will be asked, does this prescribe to their powers? What is to hinder them from creating a perpetual debt? The laws of nature, I answer. The earth belongs to the living, not to the dead. The will and the power of man expire with his life, by nature's law.

In seeking, then, for an ultimate term for the redemption of our debts, let us rally to this principle and provide for their payment within the term of nineteen years at the furthest. (Volume 6, pages 136, 137.)

We must raise, then, ourselves the money for this war, either by taxes within the year, or by loans; and if by loans, we must repay them ourselves, proscribing forever the English practice of perpetual funding; the ruinous consequences of which, putting right out of the question, should be a sufficient warning to a considerate nation to avoid the example. (Volume 6, page 197.)

At the time we were funding our national debt, we heard much about "a public debt being a public blessing"; that the stock representing it was a creation of active capital for the aliment of commerce, manufactures, and agricultures. This paradox was well adapted to the minds of believers in dreams, and the gulls of that size entered bona fide into it. (Volume 6, page 239.)

The misfortune is that in the meantime we shall plunge ourselves in unextinguishable debt, and entail on our posterity an inheritance of eternal taxes, which will bring our Government and people into the condition of those of England, a nation of pikes and gudgeons, the latter bred merely as food for the former. (Volume 6, page 409.)

Funding I consider as limited, rightfully, to a redemption of the debt within the lives of a majority of the generation contracting it; every generation coming equally, by the laws of the Creator of the world, to the free possession of the earth He made for their subsistence, unencumbered by their predecessors, who, like them, were but tenants for life.

* * * * * * *

And I sincerely believe, with you, that banking establishments are more dangerous than standing armies; and that the principle of spending money to be paid by posterity, under the name of funding, is but swindling futurity on a large scale. (Volume 6, pages 605-608.)

No earthly consideration could induce my consent to contract such a debt as England has by her wars for commerce, to reduce our citizens by taxes to such wretchedness as that, laboring sixteen of the twenty-four hours, they are still unable to afford themselves bread, or barely to earn as much oatmeal or potatoes as will keep soul and body together. (Volume 7, page 7.)

* * * * * * *

I am not among those who fear the people. They and not the rich are our dependence for continued freedom. And to preserve their independence, we must not let our rulers load us with perpetual debt. We must make our election between economy and liberty, or profusion and servitude. If we run into such debts as that we must be taxed in our meat and in our drink, in our necessaries and our comforts, in our labors and our amusements, for our callings and our creeds, as the people of England are, our people, like them, must come to labor sixteen hours in the twenty-four, give the earnings of fifteen of these to the Government for their debts and daily expenses; and the sixteenth being insufficient to afford us bread, we must live as they now do, on oatmeal and potatoes; have no time to think, no means of calling the mismanagers to account, but be glad to obtain subsistence by hiring ourselves to rivet their chains on the necks of our fellow-sufferers. Our landholders, too, like theirs, retaining indeed the title and stewardship of estates called theirs, but held in trust for the Treasury, must wander, like theirs in foreign countries, and be contented with penury, obscurity, exile, and the glory of the nation. This example reads to us the salutary lesson that private fortunes are destroyed by public as well as by private extravagance. And this is the tendency of all known governments. A departure from principle in one instance becomes a precedent for a second, that second for a third, and so on till the bulk of the society is reduced to be mere automatons of misery, to have no sensibilities left but for sinning and suffering. Then begins, indeed, the bellum omnium in omnia, which some philosophers observing to be so general in this world, have mistaken it for the natural instead of the abusive state of man. And the forehorse of this frightful team is public debt. Taxation follows that, and in its turn wretchedness and oppression. (Volume 7, page 14.)

* * * * * * *

I place economy among the first and most important of republican virtues, and public debt as the greatest of the dangers to be feared. We see in England the consequences of the want of it—their laborers reduced to live on a penny in the shilling of their earnings, to give up bread, and resort to oatmeal and potatoes for food; and their landholders exiling themselves to live in penury and obscurity abroad, because at home the Government must have all the clear profits of their land. In fact, they see the fee simple of the island transferred to the public creditors, all its profits going to them for the interest of their debts. Our laborers and landholders must come to this also unless they serenely adhere to the economy you recommend. (Volume 7, page 19.)

The incorporation of a bank and the powers assumed by this bill have not, in my opinion, been delegated to the United States by the Constitution.—Opinion against the constitutionality of a national bank, February 15, 1791, volume 7, page 556.

The bank filled and overflowed in the moment it was opened. Instead of twenty thousand shares twenty-four thousand were offered and a great many unpresented who had not suspected that so much haste was necessary. Thus it is that we shall be paying 13 per cent per annum for eight millions of paper money, instead of having that circulation of gold and silver for nothing. Experience has proved to us that a dollar of silver disappears for every dollar of paper emitted; and for the paper emitted from the bank 7 per cent profits will be received by the subscribers for it as bank paper (according to the last division of profits by the Philadelphia bank), and 6 per cent on the public paper of which it is the representative.—Letter to Colonel Monroe, July 10, 1791, volume 3, page 268.

Our public credit is good, but the abundance of paper has produced a spirit of gambling in the funds, which has laid up our ships at the wharves as too slow instruments of profit, and has even disarmed the hand of the tailor of his needle and thimble. They say the evil will cure itself. I wish it may, but I have rarely seen a gamester cured, even by the disasters of his vocation.—Letter to Gouverneur Morris, August 30, 1791, volume 3, page 290.

You will see further that we are completely saddled and bridled, and that the bank is so firmly mounted on us that we must go where they will guide. They openly publish a resolution that, the national property being increased in value, they must by an increase of circulating medium furnish an adequate representation of it, and by further additions of active capital promote the enterprises of our merchants.—Letter to Colonel Monroe, June 12, 1796, volume 4, page 140.

I wish it were possible to obtain a single amendment to our Constitution. I would be willing to depend on that alone for the reduction of the administration of our Government to the genuine principles of its Constitution; I mean an additional article, taking from the Federal Government the power of borrowing. I now deny their power of making paper money or anything else a legal tender.—Letter to John Taylor, November 26, 1798, volume 4, page 260.

The monopoly of a single bank is certainly an evil. The multiplication of them was intended to cure it; but it multiplied an influence of the same character with the first, and completed the supplanting the precious metals by a paper circulation.—Letter to Mr. Gallatin, June 19, 1802, volume 4, page 440.

From a passage in the letter of the president (of the United States Bank) I observe an idea of establishing a branch bank of the United States in New Orleans. This institution is one of the most deadly hostility existing, against the principles and form of our Constitution. The nation is at this time so strong and united in its sentiments that it can not be shaken at this moment. But suppose a series of untoward events should occur, sufficient to bring into doubt the competency of a republican government to meet a crisis of great danger or to unhinge the confidence of the people in the public functionaries, an institution like this, penetrating by its branches every part of the Union, acting by command and in phalanx, may in a critical moment upset the Government.—Letter to Mr. Gallatin, December 13, 1803, volume 4, page 519.

That we are overdone with banking institutions, which have banished the precious metals and substituted a more fluctuating and unsafe medium; that these have withdrawn capital from useful improvements and employments to nourish idleness; that the wars of the world have swollen our commerce beyond the wholesome limits of exchanging our own productions for our own wants, and that, for the emolument of a small proportion of our society, who prefer these demoralizing pursuits to labors useful to the whole, the peace of the whole is endangered, and all our present difficulties produced, more easily to be deplored than remedied.—Letter to Abbe Salimankis, March 14, 1810, volume 5, page 516.

One of the great advantages of specie as a medium is that, being of universal value, it will keep itself at a general level, flowing out from where it is too high into parts where it is lower. Whereas, if the medium be of local value only, as paper money, if too little, indeed, gold and silver will flow in to supply the deficiency; but if too much, it accumulates, banishes the gold and silver not locked up in vaults and hoards, and depreciates itself—that is to say, its proportion to the annual produce of industry being raised, more of it is required to represent any particular article of produce than in the other countries. And to fill up the measure of blessing, instead of paying, they receive an interest on what they owe from those to whom they owe; for all the notes, or evidences of what they owe, which we see in circulation, have been lent to somebody on an interest which is levied again on us through the medium of commerce.—Letter to John W. Eppes, November 6, 1813, volume 6, page 239.

Everything predicted by the enemies of banks in the beginning is now coming to pass. We are to be ruined now by the deluge of bank paper, as we were formerly by the old Continental paper. It is cruel that such revolutions in private fortunes should be at the mercy of avaricious adventurers, who, instead of employing their capital, if any they have, in manufactures, commerce, or other useful pursuits, make it an instrument to burden all the interchanges of property with their swindling profits, profits which are the price of no useful industry of theirs. * * * I am an enemy to all banks discounting bills or notes for anything but coin.—Letter to Dr. Thomas Cooper, January 16, 1814, volume 6, page 295.

Until the gigantic banking propositions of this winter had made their appearance in the different legislatures, I had hoped that the evil might still be checked; but I see now that it is desperate, and that we must fold our arms and go to the bottom with the ship.—Letter to Joseph C. Cabell, esq., January 17, 1814, volume 6, page 300.

I have ever been the enemy of banks, not of those discounting for cash, but of those foisting their own paper into circulation, and thus banishing our cash. My zeal against those institutions was so warm and open at the establishment of the Bank of the United States that I was derided as a maniac by the tribe of bank-mongers who were seeking to filch from the public their swindling and barren gains.—Letter to President Adams, January 24, 1814, volume 6, page 305.

From the establishment of the United States Bank to this day I have preached against this system, but have been sensible no cure could be hoped but in the catastrophe now happening. The remedy was to let banks drop gradation at the expiration of their charters, and for the State governments to relinquish the power of establishing others. This would not, as it should not, have given the power of establishing them to Congress. But Congress could then have issued Treasury notes payable within a fixed period, and founded on a specific tax, the proceeds of which, as they came in, should be exchangeable for the notes of that particular emission only.—Letter to Thomas Cooper, esq., September 10, 1814, volume 6, page 381.

Let us be allured by no projects of banks, public or private, or ephemeral expedients, which, enabling us to gasp and flounder a little longer, only increase by protracting the agonies of death.—Letter to James Monroe, October 16, 1814, volume 6, page 395.

The fatal possession of the whole circulating medium by our banks, the excess of those institutions, and their present discredit cause all our difficulties. Treasury notes of small as well as high denomination, bottomed on a tax which would redeem them in ten years, would place at our disposal the whole circulating medium of the United States; a fund of credit sufficient to carry us through any probable length of war.—Letter to his excellency Mr. Crawford, February 11, 1815, volume 6, page 419.

The Government is now issuing Treasury notes for circulation, bottomed on solid funds, and bearing interest. The banking confederacy (and the merchants bound to them by their debts) will endeavor to crush the credit of these notes, but the country is eager for them, as something they can trust to, and so soon as a convenient quantity of them can get into circulation, the bank notes die.—Letter to Jean Batiste Say, March 2, 1815, volume 6, page 434.

Their merchants (the English) established among us, the bonds by which our own are chained to their feet, and the banking combinations interwoven with the whole, have shown the extent of their control, even during a war with her. They are the workers of all the embarrassments our finances have experienced during the war.—Letter to Cæsar A. Rodney, March 16, 1815, volume 6, page 449.

Like a dropsical man calling out for water, water, our deluded citizens are clamoring for more banks, more banks. The American mind is now in the state of fever which the world has so often seen in the history of other nations. We are under the bank bubble, as England was under the South Sea bubble, France under the Mississippi bubble, and as every nation is liable to be under whatever bubble, design, or delusion may puff up in moments when off their guard. We are now taught to believe that legerdemain tricks upon paper can produce as solid wealth as hard labor in the earth. It is vain for common sense to urge that nothing can produce nothing; that it is an idle dream to believe in a philosopher's stone which is to turn everything into gold, and to redeem man from the original sentence of his Maker, "In the sweat of his brow shall he eat his bread."—Letter to Colonel Yancey, January 6, 1816, volume 6, page 515.

The metallic medium of which we should be possessed at the commencement of a war would be a sufficient fund for all the loans we should need through its continuance; and if the national bills issued be bottomed (as is indispensible) on pledges of specific taxes for their redemption within certain and moderate epochs, and be of proper denominations for circulation, no interest on them would be necessary or just, because they would answer to everyone the purposes of the metallic money withdrawn and replaced by them.—Letter to William H. Crawford, June 20, 1816, volume 7, page 8.

The bank mania is one of the most threatening of these imitations. It is raising up a moneyed aristocracy in our country which has already set the Government at defiance, and although forced at length to yield a little on this first essay of their strength, their principles are unyielded and unyielding. These have taken deep root in the hearts of that class from which our legislators are drawn, and the sop to Cerberus from fable has become history. Their principles lay hold of the good, their pelf of the bad, and thus those whom the Constitution had placed as guards to its portals are sophisticated or suborned from their duties. That paper money has some advantages is admitted. But that its abuses also are inevitable, and by breaking up the measure of value makes a lottery of all private property can not be denied. Shall we ever be able to put a constitutional veto upon it?—Letter to Dr. Josephus B. Stuart, May 10, 1817, volume 7, page 64.

There is, indeed, one evil which awakens me at times, because it jostles me at every turn. It is that we have now no measure of value.—Letter to Nathaniel Macon, esq., January 12, 1819, volume 7, page 111.

The evils of this deluge of paper money are not to be removed until our citizens are generally and radically instructed in their cause and consequences, and silence by their authority the interested clamors and sophistry of speculating, shaving, and banking institutions.—Letter to Mr. Adams, March 21, 1819, volume 7, page 115.

The paper bubble is then burst. This is what you and I and every reasoning man, seduced by no obliquity of mind or interest, have long foreseen, yet its disastrous effects are not the less for having been foreseen. We are laboring under a dropsical fullness of circulating medium. Nearly all of it is now called in by the banks, who have the regulation of the safety valves of our fortunes, and who condense and explode them at their will. Lands in this State can not now be sold for a year's rent.—Letter to J. Adams, esq., November 7, 1819, volume 7, page 142.

If we suffer the moral of the present lesson to pass away without improvement by the eternal suppression of bank paper, then, indeed, is the condition of our country desperate, until the slow advance of public instruction shall give to our functionaries the wisdom of their station.—Letter to Mr. Rives, November 28, 1819, volume 7, page 145.

The plethory of circulating medium which raised the prices of everything to several times their ordinary and standard value, in which state of things many and heavy debts were contracted, and the sudden withdrawing too great a proportion of that medium, and reduction of prices far below that standard, constitute the disease under which we are now laboring and which must end in a general revolution of property if some remedy is not applied.—Letter to Mr. Rives, November 28, 1819, volume 7, page 146.

Interdict forever, to both the State and national governments, the power of establishing any paper bank, for without this interdiction we shall have the same ebbs and flows of medium and the same revolutions of property to go through every twenty or thirty years.—Letter to Mr. Rives, November 28, 1819, volume 7, page 147.

This State is in a condition of unparalleled distress. The sudden reduction of the circulating medium from a plethory to all but annihilation is producing an entire revolution of fortune.—Letter to H. Nelson, esq., March 12, 1820, volume 7, page 151.

I should put down all banks, admit none but a metallic circulation, that will take its proper level with the like circulation in other countries, and then our manufacturers may work in fair competition with those of other countries, and the import duties which the Government may lay for the purposes of revenue will so far place them above equal competition.—Letter to Mr. Pinckney, September 30, 1820, volume 7, page 180.

The following are the declarations of the national Democracy in their platforms:

A rigorously frugal administration of the Government and the application of all the possible savings of the public revenue to the liquidation of the public debt, and resistance, therefore, to all measures looking to the multiplication of officers and salaries merely to create indebtedness and augment the public debt on the principle of its being a public blessing.—Platform of 1800, article 4.

We declare unqualified hostility to bank notes and paper money as a circulating medium, because gold and silver is the only safe and constitutional currency.—Platform, 1836.

ART. 6. That Congress has no power to charter a United States bank; that we believe such an institution one of deadly hostility to the interests of the country, dangerous to our republican institutions and the liberties of the people, and calculated to place the business of the country within the control of a concentrated money power and above the laws and will of the people.—Democratic platform, 1840.

Democratic platform of 1844 affirms article 6 of the platform of 1840.

Democratic platform of 1848 declares—

For the gradual but certain extinction of the public debt.

The platform of 1848 further declares that the triumph of 1844 had fulfilled the hopes of the Democracy of the Union in defeating the declared purposes of their opponents to create a national bank. In protecting the currency and labor of the country from ruinous fluctuations and guarding the money of the country for the use of the people by the establishment of a constitutional Treasury.

Also—

Resolved, That it is the duty of every branch of the Government to enforce and practice the most rigid economy in conducting our public affairs, and that no more revenue ought to be raised than is required to defray the necessary expenses of the Government and for the gradual but certain extinction of the public debt.—Democratic platform, 1852, article 8.

Article 9 of the same:

That Congress has no power to charter a national bank; that we believe such an institution one of deadly hostility to the best interests of the country, dangerous to our republican institutions and the liberties of the people, and calculated to place the business of the country within the control of a concentrated money power above the laws and will of the people.—Democratic platform, 1852, article 9.

That Congress has no power to charter a national bank; that we believe such an institution one of deadly hostility to the best interests of the country, dangerous to our republican institutions and the liberties of the American people, and calculated to place the business of the country within the control of a concentrated money power and above the laws and will of the people.—Democratic platform, 1856, article 7.

Payment of all the public debt of the United States as rapidly as practicable.—Democratic platform, 1868, article 3.

The following are some of the utterances of some of our great leaders in the past:

The expansion of the currency by the issue of paper in a period of prosperity will inevitably be succeeded by its contraction in periods of adversity.—W. H. Crawford.

The great object now in view is to terminate forever the evil of the present system, and to place the currency on a foundation so stable that it can not again be shaken. If a broad and sure foundation of gold and silver is provided for our system of paper credits we need not hereafter apprehend those alternate seasons of abundance and scarcity of money suddenly succeeding each other, which have so far marked our history and irreparably injured so many of our citizens.—Report of R. B. Taney, Secretary of Treasury, April 15, 1834.

Proneness to excessive issues has ever been the vice of the banking system, a vice as prominent in national as in State institutions. This propensity is as subservient to the advancement of private interests in the one as in the other; and those who direct them both, being principally guided by the same views and influenced by the same motives, will be equally ready to stimulate to extravagance of enterprise by improvidence of credit.—President Van Buren's message, September 4, 1837.

The history of trade in the United States for the last three or four years affords the most convincing evidence that our present condition is chiefly to be attributed to overaction in all the departments of business, an overaction deriving, perhaps, its first impulse from antecedent causes, but stimulated to its destructive consequences by excessive issues of bank paper and by other facilities for the acquisition and enlargement of credit.—President Van Buren's message, September 4, 1837.

The limited influence of a national bank in averting derangement in the exchanges of the country, or in compelling the resumption of specie payments, is now not less apparent than its tendency to increase inordinate speculation by sudden expansions and contractions; its disposition to create panic and embarrassment for the promotion of its own designs; its interference with politics, and its far greater power for evil than for good, either in regard to the local institutions or the operations of a government itself. What was in these respects but apprehension or opinion when a national bank was first established now stands confirmed by humiliating experience. The scenes through which we have passed conclusively prove how little our commerce, agriculture, manufactures, or finances require such an institution, and what dangers are attendant on its power—a power, I trust, never to be conferred by the American people upon their Government, and still less upon individuals not responsible to them for its unavoidable abuses.—Van Buren's second annual message, December 4, 1838.

The experiment has been tried, and local paper has failed as a national currency, and out of that failure arose the second United States bank. It will fail again and again, and forever. There is no safety for the Federal revenues but in the total exclusion of local paper, and that from every branch of the revenues—customs, lands, and post-office. There is no safety for the national finances but in the constitutional medium of gold and silver. After forty years' wandering in the wilderness of paper money we have approached the confines of the constitutional medium.—Benton, December 14, 1836.

The day of revulsion must come, and its effects must be more or less distress; but come it must. The present bloat in the paper system can not continue; violent contraction must follow enormous expansion; a scene of distress and suffering must ensue—to come of itself out of the present state of things, without being stimulated and helped on by our unwise legislation.—Mr. Benton, 1837.

Speaking of the bill to rescind the specie order and make the notes of local banks receivable for Federal dues, Mr. Benton said:

I separate myself from it; I wash my hands of it; I oppose it. I am one of those who promised gold—not paper. I promised the currency of the Constitution, not the currency of corporations. I did not join in putting down the Bank of the United States to put up a wilderness of local banks. I did not join in putting down the paper currency of a national bank to put up a national paper currency of a thousand local banks. I did not strike Cæsar to make Antony master of Rome.—Mr. Benton, 1837.

At this epoch, this second explosion of the paper system, I came into the Senate of the United States. I came here in the autumn of 1820. I traveled from the Mississippi to the Potomac amidst the crash of falling banks, the wrecks of a paper currency, and the lamentations of a suffering nation. I arrived here to see a Government without a dollar, and borrowing money to pay its daily expenses, which the year before boasted a revenue of forty-seven millions and tormented itself with schemes to get rid of surpluses. I commenced my Senatorial career under these circumstances—circumstances to make me meditate and to make me feel. Happily my associations were with the fathers of the Republic—with Macon and Randolph, whose intimacy I enjoyed and whose friendship I possessed. My reading was that of the early history of the Government—the Revolution, the Confederation, the formation of the Constitution of 1789, and the workings of the machinery of the Federal Government under the Administrations of the earlier Presidents, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. The result of this association and of this reading was a thorough conviction (1) that the Federal Constitution was formed by hard-money men, and was intended to be a hard-money Government; (2) that it had been converted into a paper-money Government, contrary to the genius and intention of the Constitution; (3) that this departure from the Constitution was the cause of the money calamities during the war, and again at that time; (4) that the remedy for these calamities was to return to the plain meaning of the Constitution, as expressed in the revenue act of 1789, and to confine the receipts and expenditures of the Federal Government to gold and silver coin only.—Benton, March 14, 1838.

6. It tends to make and to break fortunes by the flux and reflux of paper. Profuse issues and sudden contractions perform this operation, which can be repeated, like planetary and pestilential visitations, in every cycle of so many years, at every periodical return transferring millions from the actual possessors of property to the Neptunes who preside over the flux and reflux of paper.—Benton, February 2, 1831.

The Bank of the United States was chartered in 1816, and before 1820 had performed one of its cycles of delusive and bubble prosperity, followed by actual and widespread calamity. The whole paper system, of which it was the head and citadel, after a vast expansion, had suddenly collapsed, spreading desolation over the land and carrying ruin to debtors. The years 1819 and 1820 were a period of gloom and agony. No money, either gold or silver; no paper convertible into specie; no measure or standard of value left remaining. The local banks (all but those of New England), after a brief resumption of specie payments, again sank into a state of suspension. The Bank of the United States, created as a remedy for all those evils, now at the head of the evil, prostrate and helpless, with no power left but that of suing its debtors and selling their property, and purchasing for itself at its own nominal price. No price for property or produce. No purchasers at execution sales but the creditor or some hoarder of money. No employment for industry, no demand for labor, no sale for the product of the farm, no sound of the hammer but that of the auctioneer knocking down property. Stop laws, property laws, replevin laws, stay laws, loan-office laws—the intervention of the legislator between the creditor and the debtor—this was the business of legislation in three-fourths of the States of the Union, of all south and west of New England. No medium of exchange but depreciated paper; no change even but little bits of foul paper marked so many cents and signed by some tradesman, barber, or innkeeper; exchanges deranged to the extent of 50 or 100 per cent. Distress, the universal cry of the people; relief, the universal demand thundered at the doors of all legislatures, State and Federal.—Benton: Thirty Years' View, volume I, page 6.

Gold and silver will never circulate where banks issue notes which come in competition with them, for it will invariably happen that when the circulating medium is composed of different kinds of money and one of them is of less value than the other, but not sufficiently depreciated to be discredited, the inferior will after a time become the general currency and the more valuable will entirely disappear.—R. B. Taney, Secretary Treasury, April 15, 1834.

The evils of a redundant paper circulation are now manifest to every eye. It alternately raises and sinks the value of every man's property. It makes a beggar of the man to-morrow who is indulging in dreams of wealth to-day. It converts the business of society into a mere lottery, while those who distribute the prizes are wholly irresponsible to the people. When the collapse comes, as come it must, it casts laborers out of employment, crushes manufacturers and merchants, and ruins thousands of honest and industrious citizens. Shall we then, by our policy, any longer contribute to such fatal results? That is the question.—Buchannan, September 29, 1837.

Paper money was the fatal cause of all the disasters of 1824; it produced the explosion of 1814, of 1818-19, of 1837, and of 1839, and will continue to produce here, as it ever has done elsewhere, periodical revulsions, suspensions, and disasters so long as the system is continued. Eradicate the paper system, and you will remove the great cause of all our evils, and anything short of this will be but temporary expedients; resumption will be but the signal for another suspension, until these revulsions shall become annual, and the system die by its own hand, the death of the suicide, or expel all the precious metals, destroy the standard of value, convert bank paper into a legal tender, not merely to the Government, but to the people, and thus overthrow the Constitution, subvert the liberties of the country and the rights of the people, and establish the reign of a bankocracy more sordid, ruinous, and despotic than that of any monarch, however absolute.

* * * * * * *

What is this bank paper? It is not labor, nor its products, nor wealth, nor capital, nor anything of intrinsic value. It is not money, for it is merely a promise to pay money, and is nothing in fact but circulating debts, and their issue and augmentation augments nothing but the debts of a country. Every bank note is only a debt due the holder of the note, and in every loan of its paper made by a bank, it augments nothing but the debts of a country; first, by creating a debt to it by the borrower to the amount of the loan, and, secondly, a debt by it to all the holders of its notes. The banks, then, are the great cause of all that vast load of debt which has almost weighed down the energies of this great nation.

* * * * * * *

But for the bank paper system the products of our industry would be more than double what they are now, and our population wonderfully augmented, and we should, long ere this, have passed England in the race for wealth and power, and will soon overtake and pass her now, if we will but abandon the wretched policy of debasing our currency by the bank paper system, and thus closing to the products of our own industry nearly every market at home and abroad.

* * * * * * *

Yes, sir; throughout this Union and throughout the globe wherever you find the banking system to prevail you will be sure to find periodical suspensions and revulsions and widespread ruin. Explosion is inseparable from the system; and when you speak to me of well-regulated banks of circulation, you speak to me of what never has been or will be. You might as well speak to me of well-regulated devils, whom even Almighty power found it impossible to regulate in any other manner than by casting in chains into billows of everlasting fire. And, sir, our bank-paper system, if not abandoned, may yet be regulated in the all-consuming blaze of popular indignation.

* * * * * * *

For myself, I am opposed to investing in banks the power of manufacturing a paper currency. This power of creating a currency for a nation is one of the highest and most important attributes of a sovereign power, and more deeply affects all the diversified interests of society than the exercise of any other power whatever. It is more important than coining money, for that must be preceded by the purchase of the bullion, but here is a power to manufacture paper money at pleasure, to constitute the currency of a State or nation, a power entrusted to the irresponsible directory of a bank, acting in secret, and whose chief interest is to abuse their power. In proportion as a bank increases in currency are its dividends and profits augmented, and hence the stimulus to over issues is irresistible, and especially is this the case where, as we have seen by the evidence before quoted, the very directors which manufacture the paper loan out, as a general rule, more than one-fourth of it to themselves. This power, then, of issuing their paper as money is truly fearful, and when united with the power of loaning at pleasure, in secret conclave, and to whom and for what purpose the bank directory may think proper, and of recalling it at pleasure, and of contracting and expanding as suits their caprice, is a power which few European despots would dare to exercise, and is utterly incompatible with the fundamental principles of a free government.—From the speech of Robert J. Walker in the Senate January 21, 1840.

In a recent report made by the Treasury Department on the condition of the banks throughout the different States, according to returns dated nearest to January, 1857, the aggregate amount of actual specie in their vaults is $58,349,838, of their circulation $214,778,822, and of their deposits $230,351,352. Thus it appears that these banks, in the aggregate, have considerably less than one dollar in seven of gold and silver compared with their circulation and deposits. It was palpable, therefore, that the very first pressure must drive them to suspension, and deprive the people of a convertible currency, with all its disastrous consequences. It is truly wonderful that they should have so long continued to preserve their credit, when a demand for the payment of one-seventh of their immediate liabilities would have driven them into insolvency. And this is the condition of the banks, notwithstanding that four hundred millions of gold from California have flowed in upon us within the last eight years, and the tide still continues to flow. Indeed, such has been the extravagance of bank credits that the banks now hold a considerably less amount of specie, either in proportion to their capital or to their circulation and deposits combined, than they did before the discovery of gold in California. While in the year 1848 their specie, in proportion to their capital, was more than equal to one dollar for four and a half, in 1857 it does not amount to $1 for every $6.33 of their capital. In the year 1848 the specie was equal within a very small fraction to one dollar in five of their circulation and deposits; in 1857 it is not equal to one dollar in seven and a half of their circulation and deposits.

From this statement it is easy to account for our financial history for the last forty years. It has been a history of extravagant expansions in the business of the country, followed by ruinous contractions. At successive intervals the best and most enterprising men have been tempted to their ruin by excessive bank loans of mere paper credit, exciting them to extravagant importations of foreign goods, wild speculations, and ruinous and demoralizing stock gambling.—From message of President Buchanan, first session Thirty-fifth Congress.

We have possessed all the elements of material wealth in rich abundance, and yet, notwithstanding all these advantages, our country, in its monetary interests, is at the present moment in a deplorable condition. In the midst of unsurpassed plenty in all the productions of agriculture and in all the elements of national wealth, we find our manufactures suspended, our public works retarded, our private enterprises of different kinds abandoned, and thousands of useful laborers thrown out of employment and reduced to want. The revenue of the Government, which is chiefly derived from duties on imports from abroad, has been greatly reduced, whilst the appropriations made by Congress at its last session for the current fiscal year are very large in amount.

* * * * * * *

It is our duty to inquire what has produced such unfortunate results and whether their recurrence can be prevented. In all former revulsions the blame might have been fairly attributed to a variety of cooperating causes; but not so upon the present occasion. It is apparent that our existing misfortunes have proceeded solely from our extravagant and vicious system of paper currency and bank credits, exciting the people to wild speculations and gambling in stocks. These revulsions must continue to recur at successive intervals so long as the amount of the paper currency and bank loans and discounts of the country shall be left to the discretion of fourteen hundred irresponsible banking institutions, which, from the very law of their nature, will consult the interest of their stockholders rather than the public welfare.—Message of President Buchanan at the commencement of the first session Thirty-fifth Congress.

The lessons which we have learned from our fathers have taught us to regard public debts as great public evils, which are to be removed as rapidly as we can. We have learned from them that an interest-bearing debt feeds on the vitals of a state, that it saps its strength in time of peace and leaves it utterly unprepared for the exigencies of war. When General Washington took charge of the Government one of the first things he did was to call the attention of Congress to the importance of extinguishing the national debt. Besides the evil of constant taxation, he impressed upon them that the public credit demanded its extinction. He felt how necessary it was that the nation should be in possession of all its resources when it came to a trial of strength with a powerful adversary.

I wish to ask our friends north of the Ohio what do you suppose would have been your condition in the great civil war through which we passed thirty years ago if you had gone into that contest with a great public debt? I care nothing about the power of your numbers, your patriotism, the courage of your soldiers, your inventive genius to supply the wants of the military establishment, if you had entered that war with a national debt of two billion or two and a half billion dollars, as you came out of it, requiring for interest $150,000,000 a year, what would have been your condition? Entering the war without any debt, before you had been in it three years your promissory notes had gone to 38 cents on the dollar, with all the resources of the country unpledged. But suppose you had had to borrow money and that you were already in debt to the extent of two and a half billion dollars, requiring an enormous taxation to meet its interest. Your paper would have gone to nothing, as the continental paper did. In a year or two it would have gone from 1 to 10, in the next year to a hundred, and finally, as the continental money did, it would have gone out. In spite of all your power, and all your soldiers, and all your patriotism, and your access to the whole world for supplies you would have met with ignominious defeat.

If we have the temerity to load down our people with debt and go on and exhaust them by taxation, and it then becomes necessary in the course of events for us to measure arms with one, two, or three of the most powerful nations on the globe, you will see how our credit will be shattered.

I wish to show what General Washington thought of public debts. He was not a Democrat. He could hardly be called a Federalist. He was elected by the whole nation, and by distinction he may be called the Patriot President. All his successors were elected by parties. He stood halfway between the Democrats and Federalists. His Administration was controlled in a great measure by the two powerful intellects of Jefferson and Hamilton, both of whom were in his Cabinet, and both urging opposing ideas. He pursued the middle course. Here is what he said in his messages:

Allow me, moreover, to hope that it will be a favorite policy with you not merely to secure a payment of the interest of the debt funded, but as far and as fast as the growing resources of the country will permit to exonerate it of the principal itself. The appropriations you have made of the Western lands explain your disposition on this subject, and I am persuaded that the sooner that valuable fund can be made to contribute, along with other means, to the actual reduction of the public debt, the more salutary will the measure be to every public interest, as well as the more satisfactory to our constituents.—Washington's second annual address to Congress, December 8, 1790. (Williams's Presidents' Messages, volume 1, page 38.)

No pecuniary consideration is more urgent than the regular redemption and discharge of the public debt. On none can delay be more injurious or an economy of time be more valuable.—Washington's fifth annual address to Congress, December 3, 1793. (Williams's Presidents' Messages, volume 1, page 49.)

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES: The time which has elapsed since the commencement of our fiscal measures has developed our pecuniary resources so as to open the way for a definitive plan for the redemption of the public debt. It is believed that the result is such as to encourage Congress to consummate this work without delay. Nothing can more promote the permanent welfare of the nation and nothing would be more grateful to our constituents. Indeed, whatever is unfinished of our system of public credit can not be benefited by procrastination; and as far as may be practicable we ought to place that credit on grounds which can not be disturbed and to prevent that progressive accumulation of debt which must ultimately endanger all Governments.—Washington's sixth annual address to Congress, November 19, 1794. (Williams's Presidents' Messages, volume 1, page 59.)

Whether measures may not be advisable to reenforce the provision for the redemption of the public debt will naturally engage your examination. Congress have demonstrated their sense to be, and it was superfluous to repeat mine, that whatsoever will tend to accelerate the honorable extinction of our public debt accords as much with the true interests of our country as with the general sense of our constituents.—Washington's seventh annual address to Congress, December 8, 1795. (Williams's Presidents' Messages, volume 1, page 63.)

A reenforcement of the existing provisions for discharging our public debt was mentioned in my address at the opening of the last session. Some preliminary steps were taken toward it, the maturing of which will no doubt engage your zealous attention during the present session. I will only add that it will afford me heartfelt satisfaction to concur in such further measures as will ascertain to our country the prospect of a speedy extinguishment of our debt. Posterity may have cause to regret if, from any motive, intervals of tranquility are left unimproved for accelerating this valuable end.—Washington's Eighth Annual Address, December 7, 1796. (Williams's Presidents' Messages, volume 1, page 68.)

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear.—Washington's Farewell Address, September 17, 1796. (Williams's Presidents' Messages, volume 1, page 75.)

The following words are from his successors:

The consequences arising from the continual accumulation of public debts in other countries ought to admonish us to be careful to prevent their growth in our own. The national defense must be provided for as well as the support of Government, but both should be accomplished as much as possible by immediate taxes and as little as possible by loans.—President John Adams's message, 1797.

When effects so salutary result from the plan you have already sanctioned, when merely by avoiding false objects of expense we are able, without a direct tax, without internal taxes, and without borrowing, to make large and effectual payments toward the discharge of our public debt and the emancipation of our posterity from that moral canker. It is an encouragement, fellow-citizens, of the highest order, to proceed as we have begun, in substituting economy for taxation, and in pursuing what is useful for a nation placed as we are, rather than what is practiced by others under different circumstances. And whensoever we are destined to meet events which shall call forth all the energies of our countrymen, we have the firmest reliance on those energies, and the comfort of leaving for calls like these the extraordinary resources of loans and internal taxes.—Jefferson's second annual message to Congress, December 15, 1802. (Williams's Presidents' Messages, volume 1, page 160.)

I am uneasy at seeing that the sale of our western lands is not yet commenced. That valuable fund for the immediate extinction of our debt will, I fear, be suffered to slip through our fingers. Every delay exposes it to events which no human foresight can guard against.—Letter to James Madison, June 20, 1787, volume 2, page 153.

The question whether one generation of men has a right to bind another seems never to have been started either on this or our side of the water. Yet it is a question of such consequences as not only to merit decision, but place also among the fundamental principles of every government. The course of reflection in which we are immersed here, on the elementary principles of society, has presented this question to my mind; and that no such obligation can be transmitted I think very capable of proof. I set out on this ground, which I suppose to be self-evident, that the earth belongs in usufruct to the living; that the dead have neither powers nor rights over it. The portion occupied by any individual ceases to be his when himself ceases to be, and reverts to the society. If the society has formed no rules for the appropriation of its lands in severalty, it will be taken by the first occupants, and these will generally be the wife and children of the decedent. If they have formed rules of appropriation those rules may give it to the wife and children, or to some one of them, or to the legatee of the deceased. So, they may give it to its creditor. But the child, the legatee or creditor, takes it, not by natural right, but by a law of the society of which he is a member, and to which he is subject. Then, no man can, by natural right, oblige the lands he occupied, or the persons who succeed him in that occupation, to the payment of debts contracted by him. For if he could he might during his own life eat up the usufruct of the lands for several generations to come; and then the lands would belong to the dead and not to the living, which is the reverse of our principle.

What is true of every member of the society individually is true of them all collectively, since the rights of the whole can be no more than the sum of the rights of the individuals. To keep our ideas clear when applying them to a multitude, let us suppose a whole generation of men to be born on the same day, to attain mature age on the same day, and to die on the same day, leaving a succeeding generation in the moment of attaining their mature age, all together. Let the ripe age be supposed of 21 years, and their period of life thirty-four years more, that being the average term given by the bills of mortality to persons of 21 years of age. Each successive generation would, in this way, come and go off the stage at a fixed moment, as individuals do now. Then, I say, the earth belongs to each of these generations during its course, fully and in its own right. The second generation receives it clear of the debts and incumbrances of the first, the third of the second, and so on. For if the first could charge it with a debt, then the earth would belong to the dead and not to the living generation. Then, no generation can contract debts greater than may be paid during the course of its own existence.—Letter written from Paris to James Madison, September 6, 1789, volume 3, page 103.

The earth belongs also to the living generation; they may manage it, then, and what proceeds from it, as they please, during their usufruct. They are masters, too, of their own persons, and consequently may govern them as they please. But persons and property make the sum of the objects of government. The constitution and the laws of their predecessors are extinguished, then, in their natural course, with those whose will gave them being.—Letter to James Madison, September 6, 1789, volume 3, page 106.

Then the contracts, constitutions, and laws of every society become void in nineteen years from their date.—Letter to Dr. Gem, ——— —, ——, volume 3, page 109.

As the doctrine is that a public debt is a public blessing, so they think a perpetual one is a perpetual blessing, and therefore wish to make it so large that we can never pay it off.—Letter to Col. N. Lewis, April 12, 1792., volume 3, page 348.

My whole correspondence while in France, and every word, letter, and act on the subject since my return, prove that no man is more ardently intent to see the public debt soon and sacredly paid off than I am. This exactly marks the difference between Colonel Hamilton's views and mine, that I would wish the debt paid to-morrow; he wishes it never to be paid, but always to be a thing wherewith to corrupt and manage the Legislature.—Letter to the President of the United States, September 9, 1792, volume 3, page 464.

I consider the fortunes of our Republic as depending, in an eminent degree, on the extinguishment of the public debt before we engage in any war, because, that done, we shall have revenue enough to improve our country in time of peace and defend it in war, without recurring either to new taxes or loans. But if the debt should once more be swelled to a formidable size its entire discharge will be despaired of and we shall be committed to the English career of debt, corruption, and rottenness, closing with revolution. The discharge of the debt, therefore, is vital to the destinies of our Government, and it hangs on Mr. Madison and yourself alone. We shall never see another President and Secretary of the Treasury making all other objects subordinate to this.—Letter to Mr. Albert Gallatin, October 11, 1809, volume 5, page 477.

I keep up my hopes that if war be avoided Mr. Madison will be able to complete the payment of the national debt within his term, after which one-third of the present revenue would support the Government.—Letter to M. Dupont De Nemours, April 15, 1811, volume 5, page 583.

Having seen the people of all other nations bowed down to the earth under the wars and prodigalities of their rulers, I have cherished their opposites—peace, economy, and riddance of the public debt—believing that these were the high road to public as well as to private prosperity and happiness.—Letter to Henry Middleton, esq., January 8, 1813, volume 6, page 90.

It is a wise rule, and should be fundamental in a government disposed to cherish its credit, and at the same time to restrain the use of it within the limits of its faculties, "never to borrow a dollar without laying a tax in the same instant for paying the interest annually and the principal within a given term; and to consider that tax as pledged to the creditors on the public faith." * * * But the term of redemption must be moderate, and at any rate within the limits of their rightful powers. But what limits, it will be asked, does this prescribe to their powers? What is to hinder them from creating a perpetual debt? The laws of nature, I answer. The earth belongs to the living, not to the dead. The will and the power of man expire with his life by nature's law.—Letter to John W. Eppes, June 24, 1813, volume 6, page 136.

There have existed nations, and civilized and learned nations, who have thought that a father had a right to sell his child as a slave, in perpetuity; that he could alienate his body and industry conjointly, and a fortiori his industry separately, and consume its fruits himself. A nation asserting this fratricide right might well suppose they could burden with public as well as private debt their "nati natorum, et qui nascentur at illis." But we, this age, and in this country especially, are advanced beyond those notions of natural law. We acknowledge that our children are born free; that that freedom is the gift of nature, and not of him who begot them; that though under our care during infancy, and therefore of necessity under a duly tempered authority, that care is confided to us to be exercised for the preservation and good of the child only, and his labors during youth are given as a retribution for the charges of infancy. As he was never the property of his father, so when adult he is sui juris, entitled himself to the use of his own limbs and the fruits of his own exertions. So far we are advanced, without mind enough, it seems, to take the whole step. We believe, or act as if we believed, that although an individual father can not alienate the labor of his son, the aggregate body of fathers may alienate the labor of all their sons, of their posterity, in the aggregate, and oblige them to pay for all the enterprises, just or unjust, profitable or ruinous, into which our vices, our passions, or our personal interests may lead us. But I trust that this proposition needs only to be looked at by an American to be seen in its true point of view, and that we shall all consider ourselves unauthorized to saddle our posterity with our debts, and morally bound to pay them ourselves, and consequently within what may be deemed the period of a generation or the life of the majority.—Letter to Mr. Eppes, September 11, 1813, volume 6, page 196.

In seeking, then, for an ultimate term for the redemption of our debts, let us rally to this principle, and provide for their payment within the term of nineteen years at the farthest.—Letter to John W. Eppes, June 24, 1813, volume 6, page 138.

The misfortune is that in the meantime we shall plunge ourselves in unextinguishable debt and entail on our posterity an inheritance of eternal taxes, which will bring our Government and the people into the condition of those of England, a nation of pikes and gudgeons, the latter bred merely as food for the former.—Letter to Colonel Monroe, January 1, 1815, volume 6, page 409.

The multiplication of public offices, increase of expense beyond income, growth and entailment of a public debt are indications soliciting the employment of the pruning knife; and I doubt not it will be employed, good principles being as yet prevalent enough for that.—Letter to Judge Roane, March 9, 1821, volume 7, page 212.

That our Creator made the earth for the use of the living and not of the dead; that those who exist not can have no use nor right in it, no authority or power over it; that one generation of men can not foreclose or burthen its use to another, which comes to it in its own right and by the same divine beneficence; that a preceding generation can not bind a succeeding one by its laws or contracts; these deriving their obligation from the will of the existing majority, and that majority being removed by death, another comes in its place with a will equally free to make its own laws and contracts; these are axioms so self-evident that no explanation can make them plainer.—Letter to Mr. Thomas Earle, September 24, 1823, volume 7, page 310.

Can one generation bind another, and all others in succession, forever? I think not. The Creator has made the earth for the living, not the dead. Rights and powers can only belong to persons, not to things, not to mere matter, unendowed with will. The dead are not even things. The particles of matter which composed their bodies make part now of the bodies of other animals, vegetables or minerals, of a thousand forms. To what, then, are attached the rights and powers they held while in the form of men? A generation may bind itself as long as its majority continues in life; when that has disappeared another majority is in place, holds all the rights and powers their predecessors once held, and may change their laws and institutions to suit themselves. Nothing, then, is unchangeable but the inherent and unalienable rights of man.—Letter to Maj. John Cartwright, June 5, 1824, volume 7, page 359.

THE UNION—WHO ARE ITS REAL FRIENDS.

Not those who promote unnecessary accumulations of the debt of the Union, instead of the best means of discharging it as fast as possible, thereby increasing the causes of corruption in the Government and the pretext for new taxes under its authority; the former undermining the confidence, the latter alienating the affections of the people.

The real friends of the Union are those who are friends to the authority of the people, the sole foundation on which the Union rests;

Who are friends to liberty, the great end for which the Union was formed;

Who are friends to the limited and republican system of government, the means provided by that authority for the attainment of that end;

Who, considering a public debt as injurious to the interests of the people and baneful to the virtue of the Government, are enemies to every contrivance for unnecessarily increasing its amount, or protracting its duration, or extending its influence.

In a word, those are the real friends of the Union who are friends to that republican policy throughout which is the only cement for the union of a republican people, in opposition to a spirit of usurpation and monarchy, which is the menstruum most capable of dissolving it.—No. 15, Writings of Madison, March 31, 1792, page 480.

The deep solicitude felt by our citizens of all classes throughout the Union for the total discharge of the public debt will apologize for the earnestness with which I deem it my duty to urge this topic upon the consideration of Congress—of recommending to them again the observance of the strictest economy in the public funds.—President John Quincy Adams's message, 1827.

Free from public debt, at peace with all the world, and with no complicated interest to consult in our intercourse with foreign powers, the present may be hailed as that epoch in our history the most favorable for the settlement of those principles in our domestic policy which shall be best calculated to give stability to our Republic and secure the blessings of freedom to our citizens. Among these principles, from our past experience, it can not be doubted that simplicity in the character of the Federal Government and a rigid economy in its administration should be regarded as fundamental and sacred. All must be sensible that the existence of the public debt, by rendering taxation necessary for its extinguishment, has increased the difficulties which are inseparable from every exercise of the taxing power, and that it was, in this respect, a remote agent in producing those disturbing questions which grew out of the discussions relating to the tariff. If such has been the tendency of a debt incurred in the acquisition and maintenance of our national rights and liberties, the obligations of which all portions of the Union cheerfully acknowledged, it must be obvious that whatever is calculated to increase the burdens of government without necessity must be fatal to all our hopes of preserving its true character. While we are felicitating ourselves, therefore, upon the extinguishment of the national debt and the prosperous state of our finances let us not be tempted to depart from those sound maxims of public policy which enjoin a just adaptation of the revenue to the expenditures that are consistent with a rigid economy and an entire abstinence from all topics of legislation that are not clearly within the constitutional powers of the Government and suggested by the wants of the country. Properly regarded, under such a policy every diminution of the public burdens arising from taxation gives to individual enterprise increased power and furnishes to all the members of our happy confederacy new motives for patriotic affection and support. But, above all, its most important effect will be found in its influence upon the character of the Government by confining its action to those objects which will be sure to secure to it the attachment and support of our fellow-citizens.—Jackson's message, 1834.

If Providence permits me to meet you at another session, I shall have the high gratification of announcing to you that the national debt is extinguished. I can not refrain from expressing the pleasure I feel at the near approach of that desirable event. The short period of time within which the public debt will have been discharged is strong evidence of the abundant resources of the country and of the prudence and economy with which the Government has heretofore been administered.—President Jackson's message, 1833.

I can not too cordially congratulate Congress and my fellow-citizens on the near approach of that memorable and happy event, the extinction of the public debt of this great and free nation. Faithful to the wise and patriotic policy, marked out by the legislation of the country for this object, the present Administration has devoted to it all the means which its flourishing commerce has supplied and a prudent economy preserved for the public Treasury. Within the four years for which the people have confided the executive power to my charge, $58,000,000 will have been applied to the payment of the public debt.

The final removal of this great burden from our resources affords the means of further provision for all the objects of general welfare and public defense which the Constitution authorizes and prevents the occasion for such further reduction in the revenue as may not be required for them.—President Jackson's annual message, 1832.

It is one of the serious evils of our present system of banking that it enables one class of society—and that by no means a numerous one—by its control over the currency to act injuriously upon the interests of all the others and to exercise more than its just proportion of influence in political affairs. The agricultural, the mechanical, and the laboring classes have little or no share in the direction of the great moneyed corporations, and from their habits and the nature of their pursuits they are incapable of forming extensive combinations to act together with united force. Such concert of action may sometimes be produced in a single city or in a small district of country by means of personal communications with each other; but they have no regular or active correspondence with those who are engaged in similar pursuits in distant places; they have but little patronage to give to the press and exercise but a small share of influence over it; they have no crowd of dependents about them who hope to grow rich without labor by their countenance and favor, and who are, therefore, always ready to execute their wishes. The planter, the farmer, the mechanic, and the laborer all know that their success depends upon their own industry and economy, and that they must not expect to become suddenly rich by the fruits of their toil. Yet these classes of society form the great body of the people of the United States; they are the bone and sinew of the country; men who love liberty and desire nothing but equal rights and equal laws, and who, moreover, hold the great mass of our national wealth, although it is distributed in moderate amounts among the millions of freemen who possess it. But with overwhelming numbers and wealth on their side they are in constant danger of losing their fair influence in the Government, and with difficulty maintain their just rights against the incessant efforts daily made to encroach upon them.

The mischief springs from the power which the moneyed interest derives from a paper currency which they are able to control, from the multitude of corporations with exclusive privileges which they have succeeded in obtaining in the different States, and which are employed altogether for their benefit, and unless you become more watchful in your States, and check this spirit of monopoly and thirst for exclusive privileges you will, in the end, find that the most important powers of government have been given or bartered away and the control over your dearest interests has passed into the hands of these corporations.

The paper-money system, and its natural associates, monopoly and exclusive privileges, have already struck their roots deep in the soil; and it will require all your efforts to check its further growth and to eradicate the evil. The men who profit by the abuses and desire to perpetuate them will continue to besiege the halls of legislation in the General Government as well as in the States, and will seek, by every artifice, to mislead and deceive the public servants. It is to yourselves that you must look for safety and the means of guarding and perpetuating your free institutions. In your hands is rightfully placed the sovereignty of the country, and to you, everyone placed in authority is ultimately responsible. It is always in your power to see that the wishes of the people are carried into faithful execution, and their will, when once made known, must sooner or later be obeyed. And while the people remain, as I trust they ever will, uncorrupted and incorruptible, and continue watchful and jealous of their rights, the Government is safe, and the cause of freedom will continue to triumph over all its enemies.

But it will require steady and persevering exertions on your part to rid yourself of the iniquities and mischiefs of the paper system, and to check the spirit of monopoly and other abuses which have sprung up with it, and of which it is the main support. So many interests are united to resist all reform on this subject that you must not hope the conflict will be a short one, nor success easy. My humble efforts have not been spared during my administration of the Government, to restore the constitutional currency of gold and silver; and something, I trust, has been done toward the accomplishment of this most desirable object. But enough yet remains to require all your energy and perseverence. The power, however, is in your hands, and the remedy must and will be applied if you determine upon it.—Jackson's Farewell Address.

The creation, in time of peace, of a debt likely to become permanent, is an evil for which there is no equivalent. The rapidity with which many of the States are apparently approaching to this condition admonishes us of our own duties in a manner too impressive to be disregarded. One, not the least important, is to keep the Federal Government always in a condition to discharge with ease and vigor its highest functions, should their exercise be required by any sudden conjuncture of public affairs—a condition to which we are always exposed, and which may occur when least expected. To this end it is indispensable that its finances should be untrammeled and its resources, so far as practicable, unincumbered. No circumstance should present greater obstacles to the accomplishment of these vitally important objects than the creation of an onerous national debt. Our own experience, and also that of other nations, has demonstrated the unavoidable and fearful rapidity with which a public debt is increased when the government has once surrendered itself to the ruinous practice of supplying its supposed necessities by new loans. The struggle, therefore, on our part, to be successful, must be made at the threshold. To make our efforts effective, severe economy is necessary. This is the surest provision for the national welfare, and it is, at the same time, the best preservative of the principles on which our institutions rest. Simplicity and economy in the affairs of state have never failed to chasten and invigorate republican principles, while these have been as surely subverted by national prodigality under whatever specious pretext it may have been introduced or fostered.—Van Buren's third annual message. (Statesman's Manual, volume 2, page 1121.)

A few years ago our whole national debt growing out of the Revolution and the war of 1812 with Great Britain was extinguished, and we presented to the world the rare and noble spectacle of a great and growing people who had fully discharged every obligation. Since that time the existing debt has been contracted; and, small as it is in comparison with the similar burdens of most other nations, it should be extinguished at the earliest practicable period. Should the state of the country permit, and, especially if our foreign relations interpose no obstacle, it is contemplated to apply all the moneys in the Treasury as they accrue beyond what is required for the appropriations by Congress to its liquidation. I cherish the hope of soon being able to congratulate the country on its recovering once more the lofty position which it so recently occupied. Our country, which exhibits to the world the benefits of self-government in developing all the sources of national prosperity, owes to mankind the permanent example of a nation free from the blighting influence of a public debt.—Polk's first annual message, December 2, 1845. (Statesman's Manual, volume 4, page 1462.)

The amount of the public debt to be contracted should be limited to the lowest practicable sum, and should be extinguished as early after the conclusion of the war as the means of the Treasury will permit.

With this view it is recommended that as soon as the war shall be over all the surplus in the Treasury, not needed for other indispensable objects, shall constitute a sinking fund and be applied to the purchase of the funded debt, and that authority be conferred by law for that purpose.—Polk's third annual message, December 7, 1847. (Statesman's Manual, volume 4, page 1704.)

Besides making the necessary legislative provisions for the execution of the treaty, and the establishment of territorial governments in the ceded country, we have, upon the restoration of peace, other important duties to perform. Among these I regard none as more important than the adoption of proper measures for the speedy extinguishment of the national debt. It is against sound policy and the genius of our institutions that a public debt should be permitted a day longer than the means of the Treasury will enable the Government to pay it off. We should adhere to the wise policy laid down by President Washington, of "avoiding the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden we ourselves ought to bear."—Polk's special message, July 6, 1848. (Statesman's Manual, volume 4, page 1743.)

In my message of the 6th of July last, transmitting to Congress the ratified treaty of peace with Mexico, I recommended the adoption of measures for the speedy payment of the public debt. In reiterating that recommendation, I refer you to the considerations presented in that message in its support.

* * * * * * *

The public expenditures should be economical and be confined to such necessary objects as are clearly within the powers of Congress. All such as are not absolutely demanded should be postponed and the payment of the public debt at the earliest practicable period should be a cardinal principle of our public policy.—Polk's fourth annual message, December 5. (Statesman's Manual, volume 4, page 1774.)

The following are from Clay, Calhoun, Crawford, and Benton:

Mr. Clay said, in 1816, he would—

Lay down a general rule, from which there ought never to be a departure without absolute necessity, that the expense of the year ought to be met by the revenue of the year. If in time of war it were impossible to observe this rule we ought in time of peace to provide for as speedy a discharge of the debt contracted in the preceding war as possible.

And in 1824 he said:

The payment of that debt and the consequent liberation of the public resources from the charge of it is extremely desirable.

The moral value of the payment of a national debt consists in the demonstration which it affords of the ability of a country to meet and its integrity in fulfilling all its engagements. * * * Whoever may be entitled to the credit of the payment of the public debt, I congratulate you, sir, and the country most cordially that it is so near at hand.

I shall oppose strenuously all attempts to originate a new debt; to create a national bank; to reunite the political and money power—more dangerous than that of church and state—in any form or shape.—Calhoun on the bill for the issue of Treasury notes, United States Senate, September 18, 1837. (Abridgment Debates Congress, volume 13, page 363.)

An attentive examination of the rise and fall of public debts in other countries can not fail to impress the American Republic with the necessity of making suitable exertions in periods of peace to release the national revenue from so heavy an incumbrance.—W. H. Crawford, December 16, 1816.

What more unwise and more unjust than to contract debts on long time, as some of the States have done, thereby invading the rights and mortgaging the resources of posterity, and loading unborn generations with debts not their own? What more unwise than all this, which several of the States have done, and which the effort now is to make all do? Besides the ultimate burden, in the shape of final payment, which is intended to fall upon posterity, the present burden is incessant in the shape of annual interest, and, falling upon each generation, equals the principal in every periodical return of ten or a dozen years. Few have calculated the devouring effect of annual interest on public debts and considered how soon it exceeds the principal.—Benton's speech on assumption of State debts: Thirty Years' View, volume 2, page 173.

Mr. Jefferson, as I have shown, held that one generation had no right to bind another generation. He took the actuaries' tables of life insurance and demonstrated that the life of a generation is between nineteen and twenty years, and he held that we had no moral right to impose debts upon the generation that came after us. Every generation that succeeded had a right, he said, to the enjoyment of the earth without any incumbrance upon it. That is what he held. He demonstrated it over and over again. He condemned the increase of the public debt throughout his whole public life, beginning in 1787, and on page after page of our history he has written it, down to 1824.

Though in retirement, at 81 years of age he uttered a warning to the people of the United States to pay the little debt they had which was a danger to them. At 83 years of age, from the little Mount of Monticello, his spirit ascended to heaven. There was a man coming after him whom he did not well understand He feared General Jackson because of his military ambition. Jefferson dreaded a military chieftain. He loved the civilian. He dreaded to see Andrew Jackson come into the Presidency, and yet he did not know that that great man, like himself, was determined to extinguish the public debt of the United States, and during his Administration he paid every dollar of debt and congratulated the country upon its emancipation.

It has been the Democratic policy from the organization of the party to pay the public debt and keep the resources of the country unincumbered by debt and unnecessary taxation.

Mr. President, our people have not only talked that way, not only laid down those as essential principles of our party, but they have acted that way. Under General Washington's Administration they set apart as a sinking fund all the proceeds arising from the sale of public lands, revenue from stills, revenue from carriages and other sources, but it did not amount to a great deal. When Mr. Jefferson came into the Presidency in 1801, after having in the first year opened all the prison doors in which men were incarcerated for the free expression of their opinions about political subjects, he addressed himself to the question of emancipating the people from this devouring moral canker, as he characterized it. Under his influence Congress passed a law setting apart $7,300,000 of the revenues of the Government to be paid toward the extinction of the debt. In 1803 it was increased to $8,000,000 a year, and from 1803 to 1817 that law was enforced and $8,000,000 as a sinking fund was appropriated every year toward the extinction of the little debt which was $75,000,000 under President Washington. In 1817 it was increased to $10,000,000, and during that year over $20,000,000 was paid toward the extinction of the public debt.

These are the footprints of our Democratic fathers on the question of the payment and the extinction of the public debt. When we got out of the war and had a large debt our Republican friends acted very wisely. They went to work and established a sinking fund, and an enormous amount was paid by the generation that fought the war. There was a reduction of some twelve hundred million dollars in the principal of the debt, besides paying annually from one hundred to one hundred and fifty million dollars for interest.

That, Mr. President, was then and is now the established policy of the people of the United States—all of them.

Why is it that we are to stop now? Why is it that our sinking fund is to-day hollow when we touch the vault? It got down to two or three hundred thousand dollars, I believe, year before last, and $1,000,000, I am informed, has been paid this year. But there ought to be fifty or sixty or seventy million dollars paid annually into the sinking fund toward the extinction of the debt. Why have we stopped paying into the sinking fund and keeping up the reduction of the debt? Simply because within the last year or two the great moneyed corporations of the country have determined to make another death struggle to stop the extinction of the debt, to enlarge and perpetuate it, and to drive all rivals out of the field that they may have the power to issue all of the paper currency of the country. They are trying to control the politics of both the Republican and Democratic parties. The business men have come out, it is said. I saw last year the utterance of some of the business men. They said they had reproached themselves for not having taken a proper interest in public measures and that then, which was last year, they intended to make their influence felt in the politics of the country. It has been felt, and felt to the great injury of the people of the United States. We have reached the point when we must decide whether we will go on or turn back. Shall we go forward and pay the debt and keep our currency system, or shall we turn around, retrace our steps, and build up the debt, establish and fortify and keep an aristocracy to control the Government, and stop the vain pursuit of maintaining free institutions and transmitting them unimpaired to our children?

Mr. Jefferson said a long time ago that parties were the product of natural laws; that parties depended in a great measure upon the condition of men's minds; that the parties we have to-day were the parties that existed two or three hundred years ago. They were called Whig and Tory in Great Britain during the revolutionary times of 1688, when the great struggles were made for English liberty. They are now called the Liberal and the Conservative parties. In the organization of our Government it was Republican and Federalist. It is now Republican and Democrat. He said the proper designation of parties all the time would be Democrat on one side and Aristocrat on the other; that the principles contended for by the Liberals and the Whigs in England, the Republicans in the early day, and the Democrats of to-day were personal liberty, secured by local self-government, the creation of a national government for foreign purposes and to regulate questions at issue between the different States of the Union, but holding the great mass of powers close to the people, for the reason that they could control the administration of those powers toward securing their liberty.

We all have read the history of the great struggle which was made when the Constitution was formed and when it had no bill of rights to secure the liberties of the citizen. He wrote letter after letter from Paris to the leading citizens of the United States demanding that in that instrument before it was ratified the guarantees of personal liberty should be secured, the right of freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion, the habeas corpus as one of the chosen instruments to secure the liberty of the person, and trial by jury. All these great safeguards of our liberty he had written in that Constitution when it was ratified by the first Congress of the United States, and he lived to fight that battle and win that victory and send it down to us charging us to keep the faith, to walk in the precepts of the fathers and enjoy the blessings of free government ourselves, and like men transmit to our children that which our ancestors had transmitted to us.

What has their posterity done for them? They proclaimed that Constitution and they said it was "to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

This, Mr. President, is where I stand to-day. I will not vote for any bill that puts it out of the power of this generation to call in the debt and pay it and extinguish it. What was the character of the bills for loans that were passed by our Government in the days of the fathers? Only one went beyond twenty years, and that was in the Administration of General Washington. Go and look over the loans under Jefferson and Madison and Monroe, with this country involved in war, when Napoleon Bonaparte and all Europe was in arms and both sides fighting us on the ocean, and with war almost every moment, you will find written in loan after loan "redeemable at pleasure," sometimes redeemable after one year, sometimes after three and four years; but in the vast majority of instances they held the power in their hands to call their indebtedness and extinguish the debt at their pleasure and whenever they had the ability to do so.

Mr. Jefferson did not believe, nor did the Democrats a hundred years ago believe, that a public debt was a public blessing, or that it was anything but a public curse. Mr. Madison said it was a public curse, and worse in a republic than under any other form of government. And now we hear our President and our Secretary of the Treasury asking for bonds to be sold for gold to pour through a sieve that is to come back again and sell more bonds to get more gold to pour through the sieve and keep on. They say they want long-time bonds.

Mr. COCKRELL. Fifty-year bonds.

Mr. MILLS. Fifty-year bonds means a thousand years. That is what it means. It means bonds never to be paid. Are we providing to-day for the payment of bonds that were issued payable in 1907? Have we not stopped paying the sinking fund, stopped making any appropriation for their extinction? When they come due nobody will be prepared to pay them. The policy of the long bond is the policy of a perpetual bond. It was not the policy of our fathers. It is not the policy of the Republic. It is not in keeping with the interests of the people of the United States. It is at war with everything that we have been taught in our history from the foundation of the Government to the present time.

Mr. President, no power ought ever to rest on the pages of the statutes of a free people which would authorize a Secretary of the Treasury or any other man to sell the bonds of the Government at his pleasure. That is a most extraordinary power that our friends have put upon the statute books and guarded and kept for this purpose. Whenever such an exigency arises in the history of a people as that the ordinary means of gathering revenues can not be relied on, as when war comes, then it is the duty of the Executive to summon the Congress of the United States, that has the sole power to declare war and make provision for waging it, and say to them, "I want more money than can be obtained by taxation," and then leave it to Congress to provide for the sale of bonds.

But here in a time of profound peace we have upon the statute books of the United States authority discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury to sell $10,000,000,000 of bonds if he wants to do it, and we can not help ourselves. See how that discretion has been exercised. He sold at first $100,000,000 of ten-year bonds. He received $117,000,000 for them. He next sells $62,000,000 of thirty-year bonds and gets $104,500,000 for them. He sells the long-time bonds for less than the short-time bonds. If money was the demand of the Treasury, if the exigency was such that we could not rely upon taxation to provide the necessary revenue and we had to resort to bonds, why not sell the bonds that would bring the largest amount of money to the Treasury at that time? But it was not done.

Why is all this, Mr. President? Just as I said, there is a tremendous money power in this country and in the world, the money-owning and money-lending power, that have no longer any field for the investment of their enormous capital. They have invested it in manufactures, in railroads, and in mines, some of them in farming, and in one way and another, but now they have accumulated an immense amount of capital which it is not safe to invest except in the securities of the nation; and they are pressing here to find a safe and profitable investment for their money.

Mr. Benton said in 1841, in the Senate of the United States, that the national banking system, with the power that was behind it, was "a monster born of Hell and Chaos." If a bank with $35,000,000 capital, and with eighteen branches in the United States, was a monster born of Hell and Chaos, what is our system, with nearly $700,000,000 of capital and nearly four thousand banks all over the whole country?

I do not mean to say that all the national banks in the United States are engaged in this conspiracy. The small country banks are engaged in a legitimate banking business. It was so in the early days of the State banks. Many of them were doing business legitimately and were not striking at the heart of the State. Many of the country banks are doing the same now.

I want to read a paper from the president of one of the banks in Texas who was called upon to contribute to the loan proposed to be made in a few days:

> Patriotic duty prompts us to refuse to have anything to do with an unnecessary issue of bonds to replenish an unnecessary reserve. Our people have such confidence in the credit of the United States that they do not care whether the gold reserve is one hundred or one hundred millions of dollars.

This is from President James Garitty, of the First National Bank of Corsicana, Tex.

He is a Democrat, an honest man, and a true patriot. He knows that this is a mere pretext, piling up bonds, piling up debts, piling up interest charges, year by year upon the people in order to establish a bankocracy in the United States which will have the power to lend the credit of the United States at 7 per cent interest when the United States can furnish the money without any interest, and is doing it now.

Mr. President, we have the old controversy, fighting against all silver for its removal, for that is what it means, and retirement of the Treasury notes. A few years ago these people pretended that they were afraid that the gold standard would be expelled. They were fighting in ambush. They had masked batteries, from which they were firing. The real fact was they wanted the field of circulation. They wanted the interest to come into their pockets from lending the credit of the United States, instead of seeing the United States lending its own credit without any interest. They wanted bonds, and if the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury is carried out and you permit all the banks to issue circulation to the full extent of the face value of their bonds and to reduce the tax on their circulation to a quarter of 1 per cent, while it is now 1, I suppose all the bonds of the United States will become bases for banking.

It will be profitable then to take all of them and issue all the circulation in lieu of that now occupied by Treasury notes and silver too. Every bond of the Government can be utilized then. That is not the case now, because it is unprofitable to buy bonds worth $120,000,000 and get only $90,000,000 of circulation on them. But when they can issue the whole amount and have their taxation reduced it is possible that they may extend their circulation, and not only occupy the whole field of circulation, but occupy the field of legislation as well. It will be a tremendous power, the influence of which will be felt in the Senate and House of Representatives, in the executive department, and will sweep the Supreme Court off its feet, for the power to construe is the power to make laws. If the courts do not adhere to the Constitution as it was expounded by the fathers who made it, there is no limit that I can see to their elasticity of construction. They can construe it into a monarchy or an aristocracy if they choose.

That would be absurd, of course; but the decision they made overruling all the decisions of a hundred years on the income tax is just as absurd as if they had said that this was a hereditary Government. I care nothing for the personal opinions of this, that, or the other lawyer. Every lawyer in the United States understands that it is a rule of law when a question has once been decided and held to be decided over and over again for a great length of time that it is the duty of the courts to have it stand decided. Rights of property are acquired and held under it and to reverse it is to unsettle everything, and it is the duty of the courts to adhere to and maintain the rule as it has been pronounced and enforced for a century.

But this power is getting so great that it seems the whole Government is about to be swept off its feet. My arraignment of this power may appear ridiculous to-day. John Randolph said in 1816 that you might as well attack Gibraltar with a pocket pistol as to attack the banking system; that you might as well preach Christianity in the streets of Constantinople as to argue against the banking system then in the United States. If that was the case in his day, what must it be to-day, when there is such a tremendous power organized all over the country? But I leave it with the people. As General Jackson said in his farewell address, so I say to them, "The power is in your hands, and the remedy must and will be applied if you determine upon it."

STATUE OF MAJOR-GENERAL STARK.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. On the 9th instant I reported from the Committee on the Library the bill (S. 130) for the erection of an equestrian statue of Maj. Gen. John Stark in the city of Manchester, N. H. I find that there has been a misprint in the bill. It reads, in line 18, on page 2 of the bill, "the Joint Committee on Printing." It should read, "the Joint Committee on the Library." I desire to have the correction made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). The correction will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

FUNDS FOR COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. LODGE. I introduced yesterday an amendment which I asked to have printed, as I intended to propose it to the bill (S. 1159) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses. The amendment proposes to authorize a loan, the proceeds of the loan to be used exclusively for the purpose of seacoast defense. In printing the amendment a misprint was made, which omits the rate of interest, which was fixed in the amendment as I offered it at 3 per cent per annum. I should like to have that correction made and the amendment reprinted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. Does the Senator from Massachusetts wish to have the amendment referred?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have it referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses, as it relates to a bill which that committee has under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so referred.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills:

A bill (S. 43) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof"; and

A bill (S. 628) to provide an American register for the steamer Miami.

SILVER COINAGE AND COIN REDEMPTION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2904) to maintain and protect the coin redemption fund, and to authorize the issue of certificates of indebtedness to meet temporary deficiencies of revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance, on which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President——

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to introduce a resolution and have it read, merely giving a notice regarding the disposition of it?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

Mr. PUGH. I send to the desk a concurrent resolution, and ask that it be read.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment, in coin or its equivalent, of all interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semiannually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt"; and

Whereas at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to the nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

Mr. PUGH. The concurrent resolution I have introduced is an exact copy of what is known as the Stanley Matthews resolution, which passed both Houses of Congress in 1878 by a two-thirds vote. I ask that the concurrent resolution lie over under the rule until to-morrow morning, when I shall ask for a vote on it without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over as requested.

Mr. PUGH subsequently said: I gave notice a short time ago that to-morrow morning without debate I should ask for a vote on the resolution I introduced. Since that time I have been informed by several Senators that they will necessarially be absent and unable to attend to-morrow, and they requested me to let the resolution lie over until Monday, which I will do, and then ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. PEFFER addressed the Senate. After having spoken for more than two hours——

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Unless the Senator from Kansas is nearly through, I desire to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PEFFER. I am not nearly through; and if it suits the convenience of the Senate I should prefer to continue my remarks to-morrow, as I am getting somewhat fatigued.

[Mr. PEFFER's speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Before the Senator from New Hampshire submits a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, I hope he will yield to me, that I may make a motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado for that purpose.

ADJOURNMENT FROM THURSDAY TO MONDAY.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-morrow it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not insist on his motion. There are a good many resolutions that we want to have considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], that when the Senate adjourn to-morrow it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 16, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 15, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. CURTIS, asks to be excused from service on the Committee on Public Lands. Without objection, his request will be granted, and the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Utah, Mr. ALLEN.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS PUBLIC LANDS FOR RESERVOIR AND CANAL PURPOSES.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk. I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 3018) to amend the act approved March 3, 1891, granting the right of way upon the public lands for reservoir and canal purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1895, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use of right of way to the extent of 25 feet, together with the use of necessary ground, not exceeding 40 acres, upon the public lands and forest reservations of the United States, by any citizen or association of citizens of the United States, for the purposes of generating, manufacturing, or distributing electric power."

The SPEAKER. The question is upon granting unanimous consent.

Mr. CRISP. It is to be hoped that an explanation will be made of the bill before consent is given.

The SPEAKER. Reserving the right to object, an explanation can be made if the House desires.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is identical with the bill that was reported favorably to the House during the last Congress, but could not be taken up until late in the session. The bill has passed the Senate. The bill was drawn in the office of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It is approved and indorsed by both of them, as will be seen in the report made to the last Congress. That bill was a substitute for the Caminetti bill.

It is my opinion that this bill—should not become a law. I would recommend, however, legislation by way of amendment of the act of January 21, 1895, before mentioned, in effect as follows, viz:

The Caminetti bill—

"That the act entitled 'An act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes,' approved January 21, 1895, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use of right of way to the extent of 25 feet, together with the use of necessary ground, not exceeding 40 acres, upon the public lands and forest reservations of the United States by any citizen or association of citizens of the United States, for the purposes of generating, manufacturing, or distributing electric power."

Very respectfully, S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. McMILLIN. What amount of land do the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office recommend be given? Do they make a recommendation as to the quantum of land.

Mr. BOWERS. They do. They make this recommendation:

Permit the use of right of way to the extent of 25 feet, together with the use of necessary ground, not exceeding 40 acres.

That is all under the restrictions and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior. The existing law admits a right of way across public lands and reservations for ditches for irrigating purposes. This simply extends the right to construct that ditch for the purpose of conveying water to provide electric power across the public lands and reservations; and the bill, as I have said, if the gentleman from Tennessee will give me his attention, was drawn in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and indorsed by him to the House. There can be no objection to it. I will say that about 6,000,000 acres of land have been given, including the crest of the Sierra Nevadas, for reservations, the source of all those streams, and our people want to get water for the development of electric power for lighting towns, for machinery, and various other purposes. I hope there will be no objection to it whatever.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the bill apply only to the State of California?

Mr. BOWERS. No; it applies generally to reservations.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does it include the National Park also, with all the other reservations of the Government?

Mr. BOWERS. It applies only to reservations under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. It simply amends the law, extending the same right and giving no further right than is now possessed by ditches carrying water for irrigation.

Mr. McMILLIN. Has this bill been recommended by any committee of this House?

Mr. BOWERS. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands of this House—by the full committee.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, if my colleague on the committee will allow me, I will state that this bill does not grant or authorize the grant of any land. It only authorizes the Department to issue permits for the use of these lands for the purposes stated. It does not apply to the National Yellowstone Park, nor to military reservations, but only to lands reserved for forestry purposes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the bill provide that these grants may be revoked?

Mr. McRAE. The bill makes no grant.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, these privileges.

Mr. McRAE. They are issued by and are all under control of the Secretary of the Interior. The bill makes no grant and vests no title to any lands.

Mr. McMILLIN. I observe that the matter is under the control of the Secretary so far as giving permission is concerned, but does the bill provide that he may revoke a permit if it should be abused or if it should become to the interest of the Government to have it revoked?

Mr. McRAE. He has the power to do that. But, Mr. Speaker, what I rose to say was that this bill does not make any grant or authorize the making of any grant, and that no person under it can acquire title to any land. No person can get anything but a permit to use for the purpose indicated in the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I was anxious, Mr. Speaker, to see that there should not be granted any privileges which would be beyond the control of the Government. I think that the interests of those who are to receive benefits from this action indirectly demand that the power of revocation should exist somewhere, so that privileges given to corporations furnishing light or power shall not be abused. I am glad to learn that that is provided for.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BOWERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1) granting a pension to Mrs. Eva Davis Cogswell, widow of Brig. Gen. William Cogswell; and

A bill (S. 941) granting to the Atchison and Nebraska Railroad Company and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, its lessee in perpetuity, the right of way over a part of the Sac and Fox and Iowa Indian Reservation in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—CHESEBROUGH VS. M'CLELLAN.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Elections to present to the House its report in the contested-election case of Robert A. Chesebrough vs. George B. McClellan, Twelfth Congressional district of the State of New York, and to ask for the present consideration of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Elections No. 2 to whom was referred the contested election case of Robert A. Chesebrough against George B. McClellan, from the Twelfth Congressional district of the State of New York, respectfully report to the House that they have duly considered said case, and find the facts therein to be as follows:

The contestant was the Republican candidate and the contestee was the Democratic candidate for Representative to the Fifty-fourth Congress from said district at the regular election held therein on the 6th day of November, 1894; that at a meeting of the State board of canvassers of the State of New York, held at the city of Albany on the 14th day of December following, contestee was declared the legally elected Representative from the district, and that thereafter the secretary of state of New York duly issued to him a certificate of his election, all in conformity to the laws of the State; that afterwards, such certificate having been transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, his name was, by that official, placed upon its roll, and he now occupies the seat in the House; that after the election of contestee had been so declared, and within the time prescribed by statute, the contestant served upon him notice of contest of said election, alleging as grounds for contest the casting of illegal votes thereat, and that during the political canvass which preceded the election contestee had instigated the Metropolitan Association of Cycling Clubs to issue and distribute among the electors of the district a circular which falsely charged him with having opposed the passage of a law in the State of New York which granted to cyclists equal rights with the users of all other kinds of vehicles in the public highways in the city and State of New York and in the public parks of said city, and which falsely charged that he had signed a petition opposing the passage of said law; that in this circular the users of cycles in said district and their friends were called upon to vote for contestee and against contestant, and that, because of and influenced by the false statements contained in this circular, many electors in said district who were cyclers were prejudiced against him and induced to vote for contestee who would but for such false charges have cast their ballots for him; that after the serving of said notice upon the contestee, and within the time fixed by law, the contestee served upon contestant his answer to the notice of contest, in which he denied the casting or counting of any illegal votes at such election, and also denied that he had instigated the issuing or circulation of a circular containing false charges against contestant, or that he had falsely charged him with having signed a petition against the passage of said law, or that such circular had advised cyclers and their friends to vote for him, but, in said answer, he alleged it to be the fact that in May, 1887, the contestant had signed his name to a petition protesting against the passage of a bill by the legislature of the State of New York commonly known as the "wheelman's liberty bill," which bill subsequently passed the legislature and became a law on the 27th day of June, 1887; that after the serving of the notice of contest, the contestant addressed a letter to the contestee in which he stated that he had observed that contestee had been quoted in a newspaper as saying that a petition signed by contestant remonstrating against the passage of the "wheelman's liberty bill" was in existence, and in which letter he further declared that if the contestee could procure and exhibit to him without delay such a petition he would agree to withdraw from his contest of the election, notwithstanding he had been advised that he could maintain a successful contest upon the other grounds set forth in his notice. In this letter he also informed the contestee that before serving notice of contest upon him he had made unsuccessful inquiry for such a petition as he had been alleged to have signed of parties claimed to have knowledge or possession of the same, and that he had also demanded of the authors of said circular the evidence of his having signed such a petition, and that he had been informed by them that they had no personal knowledge of the existence of such evidence, but had signed such circular upon the statements and at the request of others, and that, believing that a wrong had been done him by the wheelmen in the interest of contestee, and having been unable to obtain any evidence of his having ever signed such a petition, he had instituted the contest.

And your committee further show that, after the delivery of the said letter, the parties to this contest had a personal interview at the place of business of the contestant; that thereafter the latter addressed to the contestee a letter in which, after making reference to the conversation which had occurred between them at such interview, and admitting that the contestee had then and there exhibited to him a certain petition against the use by bicyclers of the driveways in Central Park, in the city of New York, signed by contestant and 100 other persons, nearly eight years before, notified contestee that he withdrew entirely from his contest of the election to Congress from said Twelfth Congressional district, and requested him to return to him the notice of contest previously served upon him in the case; that in this letter contestant declared that he was unable to recall the circumstances under which he had signed his name to said petition, and that he could not admit that the signing of the same by him justified the vindictive attack made upon him by the wheelmen.

Your committee still further show that afterwards, to wit, on the 26th day of February, 1895, the notice of contest and answer in said cause were filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, together with the affidavit of contestee; that no testimony had been taken in the case; that the said letters addressed as aforesaid to the contestee by contestant were before your committee while they were considering the case; and that the contestant has never appeared before your committee, either in person or by attorney, and that no testimony has, as the committee is informed and believes, ever been taken by either of the parties to the case, but that the contestant has in good faith withdrawn from his contest.

In view of the matters and facts hereinbefore recited, your committee do recommend to the House the adoption of the following resolution, to wit:

"Resolved, That Robert A. Chesebrough was not elected a Representative from the Twelfth Congressional district of the State of New York to the Fifty-fourth Congress, and is not entitled to the seat.

"Resolved, That George B. McClellan was duly elected a Representative from the Twelfth Congressional district of the State of New York to the Fifty-fourth Congress, and that he is entitled to the seat."

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolutions reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again read the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Robert A. Chesebrough was not elected a Representative from the Twelfth Congressional district of the State of New York to the Fifty-fourth Congress, and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That George B. McClellan was duly elected a Representative from the Twelfth Congressional district of the State of New York to the Fifty-fourth Congress, and that he is entitled to the seat.

The resolutions were adopted unanimously.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted was laid on the table.

FORFEITURE OF LAND GRANTS.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, there is on the Speaker's table a Senate bill (S. 43) precisely similar in character to one reported this morning from the House Committee on Public Lands, and I ask that it remain for the present on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose?

Mr. ELLIS. In order that I may call it up later. It is similar to a bill which has just been reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 43, now on the Speaker's table——

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I believe I will ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof," approved December 12, 1893, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That section 3 of an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof, be, and the same is, amended so as to extend the time within which persons entitled to purchase lands forfeited by said act shall be permitted to purchase the same, in the quantities and upon the terms provided in said section, at any time prior to January 1, 1897: Provided, That actual residence upon the lands by persons claiming the right to purchase the same shall not be required where such lands have been fenced, cultivated, or otherwise improved by such claimants, and such persons shall be permitted to purchase two or more tracts of such lands by legal subdivisions, whether contiguous or not, but not exceeding 320 acres in the aggregate."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just read?

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think it is proper that the gentleman from Oregon should make some explanation of this bill.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which was passed during the closing hours of the last Congress, but it did not get to the Senate until the 2d or 3d day of March, and it met the fate of some forty-five or fifty other bills which did not reach the President in time to be considered by him.

This bill does not enlarge the rights of settlers in any way. The first ruling of the Department when the settlers first went upon these lands was that those who had settled upon the forfeited railroad lands should have the right to purchase not exceeding 320 acres, without regard to the question whether the lands lay contiguous or not. Therefore some persons, wanting to get a water privilege, selected small tracts of land down in the canyon, where land would be comparatively worthless for tillage, and took the remainder of their tracts upon the plateau, on which, during favorable seasons, they could raise something of a crop. By a subsequent ruling of the Department of the Interior it was held that settlers must reside upon the land and that the different portions of the tract purchased must lie contiguous. Under this ruling persons who had segregated their selections in the manner I have just stated in order to get a water privilege were denied the opportunity to receive the maximum amount of land allowed under the law as originally passed.

Now, during the closing hours of the last Congress an act was passed granting to such persons the right to make up the quantity of land they had thus lost; but that bill did not get through the Senate in time to reach the President and secure his signature. The present bill has been unanimously passed in this Congress by the Senate and has received a unanimous report in its favor from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Has this bill been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. ELLIS. It has been recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in a long letter, which is embodied in the report of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does this bill extend the time for the completion of purchases?

Mr. ELLIS. No, sir; it makes no extension whatever.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It grants nothing beyond what was granted by the bill passed in the last Congress?

Mr. ELLIS. None whatever.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What amount of land is involved?

Mr. ELLIS. The bill does not increase in any respect the rights of the settlers; they will not be able under this bill to purchase any greater amount of land than they could under the original law.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But what is the amount of land involved?

Mr. ELLIS. The maximum which can be obtained by any person is 320 acres, where a contract to that extent was made with the railroad company prior to the ruling of the Department.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman does not understand my question. I mean to ask what is the aggregate amount of land which will be affected by this legislation—not the amount which any one individual may purchase?

Mr. ELLIS. I am unable to answer the gentleman accurately on that point. For a considerable portion of the land purchased patents were obtained. This bill will not affect probably more than one-fourth of the amount covered by the original grant.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ELLIS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. LACEY. I suggest that the House bill of similar purport to the Senate bill just passed be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAMER MIAMI.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 628, which is identical in language with House bill No. 1713, which the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries have unanimously reported with a favorable recommendation.

The bill (S. 628) to provide an American register for the steamer Miami was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamer Nerito, owned by Charles W. Hogan, a citizen of the United States, to be registered as a vessel of the United States under the name of Miami.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause the inspection of said vessel, steam boilers, steam pipes, and their appurtenances, and cause to be granted the usual certificate issued to steam vessels of the merchant marine without reference to the fact that said steam boilers, steam pipes, and appurtenances were not constructed pursuant to the laws of the United States, and were not constructed of iron stamped pursuant to said laws; and the tests in the inspection of said boilers, steam pipes, and appurtenances shall be the same in all respects as to strength and safety as are required in the inspection of boilers constructed in the United States for marine purposes.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the House committee be read for information.

There being no objection, the report of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries (by Mr. PAYNE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1713) entitled "A bill to provide an American register for the steamer Miami," having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

It appears from the evidence before the committee that the owner of the vessel in question is an American citizen; that in September, 1894, while bearing the name of Nerito and sailing under British ownership, the vessel was wrecked off Sable Island, Nova Scotia, where she lay on the sand, high inshore, and abandoned by her owners for ten months; that after several expeditions had been sent out by the Merritt Wrecking Company to save her, she was finally floated, brought to New York, and sold as a wreck by the agent of the foreign underwriters to the present owner, named in the bill, for the sum of $10,229.28; that the contract between the present owner and the John N. Robbins Company, American shipbuilders, provides for repairs to the amount of $36,450, which were, by the terms of the contract, to be completed on or before January 15, 1896, and which, your committee are informed, are completed already; that this amount is in excess of the amount required by section 4136 of the Revised Statutes, viz, more than equal to three-fourths of the cost of the vessel when so repaired.

The only bar to the registry of this vessel under the general law is the fact that she was wrecked outside and not inside the waters of the United States.

The committee is of the opinion that the case comes within the spirit of the law, and that the bill ought to pass.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, House bill No. 1713, similar in its provisions to the Senate bill just passed, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] being absent, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] will occupy the chair in Committee of the Whole.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. DINGLEY in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3537) making appropriation for payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] is recognized.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to send to the desk and have read for the information of the House an amendment which I propose to offer to the pending bill at the proper time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill on page 3, in line 5, after the words "per annum," by adding the following:

"Provided further, That widows of pensioners under the general law shall be allowed $12 per month, notwithstanding the evidence may show that the husband died of diseases not contracted in the service, and for which he was pensioned."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to have this read simply as part of his remarks, because it would not be in order to offer it as an amendment to the bill at the present time?

Mr. MORSE. I do, sir. I desire to offer it and have it read as a part of my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I will ask the House to indulge me for a few moments in some remarks leading up to this amendment and argue the necessity for its adoption, and also some remarks upon the attitude of this Government with reference to the Armenian outrages.

First, I desire most heartily to indorse the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] on Monday and supported by that gentleman with an eloquent defense.

There are not far from 900,000 soldiers and soldiers' widows on the pension roll of the country. That security in possession of this bounty of the Government, granted them by a generous nation, whose life they helped to save, which is necessary to peace of mind, security, and comfort in its possession, is denied them by the present Commissioner of Pensions.

I think it is safe to say that scarcely one of the 900,000 soldiers and soldiers' widows whose names are borne upon the pension roll of the country but what is in constant fear that their pension will be reduced or stopped altogether. And they have good ground for solicitude and fear, because hundreds and thousands of such worthy pensioners have either had their pension reduced or taken away altogether by the unwarranted, and I believe illegal and unjust, conduct of the Pension Bureau as now administered.

I think, in view of all that has been said upon this floor during this debate, I am justified in saying that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions have overridden the acts of Congress and have assumed legislative as well as judicial functions.

There are a number of instances of men 80 years of age who have had their pensions reduced or discontinued on the ground that they were not incapacitated from manual labor in a pensionable degree.

It has been held by the present Commissioner that a man who lost an eye or who was deaf in one ear was not pensionable under the act of June 27, 1890, such soldiers not being incapacitated from manual labor under that law.

Could there be anything more foreign to the spirit and letter of the law, or the intention of the Fifty-first Congress, which passed this act, than these illustrations which I have mentioned.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the thermometer is 20° below zero over at the Pension Bureau for Union soldiers and loyal men.

Mr. Chairman, I denounce the use of the post-office officials as spies upon the pensioners. [Applause.] I go further than that, and I denounce the present general spy system as a whole, under the name of "pension examiners," as conducted at present by the Pension Bureau. I have somehow got the notion that these "examiners" believe that their continuance in their position is dependent upon their ability to find pretexts to take away the little stipends the soldiers are receiving from the Government.

In some instances that have come under my knowledge, the pensioner is approached by these examiners in the guise of a friend. The old soldier puts his best foot forward, he makes the best possible showing of his circumstances and his worldly condition to his new-found friend, and this information obtained in this way is used against him to reduce his pension or to take it away altogether.

Mr. KIEFER. That is un-American, too.

Mr. MORSE. Yes; as my friend says, it is an un-American policy.

It was never the intention of Congress, and is not the wish of the people of our country, that the pension laws should be administered in such a narrow, niggardly, contemptible manner; but it was the intention of Congress and the people who sent us here to legislate that these laws should have a liberal construction, and that the defender of his country and his country's flag, in his declining years, should be given the benefit of a liberal construction and a generous application of these laws.

As a justification of the conduct of the Pension Bureau, wholesale charges of fraud and dishonesty have been made against the Union soldiers by the highest officers of this Government, including the President of the United States, and when we demand specifications, and that they should tell us when and where these frauds have been committed, they are not forthcoming, and at any rate the number is insignificant and unimportant as compared to the whole number of pensioners borne upon the rolls.

I throw these charges back to the men who make them, and I say that the Union soldiers who periled their all that the country might live, and who took their lives in their hands to save us, a nation among the nations of the earth, are honorable, honest, and truthful men, and that these charges of fraud and dishonesty are unjust and untrue, and are a vile slander upon the brave defenders of the Union.

And now I come to the amendment which I have offered, and I offer this amendment to meet another unfair and unjust ruling of the Pension Bureau.

The motto of the Pension Bureau seems to be "how not to do it." Every possible pretext is used to delay action. The applicant is sent back again and again for "more evidence," and not infrequently the poor fellow gives up in despair and says, "It is no use; I can't get a pension."

Not infrequently during this Administration has the poor soldier been driven to suicide by the obstacles thrown in his way, by the reduction of his pension, or by the taking it away altogether. I know of a case of a man over 80 years old who had his pension stopped by the present Commissioner of Pensions who died within thirty days of a broken heart. He never spoke one pleasant word after his pension was stopped. Do you suppose, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, that Congress ever contemplated any such administration as this of the Pension Bureau or any such construction of the pension laws as this?

I come now, I say, to speak of my amendment. In the line of the general policy of the present administration of the office, it is the practice in all cases of soldiers' widows whose husbands were pensioners under the old law, and who are entitled to $12 per month in all cases where the attending physician fails to certify that death resulted from the disease or wound for which the soldier was pensioned—I say where the physician certifies some other cause of death the Pension Bureau assumes that the pension was fraudulent and the widow is not entitled to a pension under the old law.

Could there be anything more outrageous than this? If a soldier is pensioned for heart failure and dies of pneumonia he is a fraud. If he is pensioned for rheumatism or hernia and dies of consumption he is a fraud.

The Apostle Paul undoubtedly did not know as much about the relations of the different organs of the body as the present Commissioner of Pensions, but he knew enough by way of illustration to say "that when one member suffers all suffer."

And who is authorized to say that the pensionable disease or disability did not cause or aggravate the other disease which caused the soldier's death? The physician is not infallible; he may have made a mistake as to the cause of death.

True, the widow may apply for a pension under the disability act now, but she gets $8 instead of $12. It cheered the old soldier when he was dying to think that his wife and loved ones would have $12 per month when he was gone, and this trick by which the Pension Bureau would beat her out of $4 per month did not occur to him.

Such unfair, unjust treatment of the soldier's widow is unworthy of a great and generous Government like ours.

But I bid my comrades to be of good cheer; "weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Cheer up, comrades; cheer up, soldiers' widows; there are only four hundred and fourteen days more of Grover Cleveland, Hoke Smith, and William Lochren, when the places that knew them will know them no more, and when the Republicans will have control of every Department of this Government, and when the pension laws will be administered in an honest, liberal, and generous manner.

Once more I say, Comrades, be of good cheer.

I feel like singing the Doxology, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," over the fact that this unpatriotic Administration is drawing to a close.

Mr. SULLOWAY. And I would like to sing Watts's hymn:

Believing, we rejoice
To see the curse removed.

[Laughter.]

Mr. MORSE. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that we may all rejoice that this unpatriotic Administration is drawing to a close, this bond-issuing, debt-increasing, factory-closing, wage-reducing, prosperity-killing Democratic Administration. [Laughter and applause.]

A MEMBER. And you might add in that connection this queen-restoring Administration.

Mr. MORSE. Yes; queen-restoring Administration, as my friend suggests, and a profligate heathen queen at that, that President Cleveland proposed to restore to the throne of the Sandwich Islands after she had threatened to kill and behead all of the Christian white inhabitants on the island and confiscate their property.

Like Belshazzar of old, it has seen the handwriting on the wall over against the candlestick, on the plaster of the King's palace; and it reads, "Thou art weighed in the balances and thou art found wanting."

There is every indication that the solid South is broken. West Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Kentucky, Tennessee are already in the Republican columns, and I think we can safely add several other Southern States next year.

The shibboleth "Do you want your sister to marry a nigger?" has lost its force. Mr. Chairman, there is no argument like the bread and butter and business argument. Under the Republican policy of protection the Southern products commanded good prices and the South shared the prosperity of the country.

This condition has been reversed under the present Administration.

Mr. Chairman, to digress from the subject of the pension bill for a few moments. I am sure that the country and the world is appalled at the supineness of the Administration on the subject of the Armenian butchery and outrages.

On yesterday I introduced in the House of Representatives the following resolution on the subject, which was read from the Clerk's desk and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the chairman has advised me that his committee is likely to take some action shortly in the matter:

Whereas the most mournful tragedy of the nineteenth century has been and is now being enacted, under the apparent sanction of the Sultan of Turkey, by which hundreds of thousands of Armenians are being ruthlessly slaughtered in cold blood, women are being driven into a captivity worse than death, and inhabitants who have fled to the mountains are dying of cold and starvation;

Whereas the blood of these martyred dead cry to Heaven for justice:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs consider the expediency of reporting forthwith some expression by this Government in denunciation of these atrocities, and if they find we, as a nation, are powerless to act, that we invoke the cooperation of the allied powers to wipe the Turkish Government off the face of the earth and secure the freedom and independence of Armenia.

Congress and the country, I am sure, have been expecting some special message to Congress from the President upon this tremendous subject. The President sent us a message on the Venezuela boundary dispute, a comparatively trivial and unimportant matter, and I think the House voted a commission, which is now in session, and I think made the mistake of acting upon his recommendation too hastily and without due consideration as to whether there had been any violation of the Monroe doctrine.

But be that as it may, I have been pained and disappointed that we have not had some official utterance from the Administration, at least in denunciation, if nothing more, of this awful, appalling crime of the nineteenth century. The cry of these distressed people appears to be unheard by mortal ear that will help, and is heard only by the pitying ear of Heaven.

And this morning's paper brings the intelligence, through the Turkish minister, that the Sultan's Government will not allow the Red Cross Society to enter his dominion to distribute the charity of our countrymen, to succor the starving, the wounded, and confirming the general belief that the present massacres are a part of a systematic plan on the part of the Turkish Government to exterminate all the Christians in that Empire.

Oh, for a month of Ben Harrison and James G. Blaine. [Applause.]

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I desire to read, as bearing upon this subject, some letters, among many, received in my mail this morning.

ROCKFORD, ILL., January 14, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: May God bless you and yours for the resolution which you introduced in the House on yesterday regarding the Armenian question.

Your scheme has the right ring to it, and I sincerely hope it may go through without delay.

Respectfully, yours, A. W. BANKS.

Hon. ELIJAH A. MORSE, House of Representatives.

SALEM, MASS., January 14, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: I wish to thank you for introducing in the House the resolution in regard to the poor outraged Armenians.

God and humanity will highly esteem the action you have taken to help this unfortunate class of people, which is of far greater importance than questionable boundary lines.

I have Armenians in my employ, and the heartbreaking letters they are receiving from dear ones at home is enough to arouse this Government to take a hand in wiping the Turkish Government off the face of the earth.

Thousands doubtless are to-night praying to God to give you power to move this Government, that some dear one in that wicked country may be spared to them.

Very sincerely, yours, JONATHAN BROWN.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., January 14, 1896.

DEAR SIR: I wish to thank you warmly for the resolution introduced by you in the House and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with reference to the barbarities perpetrated in Armenia by the abominable and "unspeakable" Turk.

Every word of your resolution went to my heart, and I trust that you will not allow it to sleep in the committee room.

I have been wondering if our Government would not do something, and if it can not actively interfere, let it at least give such expression as your resolution calls for.

I especially like your invocation to the allied powers to wipe this hellish travesty on government, the Turkish Empire, from the face of the earth. May we live to see Armenia independent and autonomous.

Again I thank you.

Respectfully, yours, G. E. STROBRIDGE,
Pastor Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church.

Hon. ELIJAH A. MORSE.
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

BOSTON, MASS., January 14, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Although a most humble citizen of this Commonwealth and one whose opinions may not, therefore, carry much weight, I desire to express my unqualified approval of the preamble and resolution offered by you yesterday, and would take this occasion to thank you for the clear-cut phraseology and positive purpose, which delighted my soul within me.

I have the honor to be your most humble servant.

GEORGE HOWARD STREET.

Hon. ELIJAH A. MORSE.

DOVER, DEL., January 14, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: I notice your resolutions asking that if the Foreign Affairs Committee deem it inexpedient to act in resentment of Turkey's wholesale butchery of Armenians that the powers of the Christian world should unite and exterminate in toto the Turkish Empire. And this is the feeling prevailing throughout Christendom—the feeling of millions of bleeding hearts for these whose oppression and sufferings have never been excelled in all the brutality of history. I am glad to see your stand.

Very respectfully,

HENRY CLAY COLLISON.

Hon. ELIJAH A. MORSE,
House of Representatives.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED AT MASS MEETING IN HADDONFIELD, N. J., JANUARY 15, 1896.

Whereas the Government of the Sultan of Turkey has systematically deprived the Armenian people of its inalienable rights, including those of life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness;

Whereas he has refused to carry out his oft-repeated promises to reform said evils, but has rather increased them by giving his assent for quartering large bodies of troops among them; for protecting these troops by a mock trial from punishment for any murders which they should commit; for cutting off the trade of Armenia with all parts of the world; for imposing taxes on them without their consent; for transporting them to different places to be tried for pretended offenses;

Whereas the Sultan has practically abdicated government in Armenia by declaring the Armenians out of his protection and waging war against them;

Whereas he has plundered their country, burned their towns, and destroyed the lives of their people;

Whereas he is at this time transporting large armies of mercenaries to complete the works of death, desolation, and tyranny already begun, with circumstances of cruelty and perfidy not paralleled in the most barbarous ages and totally unworthy the head of a civilized nation;

Whereas he has brought into their country the merciless Kurdish savages, whose known rule of warfare is an indiscriminating destruction of all ages, sexes, and conditions; and

Whereas in every stage of these oppressions the Armenian people have petitioned for redress in the most humble terms, but their petitions have been answered only by repeated injury; and a prince whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a tyrant is unfit to be the ruler of a people;

Whereas the representative of the Imperial Government of Turkey at Washington has officially notified our Government that it will not permit any distribution among its subjects, in its own territory, by any foreign society or individuals, however respectable the same may be (as, for instance, the Red Cross Society), of moneys collected abroad: Therefore

Resolved, That we, citizens of Haddonfield, N. J., in mass meeting assembled, solemnly declare that, in our opinion, the Sultan of Turkey has forfeited all right to rule over the Armenian people; that we respectfully urge our Government to make every possible effort to induce the governments of Christendom to rouse themselves from their apathy and put an end to this intolerable state of affairs which threatens with extermination thousands upon thousands of innocent fellow-Christians; that we urge upon our Government, also, to do everything in its power to preserve the fruits of American missionary toil; that we express our ardent sympathy with the unutterable suffering of this persecuted race; that we call upon all the peoples of Christendom to insist that these unutterable sufferings shall cease, and that we heartily indorse the resolutions introduced by Senator HOAR in the United States Senate and by Representative MORSE in the House of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, Patrick Henry, of Virginia, said in his immortal speech: "Why stand we idle?" The country and the world is crying out for some action or expression on the part of this Government in denunciation of this monstrous crime of the nineteenth century. We can at least denounce the Turkish Government and the outrages and express our sympathy for the poor suffering Armenians. That, Mr. Chairman, is all I desired to say on the question at this time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I avail myself of the courtesy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania because I fear that some remarks made on this side of the House may have created a false impression as to the attitude toward this bill of the Democratic party of the Empire State and Empire City, part of which I have the honor to represent in this House. I have not had sufficient experience in dealing with the Pension Bureau to say whether the attacks made on its administration can be justified, nor do I deem this a material consideration upon the subject before us. The plain question seems to be whether we shall make it easier or more difficult for those who are entitled to pensions to get them. There can be no just cause of complaint at the limitation prescribed in this bill in the case of a widow of a soldier who has a net income of $500, because the additional pittance this Government allows would not inspire her with an exalted idea of this Government's generosity, and would add but little to the store with which she had been favored by fortune. But to compel a widow of a soldier to show that she has no other means of support than her daily labor before she is entitled to a pension is extending the limitation to a parsimonious degree, nor can the consideration as to whether a pension is or is not a vested right have much to do with the question; the Supreme Court of the United States has said that it was in the nature of a reward or bounty. But the spirit which underlies our pension law, the sentiment which is at the foundation of the law which gives preference to veterans in our civil service, the gratitude which dictates like provisions in many States of the Union extends to individuals, and the patriotic and generous neighbor, the overworked and overburdened son, the daughter who has sacrificed many social advantages, or the life savings of a venerable father may check the conscience of the widow who would apply under the act of 1890 and prevent her from swearing that she had no other means of support than her daily labor.

My friends, the men who went to the front for the Union suffered greatly, but they did not suffer alone. What moment of our lives is spent where the sympathy of woman does not find us? We live in it, we are moved by it; and, though we think we are the masters, we are subject to it. Who can say to-day that the gentle spirit we debate about pensioning did not inspire the patriotism that met its untimely end on the battlefield? Ah, men of the South, if I have read your history right, you have not been and you are not now strangers to this sublime influence.

Our women did not feel the warm bullets whizzing to their vitals, but they felt the pangs. They shuddered not at the chill steel which was to warm itself in our hearts' blood, but they washed the sword with their tears. They felt not the deadening tramp of the ruthless cavalry at Gettysburg, but they lived a death at the very recital of the details of that awful battle, and they tell the story of all these things to inspire a new generation with the patriotism of the old. Honor the men of North and South; honor the pure, devoted, sympathetic women of North and South; bless them for their sufferings, their fortitude, their patience, their sweet charity.

Let us assuage as far as possible their present sufferings.

Let our approval of this bill for their relief be emphatic.

I appeal to all in this side of the House to vote for this bill, and to my friends of the South, whose chivalry was never appealed to in vain, I especially appeal to help, by passing this bill, the surviving widows and orphans of those who met you in noble, honorable battle. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCCALL] is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I was delighted yesterday afternoon with the speech of my friend from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS]. We had been engaged for two days in the discussion of pension matters, and no voice had come from the Democratic side in support of pensioners or in condemnation of the present administration of the Pension Department. So his speech was like an oasis in the desert. It reminded us that there is yet hope that this great country, without regard to party, may reach the day when we can join hands and say truthfully together that we are all in favor of honest, liberal, just, pension laws, and the proper administration thereof. I should perhaps have said nothing, being content with voting upon this measure, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] gives notice that he will introduce an amendment which he thinks is a remedy for the ills we have. As a Republican, as a friend of the pensioner, I beg to differ from my friend upon that question, and as to the propriety of his proposed amendment. I ask the attention of this committee while I submit my objections to the amendment. I do not question the motives that inspire it. They are pure; but in my opinion the result will be disastrous, if the administration of the judicial department of this Government is in unison with the administration of the Pension Department, for it places in the hands of the United States marshals and district attorneys of this country the power to cut off many pensions and pensioners from the bounty of the Government.

These men can be notified by process issued from the Federal courts to appear at a term of court that is held perhaps 100, 150, or 200 miles from their homes. They are poor people. It will cost more to make the trip and employ lawyers to defend their cases than a year's pension amounts to. It is absolutely impossible for them to go. What would be the result? An order pro confesso will be taken against them because they fail to appear to make the defense, and they will be dropped from the rolls and their pensions cease because they have not the means to go into a lawsuit with the Government about their right to draw pensions.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. GRAFF. Can not the district attorney at the present time, under the general jurisdiction of the Federal courts, have indictments found against pensioners for having obtained the same by fraud in the same manner that he could under this amendment, and has not this been done? And is it not true that during the past year all they could find on which there could be any hope of obtaining a verdict of guilty was about 300 cases, with the assistance of the Commissioner back of them, sending information and letters to these district attorneys? And is it not true that out of that 300, in a total of some 12,000 criminal cases that were brought before the Federal courts, there were only about 110 that were guilty, and of the 110 not more than half were pensioners who had fraudulently obtained pensions?

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. What my friend says has some force; but when he remembers that there have been 103,000 cases dropped from the pension rolls or refused in this last fiscal year, he may begin to appreciate the fact that if you give this power to the Federal courts of the country, all this machinery will be transferred to their hands, and instead of having the number of cases that there were last year in the courts, the number will go up by the fifties and hundreds, and these men will be dropped, not because they are not entitled to pensions, but because they are unable to go to court and enter their defense. Orders will be taken against them pro confesso, and they will thereby admit upon the face of the record that what has been charged in the indictment or declaration of the district attorneys in the several cases is true, whereas it may be false in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred.

Mr. GRAFF. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I do not wish it to be taken out of my time. Your questions are rather long.

Mr. GRAFF. This is a short question. I desire to ask him whether, in this amendment that I have offered as to the power of the district and circuit Federal courts to try pensioners under indictment, there is any new power given by my amendment that is not in the law?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. No, sir; but it transfers the entire detective agency of the Interior Department to the hands of the judicial department. It not only transfers the great swarm of detectives that is going up and down throughout the length and breadth of the land, nosing into every old soldier's condition in life and that of his widow, but adds thereto the United States marshals, and thus intimidates the people of the country. I am in favor of such legislation as will afford to the pensioners, when their pensions are once passed upon and allowed, security therein, and not to be disturbed again without grave consideration. Notwithstanding my disapproval of the action of the Commissioner, yet I believe that the proposed plan is dangerous, and that we had better stick "to the ills we have than fly to those we know not of."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I said that I should not perhaps have addressed myself to this question except for some mail I received yesterday. I have here a case in which I have taken some interest. It is the case of Mrs. Neely, of Tennessee, the widow of a brave soldier who died four years ago; and that widow has been striving for four long years to have her name placed upon the pension rolls to draw pension as the widow of that deceased soldier. I have written to the Department and I have been to the Department in regard to this claimant, and I have here the last letter that I wrote to the Department.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1896.

DEAR SIR: In answer to an inquiry from me in regard to the claim of Mrs. Rachel H. Neely for widow pension No. 543944, as widow of John B. Neely, late Company B, First West Tennessee Regiment, I had the honor to receive from you in reply that three things were necessary to complete the claim—

After four years he says there are three things yet necessary—namely, certified copy of record of marriage, affidavit from her stating that she did not apply for pension prior to February 2, 1892, and affidavit showing that Oscar J. M. was the only child of soldier and widow under 16 years of age at soldier's death. I send herewith the required copy and affidavits, and trust they will complete the file.

This lady is a most deserving one and is greatly in need of assistance. Her husband's estate was almost if not quite insolvent, and she has had very little to go on, and now that little is gone. Her claim has been waiting since 1892, and if at all consistent with your rules I should esteem it a personal favor if you will settle it at the earliest possible moment. I know all the facts in the case and know she is entitled to the pension, whether her proof comes up to the strict requirement of the law or not.

Very truly, JNO. E. McCALL.

Hon. WM. LOCHREN,
Commissioner of Pensions, City.

Now, here is the reply I received yesterday:

[Southern Div. J. C. B., Ex'r. No. 543944. Widow John B. Neely, Co. B, 1st Reg't W. Tenn. Inf.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1896.

SIR: In response to your personal inquiry of recent date for information as to the status of widow's claim for pension above cited, you are advised that it awaits replies to letters of inquiry addressed by this Bureau to parties supposed to have personal knowledge of facts touching the merits of the claim.

Upon receipt of the same the claim will receive further attention.

Very respectfully,
WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN E. McCALL,
House of Representatives, City.

Mr. MORSE. They will not be received before resurrection day.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. In the name of all that is good and holy, I ask how long, and what else will be required? He told me plainly there were but three things necessary, to wit, a certified copy of the marriage, an affidavit from her stating that she had not applied for pension prior to February 12, 1892, and an affidavit showing that Oscar J. M. was the only child of the soldier under 16 years of age. I furnished these, and yet he says his agency is at work, that is, parties have been written to who are supposed to know facts material to the investigation, and when these are heard from he will let me know. The poor old widow will have crossed the silent stream probably, as the gentleman here remarks, before they are heard from in that regard.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one other matter. I hold here in my hand a statement from a friend from Missouri. Listen to this case. It out-Herods Herod, if I may be permitted that expression. Here is the case of Mrs. Elizabeth Sanders, of Berryman, Mo., whose husband was shot through seven times during the war. He died, of course. His widow applied for a pension. These spies were sent out by the Department. One of them went to this widow's home. He was there for dinner, and during the forenoon she slipped out to her neighbors and borrowed enough stuff to give the man a decent dinner, and she set him down to a decent dinner obtained from her neighbors. That man reported the fact that that woman had set him down to an excellent dinner, as an evidence of her ability to gain a livelihood. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Where does she live?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. At Berryman, Mo.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In whose district?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I do not know.

Mr. PICKLER. Have you the name of that agent?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I have not.

Mr. PICKLER. We ought to have the name, and I hope the gentleman will ascertain it.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I received another letter yesterday by the same mail that brought me this. It was in regard to a claim of Mr. James E. Carden, of my own county, a man that I have known since I was a boy. He went to the war, fought gallantly, fell into the hands of the enemy in some battle, and was taken to Andersonville. You all know what that meant. I have seen that man moving along the streets in my town day after day, dragging himself on his crutches, with a wound upon his leg, a putrid sore that had been made possible by the suffering and exposure that he had incurred at Andersonville, a place where a man suffered death every day, if the accounts which I have heard and read are correct. He had been receiving a pension of $6 a month, and the Pension Office proposed to cut it down $2 a month, and he wrote to me and asked me to find out what was the matter. I wrote to the Commissioner and here is his reply:

[Southern Div. C. L. H., Ex'r. Inv. Ctf. No. 537693. James E. Carden, Co. E, 7th Reg't Tenn. Cav.]

Address your reply to the Commissioner of Pensions.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1896.

SIR: In reply to your recent inquiry "as to why this pensioner was reduced $2," I have the honor to advise you that the reasons for such reduction were fully set forth in a notice received by him on May 12, 1894, the substance of which was that the evidence in his case showed that he was not entitled to a rating under the act of June 27, 1890, but that he was entitled to his former rate of $4 under the general laws.

In response to such notice sundry affidavits were filed, but these on examination were held not to change the aspect of the case.

Before final action was taken, however, the act of March 2, 1895, making the minimum rate of pension $6 had gone into effect; otherwise the reduction would have been $4 instead of $2.

There is nothing pending in connection with this case.

Very respectfully,
WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN E. McCALL,
House of Representatives.

That is the reply of the Commissioner with regard to the case of a man on crutches, a man with a sore upon his leg that would almost nauseate you if you looked at it, a man unable to walk without crutches, a man who can not hoe or plow or do any kind of manual labor. He applied for a pension and got a pittance of $6 a month, and the Pension Office proposed to take part of that away. An inquiry was made and affidavits were presented, but it was held that they did not change the status of the case. Before action was taken, however, the act of 1895 making $6 the minimum rate had gone into effect. But for that the reduction would probably have been $4 instead of $2.

Now, I say to this House that I see no way by legislation to remedy these great evils, these great wrongs that are being perpetrated upon the old soldiers. The only effectual remedy is to put a man at the head of the Pension Bureau to enforce the laws who believes in a liberal and just pension system. I care but little who makes the laws; if you will permit me to execute them I will see that they are executed as I desire. That is the trouble with this pension business. That is the difficulty that the pensioners are in. The laws are all right. What we need is a man who will enforce them in the spirit in which they were enacted, a man who is not opposed to pensions, a man who will not indorse statements which describe the old soldiers as "coffee coolers" and as the "rag tag of the Army."

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to close my remarks without adding that so far as any personal interest in the pension laws is concerned I have none. I came into the world too late to remember the war. I had relatives upon both sides of that great conflict. My mother's people fought for the South, my father's people for the Union. I would not unjustly criticise the Confederate soldier, because he was as brave, as courageous, as any man, and he dared to do all that mortal man dare do. But he was wrong. I am opposed to the system which the Democratic party is exhibiting to the country through its administration, which makes it absolutely impossible for men who are entitled to pensions to get them without the greatest possible delay, a system which, instead of enforcing the pension laws, denies pensions to men whose right to them is established by proof sufficient to hang an accused person, a system which, instead of permitting the veterans of the war to draw their pensions, throws obstacle after obstacle in their way, as has been shown in the Neely case, to which I have called attention. These things clearly show that there is "something rotten in the State of Denmark," and the Administration ought to be held to account for it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HANLY. Mr. Chairman, in entering upon my duties in this Chamber I have felt that a proper degree of modesty required that I should begin as a listener, not as a speaker, and I would have remained a listener for a longer period but for the most remarkable utterance of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] the day before yesterday. If, sir, I can claim but little for myself I may claim much for the people that I have the honor in part to represent; the people of one of the five States of the old Northwest Territory, within the borders of which there is now one-fifth of the population of this Republic, one-fourth of its aggregate wealth; a Territory, sir, which, as the five States carved out of it were admitted one by one, kept up the equilibrium between slavery and freedom; a Territory that has given to the service of this country such men as Lincoln, and Grant, and Garfield, and Harrison; a Territory whose people have always believed that this is a Union of States, indestructible, indissoluble; a Territory which, when the supreme moment came when by the arbitrament of war we were to know which of the two opposing constructions of the Constitution was to survive, gave to the Union Army 900,000 volunteers. So, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from New York made his remarks here on the day before yesterday he spoke of my people; he spoke of those I have the honor in part to represent, and who can not speak here, save through their chosen representatives. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from the State of Illinois [Mr. GRAFF]. It has been urged against that amendment that it would occasion hardship on the part of those who were called to defend their claims; that it would occasion long journeys; that it would involve expensive litigation, the cost of which they would be unable to bear.

I believe it is the practice of the Federal courts to pay the expenses—at least the witness fees—of those who, being called on to defend their rights in those courts, are indigent and unable to pay such expenses.

It has been urged that this amendment ought to be so worded as to refer these cases to the State courts—a thing which, in my opinion as a lawyer, we have not the power to do. We could not take from the Federal courts the jurisdiction which they already have of these matters. It is already the law that the attorneys for the United States may, and they do, begin prosecutions under the existing laws whenever an infraction of them is brought to their attention.

It has been urged that the amendment would open wide the door to much vexatious litigation. But, gentlemen, the report of the chosen officers of the Government for the last year does not bear out that contention. I find that during the year ended June 1, 1895, there were 12,495 criminal prosecutions in the courts of the United States. Of these, 149 were for violations of customs laws; 5,720 for violations of internal-revenue laws; 866 for violations of the post-office laws; 58 for violations of the election laws; 34 cases arose under the naturalization laws; 201 under the intercourse laws; and only 356, all told, under the pension laws. In those 356 cases there were only 235 convictions; and be it said to the eternal honor and glory of the men who are receiving the benefits of our pension laws, only 127 of the 235 persons convicted were pensioners. [Applause.] In the face of these statistics, do not tell me that this amendment will open wide the door to much vexatious litigation. The prosecuting attorneys in the several districts of the United States are no more fond than other lawyers of going into court with a hopeless case—a case in which they know they will receive no compensation if they can not win it.

But, gentlemen, I do not believe that this amendment will have the effect predicted. It will protect the honest pensioners upon the roll, while it will in no wise prevent the prosecution of any criminal by the Government of the United States. I have had handed to me within the last few minutes a telegram from Fred A. Baker, a distinguished lawyer of the State of Michigan—a gentleman who has been one of the counsel in the case of Judge Long, who sought to have his pension restored. I send that telegram to the Clerk's desk to be read, for in my judgment it states what may honestly be expected from this amendment. Before the Clerk reads, I will simply say that the sender of this message is not only a distinguished lawyer, but a Democrat.

The Clerk read as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., January 14, 1896.

To Gen. GEORGE SPALDING,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Graff's amendment sending fraudulent cases to courts ought to pass. Present system is objectionable because Commissioner makes charges and is both accuser and judge, which ought not to be in cases involving the reputation and honor of the accused. Amendment protects honest pensions and affords Government every opportunity to proceed against the dishonest.

FRED A. BAKER.

Mr. HANLY. As I now see on the floor the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SPALDING] to whom that message was sent, I will ask him to state Mr. Baker's standing as a lawyer.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Fred A. Baker is a gentleman of eminent ability—recognized as one of the great lawyers of the Northwest, not only on legal but, also on constitutional questions. He is of counsel for Judge Long in the case now pending in the Supreme Court.

Mr. HANLY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment; but in my judgment it does not go far enough to cure the whole evil. The dependent pension act of 1890 was "An act to grant pensions to such soldiers and sailors of the war of the rebellion as served at least ninety days and were honorably discharged, and from disabilities of a permanent character, not the result of their own vicious habits, became unable to earn a support from manual labor."

Now, during the administration of Commissioner Raum there was a ruling of the Department which has been much discussed and which gentlemen well understand. But on the accession of the Democratic party to power in the Administration of the General Government a board of review was established, which went over, I believe, 212,000 cases which had been already adjudicated by the preceding administration. Last year that board reviewed 104,160 cases; it dropped from the rolls 4,149 persons as not being disabled in a pensionable degree; 2,279 were dropped and restored to pensions granted under the general law, and in 20,359 cases the rates of pension were reduced; the total being, I believe, something over 26,000.

Now, in my judgment, if we would correct the wrongs which have been committed under the banner of the Democracy during this Administration, we would restore to the rolls every man who has been fraudulently and dishonestly dropped therefrom. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, there is in my town a man who came out of the Union Army a captain. Somehow—I do not know how—the tide of adversity has risen strong and high against that man. He is now in the trenches, and must continue there during this Administration unless God in his mercy gives him a furlough. Under the last Administration that man received a pension of $12 a month; it has now been reduced to $6. I have known him from my childhood; I know his present condition, and I have promised him that if my voice and my vote can restore such as he to the pension rolls it shall be done. And that is another purpose of my standing here and occupying the attention of this committee. In keeping with that promise, I shall at the proper time offer the amendment which I now send to the desk to be read as part of my remarks—an amendment which, in my judgment, will supply the cure for the disease that has afflicted the Pension Office.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the last line in the pending bill add the words:

"That no pension that has heretofore or may be hereafter granted under any law of the United States shall be dropped or suspended or reduced on the ground of any ruling or construction of the law or evidence different from that found and applied to the case at the time of the adjudication and granting of such pension; and the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed and required to restore to the pension roll all persons whose pensions have been dropped or suspended and restore the original pension granted to all persons whose pensions have been reduced upon the grounds prohibited by the provisions of this act."

Mr. HANLY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to advert for a few moments to what I pronounced a short time ago as the very remarkable speech delivered on this floor by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], who professes so much love and friendship for the Union soldiers, but who, with these professions on his lips, rises in his place in this Chamber and uses language concerning pension legislation and pension laws of the following character: "Pernicious and iniquitous legislation," "the Treasury should not be looted, pillaged, and further depleted," "the Democratic party does not believe in a carnival of pillage upon the National Treasury," and so on.

Speaking of a man who had gone years without applying for a pension, he said:

He did not discover his disability until about 1886.

Again:

Let me remind you that in other countries where there have been great wars—in Russia, and in Germany, and in France—there are to-day but two classes of claims for pensions; one based on long service in the army, extending over a period of from ten to twenty-five years, and the other based on the fact that the disability was actually incurred in the line of duty.

Let me say to the gentleman that there can be no comparison between the German soldiers and the volunteer soldiers who served in the civil war. Let me say to him that he is mistaken when he says, as he did in his most remarkable speech, that the cost of the maintenance of any standing army in Europe is no more than equal to the amount appropriated for pensions in this country. I can show to the gentleman that the great Empire of Russia, in 1891, appropriated 226,652,168 rubles for the support of its army, and for the support of its navy about 43,000,000 more, making a total in round numbers of $270,000,000. France, in the same year, appropriated for war purposes a sum in excess of what we ask in this appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. HANLY. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I merely wish to suggest if the gentleman does not think that it is much to the honor and credit of the United States that it has passed these just and equitable laws and appropriated such an amount of money for the support of the men who saved the life of the nation? [Applause.]

Mr. HANLY. I thank the gentleman very much for the interruption. Instead of rebuking the Government the gentleman from New York should be among the first to heap encomiums of praise on the patriotism and devotion of a people who have been willing to do so much for these veterans. [Applause.]

The gentleman says he is the "friend of the Union soldier," but Mr. Chairman, when I express my love or my friendship for those who are close or dear to me in affection, I do not use such terms as I find in the speech of the gentleman from New York. [Applause.] He may be a friend of the Union soldier, but, sir, his is the kind of friendship that stabbed Cæsar and crucified Christ. [Applause.] He may be the friend of the Union soldier, but unfortunately the gentleman's language on the floor of this House does not support the assertion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman pardon me for another suggestion, merely to ask if he does not think that that would be a very peculiar kind of wooing on the part of the gentleman from New York if he should undertake to make love in that way? [Laughter.]

Mr. HANLY. I thank the gentleman again for the interruption. I know what would happen under such circumstances—I know what has happened—that the Democratic party has wooed and has been repulsed. [Laughter and applause.] It has wooed and not won.

There were none who heard the gentleman from New York—

> Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
> And without sneering, teach the rest to sneer—

who did not feel that he was not the friend of the soldier, but an enemy, "willing to wound yet afraid to strike." When pressed and plied with inquiries asking him to state his position on the questions pending, he each time sought refuge in evasion.

I have no criticism, Mr. Chairman, for those who sit on that side of the Chamber and who but a few years ago were in armed rebellion against the Government. I have no criticism, because I know the men who followed the banners of the South were brave, sincere men, and I would not, if I could, tarnish their fame, and I could not if I would. They suffered together with those who wore the blue, and their sufferings and their bravery have become a part of the imperishable heritage of the Republic. They were brave, for they were our countrymen. They were brave—how brave only those who met them in the storm of battle can know.

I know how hard it seemed to them, as they found themselves compelled to care for their unfortunate ones by State appropriations; and I honor them that during the discussion of this question they have maintained a discreet silence.

"Oh, but," says the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], "this bill carries too much. It opens too great possibilities. The cost is too much." Let me read; he said in conclusion:

> Let us pass the present bill, containing $140,000,000, and then stop, and avoid the throwing of any more unnecessary money into a bottomless pit.

That is the language. Too much, is it? Gentlemen, there was a time, as back from Bull Run came the shattered fragments of the Federal armies, when men stood in this Chamber and in answer to Lincoln's request for an appropriation of $500,000,000 to prosecute the war said it was too much. There was a time when, after the great carnival of death at Gettysburg, some men in the North said, "It is too much." There were times, sir, during the war when more men were asked, when more funds were demanded, that a few of the people of the North stood up and said, "It is too much." But history has vindicated those who fought to a successful conclusion that great struggle. Too much, was it? Thirty years of the best history that the world has seen—thirty years of stupendous achievement, of marvelous development, of a reunited land have said to you that it was not too much. Too much! Why, sir, when you have traveled over the battlefields of the South, when you have counted the bleaching bones, when you have numbered the tears of those who wept for those who fell, when you have counted the agony of those who in fevered dreams, in Andersonville and in Libby, saw the faces of loved ones at home; when you have weighed in the balance of an apothecary's scale, as you would these pensions, and have found the weight and measure and value of human liberty and of freedom, then, sir, you may say it is too much, but not until then. Until you can do that, until you can measure in full the value of these, let me, if you please, commend to you the conduct of your compatriots on that side of the Chamber, and ask that hereafter you remain silent and dumb when patriotism is mentioned on this floor. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARDY] is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, when I was informed yesterday that if I chose I might have a few minutes of time in the discussion of this measure now before the committee, I thought I would occupy that time in paying my respects to the gentleman from the Seventh district of the city of New York [Mr. BARTLETT]. But, happily, sir, on yesterday evening the distinguished soldier and great journalist, the gentleman from the Tenth district of New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], rebuked the gentleman from the Seventh district, and repudiated, on behalf of the soldiers of New York, every word that had fallen from his lips. Therefore I would not this morning drive the searing iron farther into the soul of the gentleman from the Seventh district. However, I desire to call the attention of the committee for a moment, and the attention of the gentleman himself, to one remark that I find in his speech as revised and published in the RECORD of this morning:

> It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that the true test in pension cases, which no longer obtains in this country, should be whether the injury or wound received or the disease contracted was received or contracted in the service or in the line of duty.

That rule, if adopted by the Pension Office, would work most admirably for a man who was wounded in the service, who had a hospital record, or for the soldier who contracted disease in the service and had a hospital record; but it does not work well for that brave youth who went out in 1861, who suffered all the horrors of war, who went into battle and was not wounded, but who went into the hell hole of Andersonville and there, with the 35,000 Union soldiers, slept in the mud and starved for months, and whose parched lips were paralyzed with thirst until the great God who rules the destiny of nations and watches over the welfare of men struck the dry earth and the miraculous spring of living water burst forth from the ground in the prison pen, where water had never been known before.

That man's comrades died about him on the field of battle; they went down to death, to starvation, and horror in the pen of Andersonville; but he went home, and now, thirty years after the war, he finds that he suffers from rheumatism or from other diseases which he is unable to prove by comrades or by hospital record to have been contracted in the Army. Yet my friend from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] would say that that man should not be entitled to a pension. Why, in my own district in the State of Indiana there is the Faith family of five brothers. The three youngest brothers went into the war, the two eldest remained at home.

One of the younger brothers was killed in battle, the other two died of disease since their return, and without pensions, while the two elder brothers are to-day hale and hearty men of 70 and 73 years of age. I declare, Mr. Chairman, in this presence, that it is a burning shame and a disgrace to this great nation of ours that any soldier who fought in that war or the widow of any soldier who died should to-day be suffering for the necessaries of life. [Applause.] And yet the Pension Office sends me letters every day, in response to calls I have made, that "the case is awaiting final disposition." I go to the Pension Office and ask one of the deputies, "How far behind is your board of review?" "Six weeks behind only." "Then how is it, Mr. Deputy Commissioner, that I hold in my hand now a case I called up eight months ago, which you said was ready for final disposition and would be immediately disposed of, and yesterday you sent me—eight months afterwards—another statement that it is still ready for final disposition, and you are only six weeks behind?" It is the policy of this Pension Office, as organized to-day, to see how few pensions it can allow and not how many it can allow.

Why, Mr. Chairman, when God called his servant Lincoln to become the herald of American liberty, the savior of a nation, the emancipator of a race, he declared to those who gathered around him to perpetuate the Union and uphold the flag that this Government would not see a soldier forsaken nor his children begging bread. And you men who marched up this Avenue with the weary, tattered ranks of Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan on that summer day in 1865 saw stretched across this Capitol a great banner. Upon that banner was inscribed these words: "The only debt this nation owes that it can never pay is the great debt it owes to the soldiers and sailors who saved the Republic." That debt has not been paid. The soldiers and sailors of the Republic will forgive the Government the principal of that debt if it will only pay the interest. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, as an humble member of this House I stand here to-day to vote for the protection of the American soldier, for the protection of the soldier's widow, for the protection of American credit, for the protection of American labor, for the protection of American industry, and for the protection of the American flag. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McCLURE] is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. Chairman, I had no purpose when this debate opened to engage in it, for I believed that the policy of the bill would receive the sanction of this House almost without division, and certainly without hostile criticisms. We are now in the fourth decade since the last shot was fired in the civil war. I believed that it was the settled policy of the American people, enforced both by the Republican and the Democratic parties, from whose ranks the mighty army of the Union was recruited, to extend a liberality, a princely liberality, to the disabled veterans of the Union. I believed that that was the ripe and deliberate judgment of 70,000,000 American people; but it seems I was mistaken. I heard from the lips of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] that there was a growing opinion in New York City, shared by the best Democrats and Republicans, that any further liberality toward the pensioner was inadmissible. I heard him in tones of rasping criticism inveigh against the enormity of the expenditure under existing law and compare it to the expenses of maintaining the naval and military establishments of Europe.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the very expenditure he decries I am proud of. I extol it; I laud it; I glorify it; I cite it as the proudest evidence that the Republic of the United States, having mustered under its flag the volunteer soldiers to defend the honor and the integrity of the nation, is now able and eager to take care of its disabled veterans and their dependents, when the war has long since ended, the flag been vindicated, and the victory won. Why, that expenditure is a notification to Great Britain and all the world that the American people have been so generous to the soldiers of 1847 and 1861 that they may now summon their descendants under the flag with a serene confidence that they will respond at the tap of the drum or at the bugle's call. The fact that we expend $141,000,000 every year so that no soldier who fought in the war with Mexico or in the war with the South shall ever darken the door of a poorhouse proclaims the exalted national character of the American people, announces their magnanimity, and is a sounder element of national strength than standing armies or ironclad navies. A nation so generous to its disabled veterans will fight at the dropping of a hat or the click of a trigger.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the liberality of the Congress of the United States, vindicated by the deliberate judgment of the American people, has filled this District with monuments in bronze and marble to commemorate the merits and services of your departed heroes and statesmen. While these visible symbols of patriotism speak loudly, your pension roll and pension expenditure in real, substantial, unmixed patriotism speak with far louder and more significant eloquence.

The gentleman from New York made an unguarded admission. He declared in substance that the time was inopportune for any fresh exhibition of liberalty on the part of Congress toward the pensioners, because the Treasury was in a state of depletion. Why, sir, I thought the Treasury was overflowing with unexpended revenue. During the discussion upon the emergency tariff bill I heard the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], of whom I speak with the utmost respect, for we are, or at least ought to be, attached by the ties of bimetallic friendship [laughter]—I heard that distinguished gentleman say, with warmth and emphasis, that there was $70,000,000 of unexpended revenue in the Treasury. I heard his distinguished colleague from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], with sledge-hammer argument and caustic rhetoric, reenforce him, and I heard the able gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] throw his weight into the scale, and from all this I concluded that the revenues of the Government were ample to discharge all its current obligations, and that the Treasury was fortified against possible depletion.

Mr. Chairman, I suspect that the gentleman from New York meant that the Treasury was depleted in respect to the particular kind of money that he worships. [Laughter.] I will be entirely frank with the gentleman from New York. I am not acquainted with the composition of the First or Fifth assembly districts of New York, which he represents, but I am acquainted with the Democracy of the State of Ohio. If the gentleman should assert of the Democracy of Ohio what he has asserted of the Democracy of Manhattan Island I would resent it as an imputation upon their patriotism. Why, sir, I know that the Democratic masses in Ohio resented with sharp resentment the appearance of unfair dealing with pensioners which characterized the executive authorities of the nation, and they thundered that resentment at the ballot box in 1893, 1894, and 1895, and are likely to add to the thunder in 1896.

Now, sir, if I were called upon to select a city in any part of the Union in which we might reasonably expect some show at least of aversion to any manifestation of magnanimity to the pensioners of this country, I would not select the city of Atlanta, which felt the mailed hand of William T. Sherman and, amidst its blackened chimneys, realized the horrors of war; I would not select the city of New Orleans, although that city drunk to the very dregs the bitter cup of military supremacy and inexorable military law; I would not select, especially after the noble speech delivered here yesterday by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER] the city of Richmond, although the Union Army for months drew around that city a circle of blood and desolation and it was for years the goal for the possession of which the military ambition of the nation chiefly aspired; I would not select even the city of Charleston, although within its municipal limits the first mad shot against the flag was fired. But, Mr. Chairman, I would select the city of New York, and I will tell you why.

In 1863, early in July, the United States of America were in great jeopardy. General Lee, with the Army of Northern Virginia, turning his back upon Richmond, ventured upon a dangerous irruption north of the Potomac. As he gathered his forces around Gettysburg, preparing, as he hoped, to strike a decisive blow, the most critical period in the war had arrived. The safety of Baltimore, the safety of Philadelphia, the safety of New York City, the safety of this capital depended upon the valor of our soldiers massed at Round Top and Cemetery Hill. And yet, at the very time when Longstreet was delivering his order to Pickett to make his charge upon the Federal position at Gettysburg, handbills were being distributed in the city of New York to stir up the dangerous classes in that great city to rebellious violence, and for three days a mob held possession of the city, overpowered its police, overpowered the State militia, and obliged the Federal authorities to detail three brigades from the Army of the Potomac to quell that rebellion in the rear. Now, the survivors and successors of the men who inspired and engaged in that riot doubtless live in the district which the gentleman from New York so fitly represents, and they have poured into his unwilling ear revengeful invectives against all pension legislation, and thereby corrupted and contaminated his otherwise patriotic nature. [Laughter.]

But to return to the episode of Gettysburg. Every drop of blood that trickled from the sides of Pickett's slaughtered division and crimsoned the wheat fields of Pennsylvania was a contribution to the nation's common stock of valor. Misguided and misdirected as it was, it glorified our common ancestry. And it will occur to the philosophic mind that the Confederate valor which signalized itself in the carnage of Gettysburg and the Union valor which planted our flag among the clouds on Lookout Mountain now make it possible to enforce the Monroe doctrine in the Western Hemisphere without the expenditure of blood or treasure. [Applause.]

But reverting to the gentleman from New York, who is the object, and the legitimate object, of my forensic affection [laughter], when that bloody drama was being enacted, when great problems of constitutional liberty were being solved on a hundred battlefields by brave men from North and South, the gentleman from New York was engaged in academic halls, in reading Cæsar's Commentaries, the Third Georgic of Virgil, and Livy's graphic description of Hannibal's descent into Italy. [Laughter.] The only bridge the gentleman ever crossed during the civil war was the pons asinorum. [Laughter.] On the other hand, the fiery and nomadic gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER], now a member of this House, on the one side, and myself on the other, if we could have gotten at each other at any time from 1861 to 1865, would have fought a bloodless battle for the light-weight championship of North America. [Laughter.]

But, to be serious, I think the assertion will not be challenged that the exhibition of valor on both sides of the line in that unfortunate struggle furnishes the best guaranty that there will be no breach of international peace over the Venezuelan question, and that Great Britain will consent to submit her line-fence controversy to the adjudication of an impartial tribunal. But before I conclude I desire to put myself right with Manhattan Island. I fear that I may have offended the sensitive pride of the opulent denizens of that hive of human industry and of lucrative commerce; and I am induced to say what I do by the impassioned eloquence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], who addressed the committee yesterday at the close of the session.

Why, sir, I reside in a rural not an urban district, and am therefore likely to imbibe erroneous impressions as to metropolitan affairs. I confess that I was somewhat poisoned against Tammany Hall by the animadversions of a person named Lexow. But I now see how easy it is to become an object of groundless aspersion; and after listening to the indignant eloquence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] yesterday, which came from his heart I know, my opinions of Tammany Hall have undergone a radical reformation. [Laughter.] I now and here renounce and disown my rustic antipathy to that famous organization, and shake hands with him in the name of American patriotism in support of the pending bill, including the amendment offered by my friend from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, I know, as every member in this Chamber knows, that there are thousands and tens of thousands of patriotic men and women in New York; and coming as I do from the great West, I would vote to expend—aye to lavish—any sum of money to make that great commercial emporium impregnable against foreign aggression and to make it impossible for any line-of-battle ship that floats upon the ocean to exact unwilling tribute from it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman excuse me if I call his attention to the fact that at the outbreak of the war of the rebellion the city of New York appropriated out of the municipal treasury $1,000,000 to equip its troops, and has never received a cent in return from the General Government, and its people to-day are paying the interest on the bonds that were issued at that time?

Mr. McCLURE. I rejoice to hear from the gentleman of this creditable act of municipal loyalty on the part of New York City, because it softens my criticism and somewhat kindles my languid affection for Manhattan Island; and I have this to say, that the Government of the United States ought to recognize such opportune generosity and reimburse the city of New York for this patriotic outlay. No section of the Union should bear a disproportionate share of the war burden justly chargeable to the common defense. As I was saying, there are thousands and tens of thousands of patriotic men and women in the city of New York, and I would vote to protect that great city from foreign invasion, or the menace of it, as readily as I would vote to protect an Ohio city. This country is too great and too grand for the manifestation of a narrow provincial spirit on the part of any person who has the honor to hold a seat in this Chamber. But if the city of New York should ever become an object of foreign naval attack, its citizens, including the gentleman who represents the First and the Fifth assembly district, will then learn and acknowledge that it is bad policy for a great and a free people to be niggardly to its veterans in time of peace. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, the debate thus far upon this bill has taken a wide range. I desire to discuss only a single proposition. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] has had read an amendment which he proposes to move to the bill at the proper time, and which has given rise to a good deal of discussion. I wish to say that the purpose he has in view meets my hearty approval and that the remarks he has made in support of his proposition do honor to his patriotism and to his affection for the old soldiers. But, Mr. Chairman, I fear that the practical operation of this proposed amendment would prove very disappointing indeed. The proposition in a nut shell is simply this: The Commissioner of Pensions, or some other authority, must have the power to change pensions—either to increase or diminish them—depending upon the circumstances that may arise after they are granted. For instance, there now comes to my mind the case of a comrade of my own, who was at one time broken down with inflammatory rheumatism, confined to his bed, and who made an application for the increase of his pension from $16 a month, which he was then drawing. He secured an increase to $72 a month, because at the time he was lying on his back, and had been for several months, requiring the personal attendance of a nurse all the time. Subsequently he got much better; and to-day, instead of being entitled to $72 a month, a rate of $16 or $14 would be ample for his present disability. I grant that this is an exceptional case; but exceptional cases must be taken into consideration when we enact sweeping and general changes in the pension laws.

Mr. GRAFF. Let me ask the gentleman whether anything in the amendment which I propose would prevent the Commissioner of Pensions from increasing the rate?

Mr. LACEY. Well, I was discussing the question of the reduction of the rate. I think there is nothing in the proposed amendment which prevents the Commissioner from increasing the rate. But why should a man 50 years of age, who has been drawing a pension of $72 a month, but whose disability changes so that he is entitled to only $14 or $16 a month, continue to draw $72 a month for the balance of his life because at one time he happened to suffer this increased disability?

Mr. MEREDITH. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion right there? The man whom he mentions ought to be turned over to Barnum, because I think he would be considered the greatest curiosity of this century.

Mr. LACEY. That is no doubt a very amusing suggestion to the gentleman from Virginia, but it often occurs that pensioners have had their disabilities changed. I remember one old comrade of mine who came to me and said that he had become entirely well and he wanted to know what he should do with his pension certificate. He had been shot through the leg and at the time of obtaining the pension was going around on crutches. His pension was granted; but at a later period he got well and wanted to surrender it. My friend from Virginia has an entirely erroneous impression of the old soldier. He has been looking at the question too much from the Manassas side of the river, and not, I think, from this side of the Potomac.

What is the present proposition? It is to turn the old soldiers and their pension claims over to the tender mercies of a court of chancery or to a criminal court. One hundred and four thousand claims, in round numbers, were rejected last year. Thousands—how many I do not now recall—have been reduced, while other thousands have been increased. But what I claim is that the power of review must rest somewhere. Let us not mistake the remedy, and while we are sending these cases to a Federal court, so as to have a judicial determination of them, let us understand exactly what we are doing. This proposition places it out of the power of any Commissioner, no matter how meritorious a claim may be, to reconsider it in future. It can only be done by the action of the court. We would therefore indirectly, by this action, confirm the rulings in these 104,000 cases which have been adjudicated, and no subsequent Secretary of the Interior can review or look over the evidence in the cases or restore those whose rights have been denied to them. The mistake is this: With a broad, liberal, and comprehensive pension law, a hostile Administration has come into power, and in seeking for somebody to administer the law adversely to the pensioner the present Secretary of the Interior was chosen. Let me suggest that the only possible remedy to meet the evils will be to change the Secretary of the Interior; and let us be thankful that we do not have to wait long for that.

On March 4, 1897, we will get rid of him, and then, with some one in that Department who has the interests of the veterans at heart, these 104,000 claims can be reexamined without injustice to anyone and restorations ordered in all proper cases without taking the claims into a forum 100 or 200 miles away. They will be considered before a liberal and enlightened Pension Bureau, controlled and administered under the direction of a Secretary of the Interior who will have sympathy for the old soldiers and their widows.

Mr. GRAFF. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he thinks it is better to base the security of the veterans in their pensions upon the accidental friendliness of the Administration that happens to be in power—to base them on the favor of a man who happens to be the Commissioner—or to base them upon well-established principles of law?

Mr. LACEY. I shall come to that in a moment. For twenty-five years we have had no such trouble as this. It was not until Secretary Hoke Smith entered upon the administration of the Department that the mischief commenced. After the present administration is ended no such mistake will again be made while the present generation exists.

But let us look at the proposition in a cool and judicial frame of mind. I have in my neighborhood, for instance, a pensioner that the Secretary of the Interior concludes ought not to be receiving his $8 or $10 or $12 a month, as the case may be, although his claim has been supported by much evidence. The Secretary of the Interior professes a belief that the evidence is fraudulent. Instead of taking charge and trial of the case in the office, it will be referred under this provision to a Federal court.

Mr. BOATNER. Will my friend yield just there for a question?

Mr. LACEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOATNER. Does the gentleman think that in the consideration of pension cases by the Commissioner of Pensions and by the force employed in the office a spirit of unfriendliness to the pensioners has controlled the action of the Department?

Mr. LACEY. I have no doubt of it whatever.

Mr. BOATNER. Is not the present Commissioner of Pensions a veteran himself?

Mr. LACEY. Unquestionably, and a good soldier.

Mr. BOATNER. Was he not an officer of high rank in the Federal Army?

Mr. LACEY. Not of high rank; he was a lieutenant and a good and brave soldier. But let me say that these sweeeping proceedings, such as we have had in the Bureau under the administration of the present Commissioner of Pensions, is only the result of an exercise of the power and the influence of the Administration itself. It is simply carrying out, on the part of the Secretary of the Interior, the views of the President himself; and in criticising the action of that Bureau I want to go back to the true fountain head, and that is the President, who inspires it.

Policies are not formulated by heads of bureaus. The Executive and Cabinet define the policy of the Administration, and heads of bureaus must carry out the policy that is adopted, or must give way to others who are in accord with the views of the rulers for the time being.

Anything short of a change of administration will be found ineffective, and fortunately we do not have long to wait. But the question that I am discussing now is a practical one, to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. A soldier is drawing a pension, we will say, of $10 or $12 a month. A question arises as to whether that pension was rightfully allowed. The Commissioner, under the present rules of the office, reexamines the case and perhaps determines that the soldier ought to be dropped. A second Commissioner can consider new affidavits, open the matter up again, and restore him to the rolls, and it has been done in thousands, yes, tens of thousands of cases in the last thirty-odd years during which the pension law has been administered in this way. But now take that man to the United States district court, we will say, one or two hundred miles away. He goes into the court and fights his battle before the court and jury and wins his case, if you please. He is like Pyrrhus after his victory over the Roman army. With the illustrious Greek, he may well say, "One more such victory and I am undone." In fact, the soldier is undone before his victory, and he would have to live to be as old as Methuselah in order to draw pension enough to pay the expenses and attorney fees incurred in defending his rights in such a contest in the Federal courts. This proposition, while it is made in the utmost good faith and sincerity and for the most laudable purpose, is, in my judgment, a mistaken one, and we must view all these questions as practical ones. This situation can only last a little over a year longer, and if at the end of that time we should find upon the statute books permanent laws, enacted simply to carry us over a temporary difficulty, these laws would embarrass the subsequent administration of that office.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the soldiers, having got thus far along, would do better to wait a few months longer than to be embarrassed by legislation intended in the most friendly spirit, which would result in giving them trouble, involving them in expense and annoyance, and some of them possibly in financial ruin.

Take the case that was suggested here—that of Judge Long. Judge Long is a lawyer, and an able and skillful one, a member of the supreme court of the State of Michigan. He is able, perhaps, because of his ability as a lawyer, to make his contest in the courts of the land; but I will venture to say to-day that Judge Long has spent more money in vindicating his rights, and in vindicating the rights of other pensioners, in his struggle with the Secretary of the Interior than he will draw in a good many years, even if he should have his pension restored. I honor him for it. I respect him for it. He is fighting a grand and good fight, and has a good purpose in view.

Mr. GRAFF. I will ask the gentleman whether the Commissioner of Pensions, under the operations of my amendment, would have been permitted to cut off the pension of Judge Long without having first himself submitted the case to the verdict of a jury in the Federal courts?

Mr. LACEY. Judge Long's case was decided long ago. The gentleman seeks to lock the stable door after the horse is stolen, and he must be careful not to lock out a good many pensioners while doing it.

Mr. GRAFF. What remedy does the gentleman propose?

Mr. LACEY. The remedy that I propose is a very simple one.

Mr. GRAFF. Do you propose any remedy that shall operate right now?

Mr. LACEY. No, not now, as to these rejected cases. We can not do anything under the present Secretary. We can not hope for a friendly administration of that office during the time that he continues to rule over it; but, as I have remarked, the time is not long, and we should not, because of a temporary difficulty, remodel the pension laws and make them so burdensome and so inconvenient and so heavy upon the soldiers that when the time comes for these questions to be brought up again the Commissioner and the officers of the Pension Office will be embarrassed in their adjustment.

The proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is worthy of grave consideration. Many gentlemen have spoken in favor of this proposition, and very few of them against it. I remember seeing one gentleman [Mr. POOLE] with an empty sleeve who in his remarks before the House referred to the proposed plan as of doubtful propriety. I heard also from my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCCALL], who takes the place of Mr. Enloe. And upon this pension question there can be no more striking object lesson than to find upon the Republican side of the House the successor to that brilliant Congressman, because you will remember that Mr. Enloe made much of his entire reputation in his daily contest against pensions on the floor of this House and by his attacks upon the Pension Bureau under the administration of Mr. Harrison. But the people of Tennessee have spoken in favor of the veteran of the late war. We have the evidence from all parts of the country that the people are friendly to the soldiers. Nothing has done more to make this House so nearly unanimously Republican than the hostile action of the Interior Department in the last two years and a half.

We have heard from the people on that question, and it is entirely safe to leave to a fair-minded administration the protection of the pensioners of this country without any such radical change as that proposed. I call attention to page 7 of the Commissioner's report. This very wrong that my friend wants to prevent has been done.

The Commissioner says:

> The board of revision, organized in pursuance of your order, upon the decision of the Bennett case and abrogation of Order No. 164, to examine and reconsider pensions allowed under that order contrary to the purport of said act, had so nearly completed its work that the board itself was dissolved at the end of the last fiscal year and the slight remnant of its work transferred to the board of review. The work is substantially completed. During the last fiscal year 104,160 cases were acted on by the board of revision.

The Commissioner informs us that the mischief has been substantially done.

Mr. GRAFF. How many were dropped or decreased of the 104,000?

Mr. LACEY. A very considerable number.

Mr. GRAFF. About 30,000 under existing law.

Mr. LACEY. But these men have already been reduced, and this proposed law does not restore them. Any practical legislation to restore them I should be glad to support. The proposition now before the committee does not meet the difficulty in the case at all. There are thousands, perhaps nearly a hundred thousand, cases to which legislation ought to be directed to undo the construction adopted in administering the pension law and to make it conform to the intention of the framers of the law. It is impracticable to refer these cases to the Federal courts.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCCALL] tells us that at least some of these courts are hostile to the pensioners. We know that in many localities the deputy marshal who has been making a living out of the "boot legger" is finding business dull. He would turn his attention to the pensioners under this proposed law, and the courts would be filled up with business in that way. He would be found a more dangerous enemy than any that the pensioner has yet encountered. The Secretary would regard the passage of this amendment as a direction and authority to him to turn every case over to the Federal courts where he suspected there was some fraud.

Mr. GRAFF. Does he not do that now?

Mr. LACEY. He does not do it now. The number of cases against pensioners in the courts is comparatively small. The number of convictions of those who have received pensions has been very trifling. The effort heretofore has been to convict attorneys. When there was a pension case allowed where there was fraud, they have endeavored to indict the attorney rather than the pensioner. Hereafter if we send these claims directly, under the proposed amendment, to the Federal courts for examination pensioners will simply be burdened by that action with a load too grievous to be borne.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, I shall attempt to occupy the attention of this committee for but a few moments. I desire, however, to say a few words in favor of the bill which is now pending, and especially that portion of the bill which grants to the widows of the war more liberal support.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], who addressed this House day before yesterday in opposition to the pending bill, stated in his opening remarks that it was not a pleasant duty he had to perform. I am sure that this House and a vast majority of the people of this country fully agree with him in that statement.

He further said that his duty to his constituents compelled him to oppose any further looting or pillaging of the United States Treasury by increasing the pension list.

If the constituency of the gentleman from New York are in sympathy with him, I venture the assertion that it is the only constituency in the United States of America, East or West, North or South, that would indorse the statements he made upon this floor.

The patriotic citizens of this the grandest nation in all the world are now and ever have been in favor of dealing liberally with the men who saved this nation, and to provide for their widows and orphans.

In no other Congressional district in the great North would it be considered as looting and pillaging the Treasury to provide for the widows of deceased soldiers. The gentleman from New York was very emphatic in the statement that he was the friend of the soldier. God defend us from such defenders. He said that he was satisfied with the pension legislation of Congress up to 1890, and then he paused. He did not dare to say he was in favor of the repeal of the act of 1890. Yet he found much fault with its provisions, and yet that act of 1890 was one of the wisest measures, the most just legislative act ever passed by any Congress.

It did justice, Mr. Chairman, to a class of men who could not get a pension in any other way, and yet who were just as worthy, just as honest, and just as deserving as any other class of men that ever drew a pension. They could not draw a pension simply for the reason that the comrades with whom they served had either moved into distant States and Territories or were dead and laid away, and for this reason could not furnish the necessary evidence required by the Pension Department.

I know, Mr. Chairman, what the soldiers of the late war endured. I know of the trials, dangers, sufferings, and privations through which they passed, and although I do not draw a pension myself, and never have applied for one, yet I never shall be satisfied until every man who served in the Union Army for ninety days or more and was honorably discharged therefrom is receiving from the Government he helped to save a pension large enough to keep him from want in his old age. [Applause.] This nation can not afford to see its gallant defenders eking out an existence in the poorhouses of the country.

The only fault I find with this bill is that it does not go far enough. It does not appropriate, in my judgment, as much money as we ought to appropriate. I do not agree with those who think that the payment of pensions has reached high-water mark.

There are thousands, yes, tens of thousands of applications on file in the Pension Office to-day; filed there by men just as honest and deserving as those who are now drawing pensions. Many of them have been on file for years, and ought to have been adjudicated years ago, and would have been had it not been for the unpatriotic and pernicious course taken by the present Administration. Thousands of men have also been dropped from the pension list or their pensions have been reduced, without cause, by the arbitrary act of a single man, seeking to make a reputation as an economist at the expense of the old soldier. These cases that are hanging fire in the Pension Office should be disposed of.

These men who have been dropped from the list without trial and without cause should be restored, and the law should be so amended and defined that it would be impossible for any one man, by his own sweet will, to deprive old soldiers of that which has been granted them by act of Congress.

I know that our friends say that the Treasury is depleted, that this is no time to increase pensions, because there is no money in the Treasury to pay increased pensions with. We all know the whole country is painfully aware of this fact. But whose fault is it? From the close of the great war in 1865 up to March, 1893, during which time the Republican party controlled wholly or in part the destinies of this nation, there never was a year, a month, a week, a day, or a minute that we did not have money enough in the Treasury to pay the men who saved the nation their just and honest dues. You took possession of this great Government a little less than three years ago; for the first time in thirty-two years the Democratic party came into full control of the legislative and executive branches of the Government, and immediately proceeded to enact into law your pet theory of "a tariff for revenue only." You immediately proceeded to drop from the pension list men who had been on that list honorably for years. You succeeded in robbing the men who saved the nation out of nearly $20,000,000 a year, and yet your Wilson-Gorman-Brice monstrosity failed to produce revenue enough to pay the current expenses of the Government, and for the first time since the close of the great struggle for the Union, in a time of profound peace, this the richest and most powerful nation in all the world has been compelled to borrow nearly a hundred and eighty-five million dollars, and is now about to borrow a hundred million dollars more for the purpose of paying the current expenses of the Government, and demonstrating to the world the total incapacity and unfitness of the Democratic party to govern a great nation.

But, Mr. Chairman, under these adverse circumstances, the old soldiers should not be left to suffer, for just as sure as there is a God in Israel the Republican party will again control the affairs of this Government and will again provide sufficient revenue to pay the current expenses of the Government, gradually reduce the public debt, and at the same time do justice to the men who in the dark days of the great rebellion saved the nation from destruction. [Applause.]

I have said that this bill does not go far enough. It should, in my judgment, provide what the law of 1890 clearly intended, that whenever a pension is granted under what is known as the dependent act of 1890, and the report of the board of examining physicians who have examined such case clearly shows that the claimant would be entitled to $12 a month under the general pension law, he should be paid $12 a month under the law of 1890.

This was the construction placed upon the law by Secretary Noble and Commissioner Raum and during their administration pensions were granted in every instance upon that basis. But when the present Administration came into power it not only revoked this just and liberal construction of the law, but also set to work to undo the work of Secretary Noble and General Raum by reducing and dropping from the roll hundreds of deserving and worthy pensioners who had been placed there by a solemn act of Congress as construed by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions.

Since the present Administration has been in power a soldier applying for a pension under the act of 1890 has had to prove that he was totally incapacitated for the performance of manual labor before he could be allowed a pension of $12 a month.

Every man dropped from the pension roll by the nefarious rulings of the Commissioner of Pensions should by law be again placed on the pension roll. Every pensioner who, by the arbitrary and, as I firmly believe, illegal act of the Commissioner of Pensions, has had his pension reduced, should again be placed upon the roll at the same rate as before such reduction.

This is an appropriation bill to which, as I understand it, no new legislation can be attached, or I would at this time offer several amendments embodying and covering the points I have named. I have a bill now pending before the Committee on Pensions which covers this whole subject fully, which I expect to press and hope to see become a law before the end of this session. [Applause.]

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take up but a very few moments of the time of this committee. I would not have spoken at all upon this question had not the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] intimated on the day before yesterday that there were no exceptions to be taken to the administration of the Pension Bureau. I want to call attention to the fact that this bill—or at least the provisos inserted in the bill now under discussion—is for the purpose of construing the pension law of 1890. The bill makes no extension whatever of the provisions of that law. It is simply an honest, legitimate, fair, legal construction of the law that was passed in 1890 for the benefit of the soldiers of the late war.

The gentleman from New York seems to congratulate himself that there is a Treasury to loot, and he says that these pensions to the old soldiers are a gratuity. I am sorry that the gentleman has taken the position that he has. I do not think that he represents even his own constituency. The fact is that there would have been no United States Treasury to loot if it had not been for the men who followed the flag from 1861 to 1865.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of this committee to what I deem a conspiracy. I hold in my hand a state paper, the message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress in 1893, in which I discover this remarkable slander against at least one-twentieth of the American people:

Thousands of neighborhoods have their well-known fraudulent pensioners, and recent developments by the Bureau establish appalling conspiracies to accomplish pension frauds.

Mr. Chairman, that was the keynote of the action of the Pension Bureau. It laid down a proposition which has been followed from that time to this. It was a proposition that was intended to destroy the validity and the effect of the law of 1890. That conspiracy has to a great extent accomplished its object. It has been followed to the line—so much so that $400,000 of the people's money was expended in one year for the investigation of these "frauds" and the bringing to justice of this remarkable number of pension swindlers. Not only was an army of special examiners sent into the field, but postmasters in all sections of the country were used to investigate the cases of fraud. What was the result? Thirty-nine pensioners were convicted of receiving pensions illegally—less than 1 in 20,000 of the men and women whose names were upon the pension roll! Less than 1 in 20,000! Why, Mr. Chairman, there is a greater percentage of defaulters among Democratic officials to-day than the percentage of fraudulent pensioners that were found on the pension roll. [Laughter.]

My friend from New York claims that the pension laws have been honestly administered. I have handled over four hundred claims since the 1st day of March last. More than two hundred of them have been at "final disposition" more than six months. In a large number of these cases letters of inquiry have been sent out to investigate the standing and the character of the men and women who have sworn to the truth of their statements. More than six months! Yet we are blandly informed by the gentleman from New York that the Pension Bureau is honestly and faithfully administered.

Mr. Chairman, there is one panacea above everything else for the evils existing in reference to this question. It is a service pension. It is in the interest of economy to the people of the United States. I am in favor of putting upon the pension roll the name of every man who carried a gun in defense of his country, and the appearance of his name on the muster roll should be prima facie evidence of his right to that pension. I do not care whether such a person is white or black; I do not care what his condition may be. [Applause.] Put such men upon the pension roll at a stated figure per month, and then you would have no seven-by-nine politicians trying to either reduce pensions or to cut the pensioner from the roll entirely.

Mr. Chairman, as to the suggestion of pensions being a "gratuity," it is an insult to the intelligence and patriotism of the men who served in the Army from 1861 to 1865 to intimate such an idea. A pension is a reward for patriotism, and by that process we are building up a bulwark, a living bulwark, of strong arms and willing hearts that can always be called upon in defense of this nation and its flag. A pension is the expression of a nation's patriotic gratitude—the generous offering of a grateful people to the men who saved the Government. Mr. Chairman, the volunteer soldier of America is one of the grandest figures in our history, and when that history shall be fairly written that remarkable character, the volunteer soldier, will stand out in letters of silver upon pages of gold. The patriotism of the American volunteer soldier is one of the most wonderful things in our annals.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of this committee; but I do say that I am thoroughly in favor of this bill and all the provisos with but a single amendment. When the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] shall come before this committee I want to see it amended so that these cases, if they are to go into the courts at all, shall go into the courts of the States; not into the Federal courts. This will enable every citizen who is affected to reach the place of final adjudication without enormous expense and waste of time.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that this entire question of pensions as it appears to me is reduced to a nutshell. Our Democratic friends must bear the responsibility. Upon their shoulders the burden of this action of the Pension Bureau in the last three years must fall. Enough evidence from all sections of the country has been presented here to indicate what has been done under Democratic rule. It was never done under the Republican administration of the Pension Office. Judas Iscariot betrayed the Son of God; Benedict Arnold attempted to betray the nation that had respected and honored him; and here comes along a Democratic Administration, the first in thirty-two years, that is attempting to betray the men who made it possible for a Democratic Administration to be elected. [Applause.]

Mr. LOW. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to discuss the merits of the bill now pending before the House until New York was drawn into the vortex of debate. It is patent to every person having a particle of regard for the rights of the veteran that some change is absolutely necessary in the laws governing the present administration of the Pension Department. The interpretations of existing law and the rulings by the present officials administering that great Department ostracise a class of poor and indigent men to whom the country is indebted for its perpetuity. That office by its rulings has ostracised the very men who in their early life were the donors of a national gift to the people of these United States. The nation to-day is the pensioner; and it has been drawing its lion's share of emoluments every day, yes, every hour, since the great historical events enacted at Appomattox. [Applause.]

I have listened to the remarks of various gentlemen on this floor; but my attention was especially challenged by those of my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] when he spoke about "looting" the Treasury, and added that the district which he represented did not want any change in the present pension laws.

Mr. Chairman, I do not trespass upon the delicate principle of modesty when I state that I, too, am from New York, and the district which I have the honor to represent is double the size numerically of the Seventh district, represented by my distinguished friend. My constituents do not want to see any law on the statute books that deprives the old soldier of one penny of his just dues.

I think my friend must have been hasty when he spoke about "looting" the Treasury, else he would have escaped that dangerous shoal. It was not the old soldier, nor the pension to the old soldier, that depleted our Treasury, but the Democratic party, which the gentleman represents; they, by enacting and upholding laws and principles which were absolutely disastrous to American interests looted not only our Treasury, but looted all American industries, and looted and destroyed the prosperity of millions of our workingmen. This last year to save the Treasury the Democratic party compelled the wards of the nation to contribute millions to its exchequer by reducing their pensions or by dropping them entirely from the roll. These methods we all know about. I would take the word of a man who fought at Shiloh, at Mission Ridge, at Gettysburg, or who stood on the deck of a man-of-war when it passed the forts of Mobile, sooner than I would take the sworn statement of any postmaster who prostitutes his position to go about his bailiwick for the purpose of securing information for the specific object of preventing a poor old soldier from receiving his just dues.

Gentlemen, vote for the bill and these amendments, protect the veteran, and make his rights vested rights. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, day before yesterday I offered a resolution asking for the appointment of a committee of three on the part of the chairman of the Invalid Pension Committee for the purpose of investigating the Pension Office, and especially as to its ruling on the law of 1893. I hope that the committee will be appointed, and that it will thoroughly investigate and return back to this House a report that will enlighten and make plain to us all the mode of procedure and rulings of the Pension Department.

Mr. Chairman, if a veteran is incapacitated and unable to earn a living, that fact duly authenticated should be sufficient for the granting of a pension; and, Mr. Chairman, this is the law, but the obstruction that surrounds the present law is such as to make it almost impossible for a veteran, though he be incapacitated, to obtain a pension. Previous to the coming into power of the present Administration, the Pension Office was conducted under the spirit and intent of the liberal pension laws of the United States. There was a disposition and feeling that the old soldier was worthy of a pension, and more, that the laws which were on the statute book should be executed.

General Black, the former Commissioner, and Secretaries Lamar and Vilas all agreed with this. The same class of evidence, the same liberal intent, the same basis of adjudication that had obtained up to their "reign" was adhered to, but when the present Commissioner came into office the whole matter changed, and radically so. New rules and regulations were made, new constructions were put on the laws, and every impediment and obstacle that seeming hatred for and disgust with the pension law has been put into action, with the result that, in fact and in truth, the pension laws are a nullity. Unheard-of requirements, impossible and impracticable calls for evidence are made. Soon after the present Commissioner came into office no less than 50,000 cases that had been partly prepared for allowance were turned back from the files, and were sent to the adjudication divisions to await additional evidence. And, Mr. Chairman, in invalid claims, new examinations were ordered, thus depriving the claimants of their pensions. Thousands of pensions have been rejected in the face of the best medical evidence and that of friends and neighbors.

Mr. Chairman, I call your attention to the case of John E. Marren, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who is one of my constituents. This man was rejected where it was conclusively shown and admitted that he was totally incapacitated to do manual labor. I sent a letter to the honorable Secretary of the Department of the Interior, asking him to look the evidence over anew, and see if a mistake had not been made. I told him that he was incapacitated for manual labor. I appealed to him to see to it that injustice be not done to this worn-out soldier, a man who was sustained from day to day by daily portions of morphine.

Mr. Chairman, that letter was returned to me in a most ungracious manner, and I now read the letter that the members of this House may more fully understand the contempt in which they are held by the present Secretary.

I addressed the following letter to the Secretary of the Interior:

BROOKLYN, N. Y., July 30, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: I desire to call your attention to the case of Mr. John E. Marren, who is an applicant for a pension, the application having been rejected on the ground that he is not disabled from manual labor in a "pensionable degree." Allow me to state that I have known Mr. Marren personally for many years, and can speak in the highest terms as to his veracity, integrity, and scholarly attainments. I know of my own knowledge of his disability during the past two years, and that his nervous system and bodily strength have been kept up by daily portions of morphine. I fear the rejection is contrary to the evidence in the case. I believe you want to do the right thing in your Department, and will only be too quick to rectify a mistake made by the Bureau of Pensions.

I would respectfully ask you personally to look over the evidence in the case.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAS. R. HOWE, M. C.,
Sixth District of New York.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Secretary of the Interior.

This is the reply which I received to the communication:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 15, 1895.

Hon. JAS. R. HOWE, 287 Broadway, N. Y.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your communication of the 30th ultimo, you are advised that if John E. Marren, whose claim for pension has been rejected, and concerning which you write, is dissatisfied with the finding of the Commissioner of Pensions, he has the right to appeal from this action to the Department; but the Department can not recognize you as an attorney authorized to prosecute such a claim.

Let me call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the rule governing such cases. I read from rule 14 of the practice:

No claims pending in this Bureau will be considered, out of the regular order of business, upon the request of attorneys, or agents, or any person whomsoever, except for good cause shown, and upon the order of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that good cause was shown in the communication which I sent to the Department.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the Interior Department, through its Secretary and Commissioner of Pensions, has in the past and now is nullifying the laws of Congress. For example, if the widow of a soldier with a half dozen children can be shown to have a gross income of $8 per month, a rejection of her claim as "not dependent within the meaning of the law" will follow. And an invalid has to be a good subject for the poorhouse before a pension is granted.

They have another cute saying in the Pension Department, "not disabled within the meaning of the act." They put their own construction upon the meaning and intent of acts of Congress, and override, upset, and annul all previous decisions.

Mr. Chairman, this bill and amendments now pending before the House should pass. They will stop the nullification of the laws of Congress, and will cause the Pension Commissioner to understand that a law of Congress is entitled to departmental respect.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion let me say that the men who seek a pittance at our hands were heroes in war. Let us by our actions prove ourselves worthy of their heroism by voting for this bill and the amendments. [Applause.]

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, I had made up my mind not to say anything upon the pending bill, but the latitude given in the discussion has been broad, and as there have been some views expressed here about a pension being a gratuity, a gift, or a bounty, I feel compelled on this floor and in this august body to declare that Congress by solemn enactment in 1893 decreed that a pension was a vested right, and being a vested right, it can not be taken away by the sweet will of the Commissioner of Pensions, the Secretary of the Interior, or the Bureau of Pensions. Believing that it follows along the line of the title to land given by the United States Government, it is as thoroughly a gift within the rights and province of the law as is the patent to a piece of United States land after settlement or homestead entry. It seems to me that the language of the statute is plain and can not be controverted. It makes every pension hereafter or heretofore granted as secure as a vested right and guarantees to that extent the payment thereof, and provides that the pension shall not be suspended without due notice. It is obvious that Congress intended to make a pension a vested right or it never would have passed such legislation. The homestead law recognizes the service of the pensioner, and it seems to me that beyond question the language there used covers this ground.

In the discussion of this question during the short time I shall occupy I shall not attempt to rake over the embers of the war, because I find that the gentlemen on the other side who followed the flag of the lost cause until it went down in defeat have not raised one word against this pension legislation. But we are astonished here to find that the opposition comes from the great city of New York, the metropolis of this nation, and I want to say to this House that when the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] was making his speech there was a grand scene on this floor. Sitting on this side there was a gentleman who bore the brunt at the battle of Gettysburg, who bears upon his body the wounds inflicted there. He was and is the personification of a hero, with the front of Jove, and was one of the grand heroes of that bloody field. I refer to Gen. Daniel E. Sickles. That gentleman, listening to the voice—not of the greater New York, but of the lesser New York, thank God—during the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], said it was mere rot that he was talking and he ought to know better. I wish I could say it as emphatically as my grand old soldier friend from New York did. But when my Democratic friend from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] arose and in emphatic tone and gesture said that Mr. BARTLETT'S speech was not a fair representation of the sentiment of New York City, I felt that all further discussion was useless.

There can be no more question in my mind as to a pension being a vested right than there is a question about the patent to your land or the deed to the house in which you live, if you own it, giving you a vested right. I am told, and I believe it to be true, that the gentleman to whom I referred [Mr. Sickles], when a Representative in this House in 1893, proved to the satisfaction of every lawyer and every member in the House that it was a vested right. The very certificate of the pension itself pledges the faith of this Government to the payment of the pension. The Government does no more than that with reference to the payment of a bond. The bond and the pension go hand in hand, and damned be he who says they ever shall be repudiated.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. SPALDING. My friend from New York regrets that he was not of sufficient age when the war broke out; in other words, that he was not of the age of consent [laughter], and yet near my seat I can put my hand on two or three old soldiers who are of the same age as the gentleman, or somewhat younger, who helped to bear the flag to victory on many a hard-fought field for three years during that war. I am sorry, too, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] was not of sufficient age, because if he had enlisted under that banner I am satisfied he never would have made the memorable speech which he did make the other day.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. SPALDING. The gentleman objected to being interrupted in his speech, and I have only ten minutes, and I decline.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I want to ask you about my remarks, and about their revision.

Mr. SPALDING. I am satisfied that the gentleman did not represent New York City in his speech here on this floor. I know something of New York City myself, and I know that during the war old Commodore Vanderbilt poured his money out like water for the salvation of this Government. I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] may represent himself and a choice few, or a certain number of gentlemen in New York, but he does not represent the constituency which sent him here to Congress in his position on the pension question.

It seems that no other gentleman from the South, the West, the East, or the North has stood up here and taken the position which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] has taken. He is the only man, notwithstanding there are many gentlemen from Georgia, from Tennessee, from Alabama, and all over the South who carried the old Confederate flag. I honor them for it, and I am here ready to clasp hands with them over any bloody chasm that there may have been, and I say to them they fought well and bravely. I recognize here on this floor a gentleman from Alabama. They say his seat is the storm center now. It was a storm center during the war, Mr. Chairman, for wherever General WHEELER and his troops went, there you might expect to find trouble. I was confronted by that gentleman several times myself, and I recognize in him a brave soldier and a gallant gentleman. I have been in the South, and in the New South, and I have come to the conclusion from my experience with these gentlemen, and talking with them, that the only ones who never were satisfied with the outcome of that conflict were the noncombatants of the North and the South. [Applause.]

Mr. TRACEWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no apology to offer to this House for taking up the few minutes of time allotted me for the discussion of the pending appropriation bill and the various amendments proposed to the same.

I want it understood that in any place, at any time and under all circumstances, when the rights or interests of the old soldier are at stake, I desire to lift up my voice in his behalf and to speak a word in season or out of season in the interest of him, his widow or his orphan.

I must say that I admire the courage, if I can not agree with the sentiments, uttered on this floor the other day by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], who bravely, if not wisely, came to the support of the present Administration and essayed a defense of its pension policy.

When the honorable gentleman goes back to his constituency in the approaching springtime, when Democratic conventions do most abound, and assumes a prominent part in them, as he doubtless will, and they each and all with great enthusiasm indorse the Administration of Grover Cleveland, as they all undoubtedly will, he at least will be consistent, though far from right. [Applause.]

I have been surprised, yea, amazed, to sit here for the last three days during the progress of this debate, and witness the painful silence of our friends on the other side of this Chamber, although the present administration of the Pension Department has been on all sides attacked, and its brutal and inhuman treatment of the applicants for pensions shown up in its true light.

Aside from the gentleman from New York, not a soul on that side of the House has lifted a voice in an attempted defense of the present outrageous Democratic methods and policies prevalent in the Pension Bureau; and yet we will find every mother's son of them voting in the very first Democratic convention he can set his foot for an indorsement of Grover Cleveland and his Administration.

If Mr. Cleveland does not inspire the present methods, which have in the last few years stricken thousands of worthy pensioners from the rolls and materially reduced the pensions of other thousands of worthy men and women, he is responsible for them, and the Democratic party, together with a contingent of mugwumps, are responsible for him.

I take it the remarks of the gentleman from New York, notwithstanding the silence of the other side of this Chamber, is an echo of the true Democratic heart of the nation and that he voices their true sentiments, which on this floor they dare not utter.

I prefer to judge this party by its acts rather than its words, and the voters of this country have at last awakened to the fact that the Democratic party is long on promises and short on performances.

The remarks of the only Democrat who has dared to come out from under the cover are, when boiled down, a covert attack upon the pension act of June 27, 1890.

The force of the amendments proposed to the bill reported by our committee is an effort on the part of this Congress to compel the pension authorities that be to respect in their administration of this law its plain and evident intent.

We have been twitted with the remark by the eminent gentleman from New York that the effect of these amendments, in other words, the enforcement of the provisions of this law, would loot the Treasury; and our attention has been directed to the fact that we have a depleted Treasury. Of this latter fact we can make no successful denial, but we retort the present barren condition of the Treasury is the result of Democratic mismanagement if not imbecility.

But this House has passed and promulgated such measures as will remedy this deplorable condition of affairs, and, in any event, the sins of the Democracy should be no further visited upon the heads of the nation's defenders.

When millions of dollars are given to a foreign syndicate to float a loan of Government bonds, you men on the other side of the House call it protecting the public credit; when this side of the House asks for a reasonable appropriation, hedged about by such regulations as will prevent Hoke Smith from diverting it from its beneficiaries, the old soldier, his widow and orphan, you say it is a scheme to loot a depleted Treasury.

Your depleted numbers are an evidence of the ground swell of 1894, and in 1896 an aroused and an indignant people will finish the work they so nobly began, and you will find out that these men, maligned, traduced, and slandered by the hired spies of the Pension Department, know as well how to vote as they knew how to shoot.

The pension act of 1890, known as the dependent pension act, is either right or it is wrong. If this act is based upon correct principles, is laid down upon just lines, it should be fairly and liberally administered. If it is inherently wrong, is laid upon unjust lines, its fair and consistent administration would demonstrate its weakness and vice, and I believe the people of this country would, in common justice to themselves, demand its repeal in such tones as would not admit of its further enforcement, and it would be stricken from the laws of the land. In order, then, to ascertain the fact as to whether it is a fair and just act it is necessary to inquire what gave rise to the apparent necessity for its passage by Congress.

Under prior pension acts, having been fairly, justly, and liberally administered by the Republican party, the greater number of all those soldiers who were sorely wounded in battle or in the line of duty, or for disabilities resultant from injuries or disease received or contracted while in the military service of the Government, or directly traceable to the same, these worthy persons are, now enjoying, where this Administration has not taken away from them, pensions somewhat commensurate with their just deserts. But these laws, although wise and beneficent in their nature, left wholly unprovided for a large number of men, their widows and orphans, who, while they were not seriously or permanently wounded or injured during their period of service, and who perhaps never suffered a day's sickness during the long and weary years of the war, men who fought from Bull Run to Appomattox—the men who in reality fought the battles of the war, for wounded men and men who succumbed to the hardships of army life, while they are deserving of all credit and should be liberally compensated for their sacrifices, were not under the nature of things the men who bore the brunt of battles. The cases of these men who really did the fighting and saved the Union are only reached and covered by the provisions of this act of 1890, which by its terms provides for the payment of pensions to this class of men, their widows, orphans, and dependents, regardless of the time when the soldier became disabled, or whether he died from disease contracted in the military service, or if, living, he be disabled from earning a livelihood by manual labor, providing his disability is not the result of his own vicious habits.

If our pension system is founded upon natural justice and equity, who will contend that the men who did the fighting, when they become old, broken down, and worn out, should not share in the bounty bestowed upon its defenders by a grateful people.

These are the men who were as proud as they were brave, and while possessing the strength and vigor to battle with the world scorned to ask as a bounty what was justly due them as a right.

It may not be a vested right, as contended on this floor by the friend of the soldier, the gentleman from New York, but God save the old soldier from such friendship, for it is such friendship as this and from the same source that is compelling him to spend the remainder of his days in some poorhouse on account of a pension withheld, while these same friends are sending out letters to all the petty postmasters in the country trying to find some pretext for withholding his pension, or dropping him from the rolls, or materially reducing his pension already granted, and in most instances when this Department of the Government was in the hands of his true friends.

They publish this latter feat to the world as a reissue of pensions.

They have coined a new word, but it would be a deadly stab at the credit of the country to coin the silver bullion rusting in the vaults of the Treasury, and upon it issue silver certificates, and with these certificates, if short of other funds, pay to these brave defenders of our common country liberal pensions.

I think I can speak for a majority of the soldiers in my district and say they will not stand on the question of whether it is coined at the ratio of 15½ to 1 or 16½ to 1.

It will not go into the hands or coffers of foreign syndicates or bankers; there will be no semiannual interest to be paid and endanger our gold reserve, or more strictly speaking, our gold humbug, but it will flow out among the people and find its way back through the channels of trade and commerce into the Treasury of the Government.

We must either support a standing army in times of peace or adopt and honestly enforce a pension policy that will guarantee to the volunteer soldier a competence to him and his dependents when he is no longer able to earn the same.

A standing army not only has to be fed, paid, and clothed, but its members are taken out of the ranks of the producers of the country.

They are the drones of Europe and are eating up the substance of all the first-class powers of the Old World.

My choice of the two systems is already made. It is dictated by prudence, charity, and the common instincts of humanity, instincts common to all the human kind except the modern Democrat.

The act of 1890 is justified, supported, and fortified by all the above considerations, and yet it has been practically nullified, if the words and cases cited by honorable members of this House during the progress of this debate have a semblance of truth.

We have listened for three days to case after case, the name of the claimant and the number of his claim in most instances being given, of how the Pension Department, under the present management, does not grant a pension, and the flimsy excuses and subterfuges resorted to by it in order to reject the same, or if this is impossible, to hold it up, probably with the hope that while his claim is thus in chancery the old soldier will pay his last debt to nature instead of having the Government pay him his long overdue debt; how this Bureau exacts of him, and especially his widow, all kinds of impossible and frivolous proofs; how the sworn evidence of himself and his neighbor is, without warrant of law and contrary to all the known rules of evidence, cast aside, and the unsworn statement of a sneak, a spy, and often his bitter personal enemy, gathered and collected by persons called special pension examiners under circumstances of fraud and false pretenses, is used and accepted by this Department and relied upon, and his evidence cast aside as unworthy of belief; how from the very moment his application is filed he is looked upon and his every act and declaration is treated as an attempt by a dishonest person to wrong, injure, and cheat the Government he had fought to save.

I could cite to you many acts of cruelty, perfidy, and dishonor practiced by the agents of this Bureau upon the soldiers of my district that have come under my personal observation, and I assure you I am not, nor ever have been, a pension attorney. I never prosecuted or assisted in the prosecution of a single claim in my life—but of examples we have had enough.

But I can not refrain from reverting to the history of one pension claim and the peculiar methods of this Department, as evidenced by its action in the premises.

One of like kind, I believe, has not been mentioned in the long list referred to by the many speakers. I refer to the case of David B. Salts, a resident of my home town. I know this man well, and know him to be a brave and an honest man, though poor and broken down in health. He is one of the men who had his eyes opened in 1894, and this may have had something to do—I do not know, and will make no accusation—with his having been dropped from the pension rolls. I do know he was dropped in 1895. He was granted a pension in 1893 under the act of 1890 at the rate of $8 per month, as I now recall it, and dropped from the rolls in July, 1895. He holds an honorable discharge from the military service of the United States, having served in the First Tennessee Light Artillery from July, 1863, to the close of the war.

I wish I had this man, in his present physical condition and in the condition he was in when he was dropped from the rolls, here in Washington, so I could file him as a living exhibit with and in this Bureau; and his disabilities have not arisen from any vicious habits.

And what excuse do you imagine this Department offers for striking his name from the pension rolls? They informed him that he was dropped from the rolls because of disloyalty to the Union. It is true he served up to near the capture of Vicksburg in the Confederate army; and the records of the War Department show he deserted the Confederate army and at once joined the Union Army and made a good soldier to the end of the war.

What I do not understand is, that to have been a Confederate soldier, or the son of one, was an open passport to obtain employment in this Bureau, and the same fact deprives a man of a pension who deserted the Confederacy and made as good a Union soldier as ever wore a uniform or pointed a cannon.

I infer his desertion of the Confederate Army is the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the facts.

The truth is, this man was living in Greeneville, Tenn., and was notified that if he did not join the Confederate Army he would be conscripted, and you know that some people in those days were a little peculiar, and either did not want to hire a substitute or did not have the money to hire one, nor did they like to serve in the army as a drafted man. In fact, substitutes did not go in the Confederacy—they took them all, old and young, as recruits if they would, and if they would not, as drafted men.

Mr. Salts was one of these peculiar men, and being a stanch Union man deserted at the first opportunity and joined our forces in front of Vicksburg, and made a gallant soldier.

Some people in high places are not so peculiar in this particular, and hired a substitute and did their fighting at long range and entirely by proxy. Substitutes could be had in New York, and it is said certain persons availed themselves of the opportunity.

I do not believe there is a Confederate soldier on earth who would construe our pension laws so as to take away this man's pension. But the inspiration comes from other sources and from men who only fought by proxy.

In conclusion, I give this bill my hearty support, and only wish it went further and granted a pension to every man who had an honorable discharge from the Union Army, according to his necessities, and to this at last we will all come, and God speed the day.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If nobody else on our side of the Hall desires to speak and no gentleman on the other side desires to speak, I will move that the committee rise, because a number of gentlemen who desired to take part in the debate have left the Hall. They understood that the debate would continue during the balance of the day. There are a number of members who have expressed their desire to address the committee, but as they are not in the Hall I will move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, is this to continue to-morrow?

The CHAIRMAN. What was the inquiry?

Mr. PICKLER. Is the debate to continue to-morrow?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. We will take up the bill by paragraphs to-morrow if there are no other members who desire to address the committee.

Mr. PICKLER. If no one is ready I would like to have from five to ten minutes now on this matter.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his motion that the committee do now rise, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER].

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to detain the committee to make a speech upon this bill. The two propositions reported by the committee have been before the Committee on Invalid Pensions and discussed in an informal way. The proposition of the committee does not go far enough to suit us of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. We want that to be a permanent law, or something like that, and not confine it to the expenditures authorized by one appropriation bill. There has been so much said here in regard to the trouble in the Pension Office, and the difficulty in having pensions allowed, that it would not be improper for me to state to the committee that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have in an informal way had many of these propositions under consideration; and that later, as soon as we can hear from different committees who desire to address us on pension legislation, and hear from members of the House who have introduced bills upon these different subjects, it is the expectation of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to evolve a committee bill, a bill on the administration of the pension laws, a bill to facilitate, if possible, the allowance of pensions by changing the manner of proof in some instances, and in other directions trying to assist in rectifying some of the matters complained of here so earnestly at this time. In order that the committee may know some of the questions that are before the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I desire to have read from the desk a bill which I introduced and which was sent to that committee. That takes up the different subjects upon a large number of these points that have been covered in debate. Other gentlemen have introduced bills upon the same line, and the committee expects to take up all these bills and consider them together. Some of the bills introduced have a great deal better propositions than those which I have ingrafted in the bill I introduced. It is the calculation of the committee along the line of this suggestion, and others that may come from members of the House, to draft a bill upon the administration of the laws in the Pension Department, not seeking to present a bill containing any increase in pensions in any regard, but simply a bill to try to facilitate the allowance of pensions as they now exist under the law.

Now, I ask to have the bill read from the Clerk's desk in my time and as a part of my remarks, and I ask gentlemen to give it attention, because when it comes before them for consideration amendments will be in order, and I trust that we shall be able to perfect a measure which will facilitate the administration of the pension laws and do justice to the old soldiers.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to prevent discontinuance of pensions, to restore pensions discontinued, to establish uniform rates of pension, to facilitate the allowance of pensions in matters of proof, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That no person otherwise entitled to a pension by virtue of any law of the United States shall be disqualified from receiving the same by reason of any prior service of such person in the so-called Confederate army or navy during the war for the Union, nor shall the widow, children, or dependent relatives of such person be deprived of a right to pension by reason of such service.

SEC. 2. That hereafter, when proof of marriage shall be required in the administration of the pension laws of the United States, marriage may be proved without other evidence than satisfactory proof that the parties were joined in marriage by some ceremony deemed by them obligatory, or habitually recognized each other as husband and wife and were so recognized by their neighbors and lived together as such up to the date of enlistment when such soldier or sailor died in the service, or, if otherwise, to date of death; and the children born of any marriage so proved shall be deemed and held to be lawful children of such soldier or sailor.

SEC. 3. That from and after the passage of this act no pension heretofore granted or which may hereafter be granted under the pension laws of the United States shall be discontinued or reduced except for fraud.

SEC. 4. That all persons whose pensions have been reduced or discontinued, except for fraud, since March 4, 1893, shall be restored to the pension rolls at the rate the pensioner was receiving at the date of such reduction or discontinuance; said restoration to take effect as of said date, unless such pensioner shall at the time of the passage of this act be receiving a pension equal to or in excess of the amount received at the date of such reduction or discontinuance: Provided, That in case of the death of any such pensioner subsequently to the reduction or discontinuance of his pension, the accrued pension under this act shall be paid to his widow or heirs, in like manner as the same would have been paid had no reduction or discontinuance been made.

SEC. 5. That the common-law presumption of death after the lapse of seven years without news or tidings of the missing person shall obtain and be of force in the administration of the pension laws: Provided, That if such person shall afterwards be discovered to be alive, any pension that may have been granted on account of his death shall thereupon cease.

SEC. 6. That in all claims for pension or increase of pension wherein the person on whose service the claim was based was present with his proper command at the time when disabilities claimed for were incurred, the soldier, sailor, or marine shall be presumed to have been in line of duty, but such presumption may be rebutted: Provided, however, That the records of the War or Navy Department showing disabilities to have been incurred or contracted in line of duty shall be conclusive.

SEC. 7. That in all notifications from the Bureau of Pensions to the claimant, his attorney, or other person entitled to be informed of the status of a case, such notification shall set forth each and every fact upon which further evidence is required to complete the same and the character of evidence necessary to establish such fact.

SEC. 8. That every claimant for pension or increase under the pension laws shall have the right, in person or by attorney, to examine and inspect each and every paper, memorandum, writing, or thing, in any Department, bureau, division, court, or office of the United States, which has or may contain any reference, allusion to, or bearing upon the claim of such claimant.

SEC. 9. That in all applications for pension or increase, and evidence submitted in support of any claim under the pension laws of the United States, the oath of a person who has served as a private or noncommissioned officer shall not have any less weight than if such applicant or witness had served as a commissioned officer: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to require a greater number of witnesses than heretofore for the establishment of any fact in relation to such claim.

SEC. 10. That in considering the claim for pension of any soldier or sailor under the act entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890, a service of ninety days in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the war for the Union, and an honorable discharge therefrom, shall be sufficient to give title to pension under said act, notwithstanding a prior or subsequent service from which the soldier or sailor was not honorably discharged, and the service as shown in the discharge certificate shall be conclusive as determining enlistment and discharge: Provided, That the death of a soldier or sailor while in the service of the United States shall be construed and held as equivalent to an honorable discharge in determining title to pension in behalf of any person claiming under said act on account of the service of such soldier or sailor.

SEC. 11. That an application under said act of 1890 shall be sufficient, to all intents and purposes, if the applicant alleges therein the existence of disability which renders him unable to earn a support; and every disability found to exist which is recognized as pensionable under the general pension laws shall be taken into consideration in determining the degree of disability of such applicant, and the same rate of pension shall be allowed for the same disability as under the general laws, not to exceed $12 per month: Provided, That pensions heretofore allowed under said act at a rating less than herein provided shall be rerated, and the pensioner shall be paid from the time of failure to rate as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 12. That in all claims for pension or increase of pension under said act of 1890 the presumption shall be that the disabilities alleged are not the result of vicious habits; but such presumption may be rebutted: Provided, however, That the pension shall be allowed unless it shall conclusively appear from the evidence that the disabilities proved are the result of the vicious habits established by the evidence.

SEC. 13. That upon the rejection of a claim for pension under said act of 1890, on the ground of no pensionable degree of disability, the applicant shall not be required to file a new or supplemental declaration, but on filing in his case the sworn statement of a reputable physician that a pensionable degree of disability does in fact exist, an order for the applicant's examination, before another board of surgeons if desired, shall issue; and in case such board reports the existence of a pensionable disability the pension, when allowed, shall commence from the date of filing the application rejected as aforesaid.

SEC. 14. That the term "without other means of support than her daily labor," in section 3 of said act of 1890, shall be construed and held, to all intents and purposes, to be equivalent to and mean "without an income of $200 per annum."

SEC. 15. That in the administration of the pension laws the acceptance into the military or naval service of the United States shall be conclusive evidence of soundness, except where it appears of record that the disability claimed for existed at time of such acceptance.

SEC. 16. That in the administration of the pension laws in cases of doubt the presumption shall be in favor of the claimant.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to add that in the bill which we hope to pass all of these points, or most of them at least, will be covered, and any other propositions that may occur to members as tending to improve the bill and to facilitate the allowance of pensions should be brought before the committee and the House, so that we may have a general consideration of this whole subject; that every member who desires to be heard may have an opportunity to be heard and an opportunity to offer amendments, so that when the bill is passed it may be one that will give substantial aid in administering the pension laws of the country.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman whether, in his opinion, the proper way to legislate on these pension questions is not to bring in a bill from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, rather than to put "riders" upon appropriation bills?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not care to answer that question.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Dakota if he has any expectation that the bill which he has had read here in his time will ever come before the House in such shape as to give members an opportunity to vote upon it?

Mr. PICKLER. I certainly do.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Under the rules of the House is it not true that it will be almost impossible to reach that result unless the Committee on Rules will bring in a special rule?

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir. This bill does not appropriate any money, and the Committee on Invalid Pensions is a privileged committee, so I do not see how it would be possible to cut us off from having our bills considered. Besides, I do not doubt that if necessary the Committee on Rules would be very glad to give the House an opportunity to discuss such a bill.

Mr. DALZELL. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. PICKLER. One of the members of the Committee on Rules sitting near me says there is no doubt of it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Do you think that the gentleman who sits at the other end of the Avenue would like to sign that bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether he would or not. It is presumed that every public officer will do his duty, but, however that may be, we certainly ought to do our duty whether he does his or not. [Applause.] I am in favor of passing such a bill as will meet the views of this House to remedy the evils that have been set forth here, if we possibly can pass it, and I am glad of the debate that has been provoked by these amendments on the appropriation bill. I am glad of this discussion, because it shows that there is a growing need for some legislation that will deal properly with this question of granting pensions.

Mr. STEELE. I want to ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] whether he does not think that the safe and wise thing for us to do is to pass the amendments that have been reported on this appropriation bill?

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, yes. I always vote for pension legislation, I do not care what kind of a bill it is on. [Laughter.] I do not think there has ever been an appropriation bill brought in here carrying an appropriation for pensions to which I have not offered amendments myself.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I want to say to the gentleman from South Dakota that my purpose in asking him these questions was, if possible, to demonstrate the fact that we had better adopt these amendments reported on this appropriation bill and make sure of something when we can get it instead of taking our chances on an uncertainty. I approve the provisions of the bill which the gentleman has had read from the desk, but at the same time I think we ought to pass these amendments now.

Mr. PICKLER. If the amendments stand in your bill against the point of order, if any point should be raised—and it certainly will not be raised on this side—I shall cheerfully vote for them, although they are not strong enough. Those provisions ought to apply not only to the appropriations made in this bill, but they ought to be the law for all time.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I concede that they are not strong enough, but they are better than the rulings of the Pension Office. They are an improvement on the present order of things.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; they touch two points. The first question they deal with is the widow question, which is a very important one; yet I think there are other pension questions deserving of as much consideration.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There is no controversy between the gentleman from South Dakota and myself. I approve of every part of his bill, but I think there would be grave danger in letting these amendments go and waiting for action on the bill which the gentleman proposes to bring up. I think we had better take what we can while waiting for a better and more comprehensive bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want it to be inferred that I am not in favor of these amendments in the pending bill. The Committee on Appropriations are "stealing the thunder" of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [laughter], but it is all right. It will be observed, however, that the amendatory provisions reported by the Committee on Appropriations refer only to the appropriations made for the coming fiscal year. Now, what we want is that the two questions embraced in those amendments of the Committee on Appropriations, together with twenty other questions of similar importance, shall be put into a general bill which shall become a law for all time. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether, if I move that the provisions incorporated in his bill be made permanent in their application, he will accept the amendment?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If the gentleman will first make sure that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole will sustain the provisions against any point of order which may be raised, I would be glad to accept the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. PICKLER. I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not sure that these amendments of his committee will stay in the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. We are sure of nothing in this world. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I observe that in the bill just sent to the desk by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] there is in the twelfth section a provision that—

> In all claims for pension or increase of pension under said act of 1890 the presumption shall be that the disabilities alleged are not the result of vicious habits; but such presumption may be rebutted.

Now, I wish to ask the gentleman why in the latter part of the section there should be a provision for reviving a presumption which the anterior portion wipes out and expunges?

Mr. PICKLER. The record might show evidence of the existence of such habits. The effect of this provision is that the existence of the "vicious habits" must appear affirmatively in evidence.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. But in the first part of the section you provide that the presumption now raised against the applicant shall be done away with, and then the section proceeds further to enact that "such presumption may be rebutted." If the former portion of the section takes effect there is no such presumption in existence.

Mr. PICKLER. All those matters will come up for discussion when this measure is regularly considered. I am very glad the gentleman raises the question. I wish to say in this connection that we want to secure such a change of ruling over in the Pension Office that the excessive use of tobacco shall not be construed as a "vicious habit." I have before me a decision where that ground has been taken.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to detain the Committee of the Whole with any discussion at this time upon the pending bill; but a suggestion of my colleague [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] has raised a question upon which I have had some little feeling since I have been a member of this Congress and the last. I refer to my colleague's allusion just now to what might be the views of the President of the United States. Sir, under the long established parliamentary law it has always been regarded as an invasion of the prerogatives of Parliament for anyone to refer in its discussions to the opinion of the King upon any question pending before it.

A MEMBER. Is Mr. Cleveland "the king"?

Mr. GROW. In reference to matters of this kind he occupies the same relation to the Houses of Congress that the sovereign in Great Britain does to Parliament. The President exercises the veto power; and if we do not have on any given measure the two-thirds necessary to overcome his veto, he is so far the king.

In the last Congress we had before us on one occasion a bill headed "The bill of the Secretary of the Treasury." What has that officer to do with presenting any bill to this House? We have had here attempts by the Secretaries of the different Departments to influence legislation. They have sent in here letters to be read with reference to pending measures; and in one case a letter was read here from the President of the United States having reference to a measure then pending in the House and just about to be voted on. I trust such practices will be discontinued.

This House owes it to itself to make the President understand that he has nothing to do with the action of this legislative body until a bill formally passed is presented to him for his approval. [Applause.] Only in that contingency has he the right to express his approval or disapproval of our action. Nor has any one of the heads of Departments, except the Secretary of the Treasury, the right to communicate his views uninvited to this House. That officer may report to this body on important questions affecting the revenues; but when he sends here a bill headed "The bill of the Secretary of the Treasury" the House owes it to itself to return that bill to him and inform him that he can not invade in that way the prerogatives of this body any more than can the President of the United States by having a letter read here just on the eve of a vote on an important measure.

I am well aware that the majority of this House to-day would take no orders from the present Executive; it is not in that view that I am raising this question. I simply submit that the legislative department of this Government owes it to itself to resent any attempt on the part of the Executive or his clerks to influence the vote of this House on pending legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, before moving that the committee rise I wish to state that unless there are other members who desire to speak in the general debate on this bill we shall in the morning take it up by paragraphs, and a vote will be reached as soon thereafter as practicable. I make this announcement so that members may understand that probably the vote may be reached to-morrow, and in view of that possibility I hope to see more members in their seats than there are now.

Mr. STEELE. There will be no attempt to prevent members from discussing the bill under the five-minute rule?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not if there is anybody who wants to speak. I understand that there are gentlemen wishing to speak who are not here now, but who will be here in the morning. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DINGLEY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3537) making appropriation for payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (at 4 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker, as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 16, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

TITLES OF NOBILITY.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a matter that occurred yesterday. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations reported back the bill (S. 654) to prevent citizens of the United States from soliciting or receiving and accepting titles, patents of nobility, or degrees of honor from foreign nations, and for other purposes, with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, which was agreed to. I was in the Chamber during the entire morning hour, but owing to the confusion which usually characterizes the transaction of business in the Senate I did not hear the report submitted by the Senator from Ohio, and did not know of it until I read the paper last evening. It is my desire to have the bill placed upon the Calendar, so that it may come up and be discussed and acted upon by the full Senate, and not by the committee alone. The Senater from Ohio in making the report said:

> The committee are of opinion that it is hardly worth while to dignify with the form of legislation the fact that some American citizens receive titles from a foreign government; that they ought to be laughed at rather than be sent to the penitentiary for a crime.

I do not believe that the American people think that way. I believe the patriotic people, the true American citizens of this country want to see a law passed by Congress that will punish as a crime any man who may accept a title or patent of nobility from a foreign government. I hope the Senator who had charge of this measure will permit an order to be made this morning placing the bill upon the Calendar for consideration. I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not the slightest objection to the course suggested. If the Senator desires, he has a right to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing that it shall be placed upon the Calendar. It was the opinion of the committee uttered by me, and I am surprised that the Senator did not hear my statement.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I spoke loud enough to call the attention of the Senate to the bill. I saw the Senator from Nebraska in his place and looking at me, and I supposed as a matter of course he heard what I said. However, I have no objection to the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed being reconsidered and having it placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. ALLEN. I was surprised that the Senator did not call my attention to the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought the Senator heard me.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no doubt the Senator thought so; but in consequence of the confusion in the Chamber I did not hear the Senator. I should like to have an order made placing the bill on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

STATE WAR CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 28, 1895, a report from the Auditor for the War Department as to the amounts due the several States, from the claims now on file in the Treasury Department under act of July 27, 1861, for expenses incurred in raising troops, as provided for by the order of the Secretary of the Treasury of February 8, 1893; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3018) to amend the act approved March 3, 1891, granting the right of way upon the public lands for reservoir and canal purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PEFFER. I present the petition of Rev. A. M. Campbell, of Catasauqua, Pa., representing an association known as the American Anti-Usury Association, suggesting a means to abolish usury. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN presented sundry affidavits and petitions of members of the Santee Sioux tribe of Indians, of Nebraska, praying for the payment of annuities withheld from them by reason of alleged participation in the outbreak at Redwood Agency in the year 1862; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SEWELL presented petitions of Monroe Lane and 18 other citizens of New Bedford; of Thomas W. Ross and 53 other citizens of Vincentown; of Charles A. Morris and 18 other citizens of Hamilton; of E. C. White and 33 other citizens of Glendola; of A. A. Tilton and 75 other citizens of Monmouth, and of L. L. Hansell and 44 other citizens of Jersey City, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the passage of the so-called William A. Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Society of the United States Military Telegraph Corps, praying that they be granted by the Government the same recognition for their services in the late war as is given to the soldiers who served in the Regular Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN presented sundry petitions of citizens of Hannibal, Andover, and Middletown, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called William A. Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Ministerial Association of Troy, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation in the interest of morality; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of Given Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Wooster, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions in certain cases to families or relatives of pensioners instead of to the pensioners themselves; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GRAY presented a memorial of the Delaware Peace Society, remonstrating against the enactment of any legislation which is designed or is liable to encourage wars and warlike movements, whether internal or foreign; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SQUIRE. I present a petition of the Pastors' Union of the city of Snohomish, Wash., comprising the resident pastors of the Evangelical churches in that city, urging upon Congress the passage of the resolution relative to giving relief to the Armenian people of Asiatic Turkey. The petitioners go on to recite that the massacre of guiltless thousands, the outraging of helpless women, selling into slavery innocent girls, the total destruction of the homes and the necessities of life of vast multitudes can not find a parallel short of the darkest days of the Middle Ages. They urge that the great Governments should unite for their suppression, and if diplomatic methods can not avail that they then invoke the arbitrament of force.

I call attention to the following passages in the petition proceeding, as it does, from the churches of Snohomish: These pastors ask that Congress insist that the Executive protect our American missionaries in Turkey, and the property which they hold for mission and educational work, and for personal comfort and good. They also ask that the Government extend to Cubans, struggling for liberty, the rights of belligerents and recognition at the earliest moment when their achievements shall show that they are entitled to it.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. I also present a petition of citizens of Mason County, State of Washington, representing that the chief industries of the Pacific Coast, agriculture and horticulture, are to a great degree unremunerative and threatened with extinction for lack of cheap means of transportation to Eastern and European markets. The petitioners state that they are handicapped by the distance of nearly 10,000 miles in their competition with agriculturists in the Argentine Republic. They represent that the construction of the interoceanic ship canal at Nicaragua would enable them to compete with Argentina, and make their industries again prosperous and profitable. Therefore the petitioners, with the utmost earnestness, pray that Congress shall take immediate steps to secure the construction of the Nicaraguan Canal in a manner as rapid as modern engineering shall permit.

I move that the petition be referred to the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. I also present a petition of sundry citizens of San Juan County, in the State of Washington, expressing their belief that Senate bill 735, entitled "A bill to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy, to increase the usefulness and numbers of the Corps of Naval Engineers, to induce the scientific institutions to provide a naval engineering reserve for time of war, to establish a naval engineering experimental station, and to encourage the study of the mechanic arts and sciences, and particularly that of naval engineering, in the technological colleges of the country," is of the highest importance for the prosperity of that State and of the United States, and the petitioners urge that the bill be made a law. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE presented a memorial of representatives of the Religious Society of Friends for Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware to the President and Congress of the United States, on the dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela relative to the boundary of the latter and the intervention of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation providing a service pension of $12 a month to each ex-Union soldier who has been honorably discharged from the service when he shall have arrived at the age of 60 years; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of Henry P. Fritot and sundry other citizens of Jacksonville, Fla., praying for a speedy recognition as belligerents of the Cuban patriots in their struggle for freedom; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. VILAS presented petitions of H. C. Rogers and 80 other citizens of Wisconsin; of Frank Patterson and 13 other citizens of Stevens Point, Wis.; of C. H. Tenant and 37 other citizens of Oshkosh, Wis.; of E. D. Bentley and 29 other citizens of Stevens Point, Wis.; of S. L. Priser and 14 other citizens of Stevens Point, Wis.; of A. E. Chase and 49 other citizens of Oshkosh, Wis., and of C. H. Crittenden and 15 other citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. THURSTON. I present a resolution of the house of representatives of the State of Nebraska, praying that on the abandonment of Fort Omaha as a military post it be granted and conveyed to the State of Nebraska, on condition that the State convert it into a military academy and maintain it as such at State expense. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GEAR presented a memorial of the representatives of the Religious Society of Friends for Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware to the President and Congress of the United States, on the dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela relative to the boundary of the latter and the intervention of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of E. H. Robbins and sundry other citizens of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Skagit County, Wash., praying for the improvement of the Skagit River, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LINDSAY presented sundry petitions of citizens of Owensboro, Ky., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 502) to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas, to report it without amendment and submit a report thereon. I ask that the report, together with the agreement and the report attached as an appendix, be printed, and that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar and the report printed, as suggested.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1450) to reconvene the delegates of the United States to the International Marine Conference of 1889, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1423) to protect the wages of seamen, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 248) granting a pension to Martha Allen, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 549) for relief of William Martin, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on the Census, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 47) relating to the Federal census, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CAFFERY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1230) to extend the limits of the port of entry of New Orleans, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 227) to permit the withdrawal of certain papers and the signing of certain receipts by John Finn or his attorney, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 535) for the relief of William A. Starkweather, of Oregon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 82) for the relief of the heirs of James Bridger, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 529) for the relief of Peter Grant Stewart, of Oregon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 709) for the relief of W. L. Adams, of Oregon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am authorized by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 43) directing the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act making appropriations for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds and for the printing and distribution of farmers' bulletins, to report it with an amendment.

I will state that two members of the committee, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] desire to be recorded as opposed to the joint resolution.

I will state, further, that yesterday the honorable Secretary of Agriculture appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and was heard on this measure, and that as soon as the report of the hearing can be printed and laid upon the desks of Senators I shall ask for the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1046) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf Railroad Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1893, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CHILTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 879) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant to the Gainesville, McAlester and St. Louis Railroad Company a right of way through the Indian Territory," reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 1586) for the relief of Mary Sharp College, of Winchester, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 1587) granting a pension to John D. Carpenter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1588) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John D. Carpenter; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1593) for the relief of Meyer B. Haas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1594) granting a pension to Maria L. Meserve; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1595) granting a pension to William H. H. Walker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1596) for the relief of H. K. Palmer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1597) for the relief of William H. Tibbits; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 1598) for the relief of Richard L. Taylor, late private Company F, Fifty-first Illinois Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 1599) to place Francis W. Seeley on the retired list of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1600) to amend chapter 67, volume 23, of the Statutes at Large of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 1601) for the relief of W. R. Albright; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1602) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Jane L. Fagg, widow of Col. John A. Fagg; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GRAY (for Mr. JONES of Arkansas) introduced a bill (S. 1603) for the relief of Henry P. Grant, of Phillips County, Ark.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 1604) for the relief of John A Fairfax, of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1605) for the relief of the administrator of the estate of John Kelly, deceased, late of Alleghany County, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1606) for the relief of Mrs. C. N. Graves, widow, etc.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 1607) for the relief of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHOUP introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 55) relative to the medal of honor authorized by the acts of July 12, 1862, and March 3, 1863; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TENNESSEE STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. R. 2) providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the United States against the State of Tennessee and certain claims of the State of Tennessee against the United States; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THOMAS W. SPARROW, N. B. NOLAND, AND OTHERS.

Mr. DANIEL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate all information which has been received by him or by the Department of State in reference to the claims of Thomas W. Sparrow, N. B. Noland, and others, members of the hydrographic commission employed by the Government of Peru in 1872, against that Government for services on said commission, with the correspondence and documents bearing on the subject.

RIGHTS OF CITIZENS OF ARMENIAN BIRTH.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate, if consistent with the public interests:

First. Whether naturalized citizens of the United States of Armenian birth are allowed to visit Turkey on business or to visit their families, and whether United States passports held by them are recognized by the Turkish Government.

Secondly. Whether the families of such naturalized citizens, residing in Turkey, are permitted to leave that country and come to the United States. Also, whether naturalized citizens of the United States of Armenian birth have the same rights and protection in that country as have naturalized citizens of Great Britain, France, Germany, or Russia.

HEARINGS BY COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. FRYE. I submit a resolution which under the rule will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had on bills pending before said committee, and to have the same printed for the use of the committee, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

WAR IN CUBA.

Mr. CALL. I submit a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to send to the Senate the dispatches of the consuls of the United States relating to the war now carried on in Cuba.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. FRYE. It seems to me the form of the resolution should be somewhat changed. It is a direction to the Secretary of State. I think it should be in the form of a request that the information shall be communicated if not incompatible with the public interests.

Mr. CALL. I accept the suggestion, though I do not see any reason for it. It seems to me that the Senate ought to command whatever information is in the State Department which may, in the judgment of the Senate, be deemed advisable. If it be desired to communicate the information in confidence, I have no objection to so modifying the resolution, but I think it should stand as it is unless objection is made by the Department to sending in the information.

I do not know that there is any information on the subject of importance. I have had no information from the State Department, but I have been informed by a person much interested in Cuban affairs, who has been in conference with some members of Congress, that there are such dispatches, and that they are known to some persons in Cuba, and it may be to the Spanish authorities. I know of no reason why Senators, charged with the responsibility, with the Representatives, of making war or preserving peace, of making treaties or rejecting them, should not have access to all state papers.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is very doubtful whether even the President ought to be called upon to disclose matters pending in respect to a country which is in a state of civil war evidently of great proportions, extending to every part of the Island of Cuba. To call for the information which is communicated by consuls and even by citizens of the United States to the executive authority might create embarrassment. It might cause even the killing of persons who gave the information on either side. They might be arrested for treason if they were on one side; on the other, they might be arrested for interfering with the progress of the rebels, as they are called.

I think we ought not to ask for the information. Certainly if it is asked for it ought to be requested from the President, with the usual condition that he should communicate it only in case it does not interfere with the public interests. I think, though, that it would be better, and that the Senator from Florida must see that in an inquiry of this kind an exposure of the communications made perhaps in confidence would not be wise. It would not be safe to the persons who sent the communications, and it might be injurious in every way.

Mr. CALL. If there be objection I will allow the resolution to lie over, though it seems to me that if any authority in this country ought to have the information upon this subject which is in the State Department, it ought to be the Senate. If it is necessary that it should be sent in confidence, it might be sent in confidence. It is my desire to have immediate action on the part of the Congress of the United States in regard to the recognition of the Cuban Republic and according to it belligerent rights, and I shall ask at an early day for a vote of the Senate, if the Committee on Foreign Relations does not think fit to report the resolution, discharging the committee, and asking that the sense of the Senate be taken upon the question whether the people of Cuba shall have recognition in their resistance to the tyranny that is now imposed upon them.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I should like to be heard for a single moment upon the question after the remarks made by the Senator from Florida. I have heard a great deal during this session from the Senator to the effect that it was the duty of Congress to take some action with reference to the recognition of the insurgents in Cuba as belligerents, but I had supposed that that was a matter, primarily at least, for the executive branch of the Government, and not for Congress. I think in the whole history of the country there has never been an instance in which Congress has passed any resolution whatever upon the subject of declaring neutrality as between contending parties in other countries, but that in every instance where it has been done in the United States it has been done by the proclamation of the President.

I do not know that the President is open to any censure for not having already communicated to Congress the facts with reference to the conflict going on in Cuba. I should suppose, however, that if Congress took any action upon the subject and expressed an opinion upon it, it would be in the nature of a criticism upon the President for having failed to do his duty in this respect. Certainly the whole subject lies primarily with the President.

Recognition of the insurgents as belligerents is not a matter which is due to them, but it is a question which pertains solely to the interests of the United States. If a proclamation of neutrality were issued—which is the only way in which belligerent rights are recognized—for the purpose of moral support or for the purpose of expressing sympathy with the people struggling to throw off a monarchical form of government alone, it would be considered, and justly considered under international law, as an unfriendly act to the parent Government.

I think we had better go a little slowly about this business, Mr. President. We in this country sympathize naturally with every people that is seeking to establish a republican form of government, but I think that we ought not to rush hastily into a matter of according belligerent rights to such a people. We ought to observe the rules which have been laid down by international comity with reference to such matters.

I should be very sorry to see any resolution passed here which in any way would indicate that the President of the United States and the State Department were not doing all that that branch of the Government ought to do with reference to the conflict now pending in a neighboring foreign country.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not desire to say more than a word. The proposition of the Senator from Connecticut is a subject which will properly come up for consideration before the Senate when the resolution shall be acted upon, and I will not therefore discuss it, though I differ entirely in opinion with him. But for the purpose of avoiding any further debate on this subject, I will consent that the resolution may lie on the table for future action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table for the present.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. SEWELL. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read for information, printed, and lie on the table. I give notice that I shall at an early day submit a few remarks upon the resolution.

The resolution was read, and ordered to be printed and lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Monroe doctrine, as originally propounded, was directed to the special prevention of the threatened action of the allied powers in reference to the revolted colonies of Spain and the occupation, by way of colonization, of any supposed derelict territory on this hemisphere.

2. That the question of resisting any acquisition of territory by conquest was limited, as stated by Mr. Webster, to cases in which, by reason of proximity, such acquisition would be dangerous to our safety and the integrity of our institutions.

3. That the true ground upon which the Monroe announcement was based and upon which any similar position has been taken rests for its justification upon what may be our interests, and our interests only; and that neither by the Monroe doctrine, nor any other official declaration, have we ever come under any pledge to any power or State on this continent that binds us to act merely for their protection against invasion or encroachment by any other power.

4. That when a case arises in which a European power proposes to acquire territory by invasion or conquest, it is then for us to determine whether our safety and the integrity of our institutions demand that we shall resist such action by armed force if necessary.

5. That the Executive has pressed the Monroe doctrine beyond what was contemplated at the time of its announcement, and that the resultant sequence of the positions thus taken seems to be a committal of this Government to a protectorate over Mexico and the Central and South American States; that this would be most unwise and dangerous, and would violate the sound and well-established policy that we should avoid all entangling alliances with foreign powers, whether they be European or American.

6. That this action was premature, looking to the history of the controversy, and inopportune in view of the business and financial condition of the country.

7. That neither Congress nor the country can be, or has been committed by the action or position of the executive department, in reference to the Venezuelan boundary controversy, as to the course to be pursued when the time shall have arrived for a final determination. It will then be our province and our duty to adopt such a line of policy and to take such action as may be then demanded by our sense of duty to the country and by a due regard for its honor and dignity, the welfare and safety of our people, and the integrity of our institutions.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3018) to amend the act approved March 3, 1891, granting the right of way upon the public lands for reservoir and canal purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AFFAIRS.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, there are lying upon the table several resolutions heretofore offered by me, which, by unanimous consent, were allowed to retain their places, one of them asking for certain information from the District Commissioners desired by the labor organizations of the District. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] some time ago asked to have the resolution lie over until the succeeding day. I suppose he has no objection to its passage at this time.

Mr. HARRIS. The only objection I can urge against the resolution, as it simply asks for information, is that if passed it will involve an immense amount of clerical labor that I hardly think ought to be devoted to the collection and presentation of the information sought. I shall, however, interpose no objection to the resolution.

Mr. CALL. I will only say that the information is desired by labor organizations, as I am informed, and I have presented the resolution at their request. Certainly they ought to be informed as to the taxes and expenditures proposed to be made for public improvements in the District. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL December 24, 1895, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and are hereby, directed to furnish, as soon as practicable, for the information of the Senate, a statement showing—

First. The names of all streets, avenues, alleys, and reservations in the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown which are partially or wholly unpaved, and the total length thereof so unpaved; also the length thereof unsewered; also the length thereof without water mains, together with the estimated cost of fully improving the same.

Second. An estimate of the full amount required to carry out the provisions of the act of March 2, 1893, to provide a permanent system of highways in the District of Columbia outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; the total number of feet of land in streets, avenues, and reservations required to be condemned in each subdivision or piece of land and the value of the same; the number and estimated value of buildings required to be condemned to carry out the provisions of said act in such districts as are prepared by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; the total number of feet of land in streets, avenues, etc., in each subdivision or piece of land that will be abandoned, and the amount and nature of improvements of such streets, avenues, etc., the amount of said improvements at public and private expense. Also an estimate of the cost of fully improving said streets, avenues, and reservations by grading, paving, sewering, and laying water mains, building bridges, culverts, etc., in such streets, avenues, and reservations as are to be condemned by the provisions of said highway act; an estimate of the value of property held by the United States, and the assessed value of private property held in the county, outside of Washington and Georgetown.

Third. A statement showing the amount of taxes collected in the cities of Washington and Georgetown and the county, respectively, by years, from 1878 to 1894, both inclusive, and in like manner the amount expended in each of said sections by the District of Columbia for the same period.

Fourth. The amount of the revenues of the District of Columbia applied by the Treasurer of the United States to liquidate any undue debt of the District of Columbia to the United States or other parties from 1878 to 1895 and from what fund taken and to what debt applied, and if any of such revenue has been refunded and the amount and time of such refunding; an estimate of the amount of the revenues of the District of Columbia that will remain above the appropriation asked for at the end of the years 1895 and 1896.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

TELEGRAPHIC CABLES IN THE PACIFIC OCEAN.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill No. 1316, which I introduced a few days ago, may be taken from the table and laid before the Senate, as I desire to submit, not at great length, some remarks upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill referred to by the Senator from Maine, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1316) to facilitate the construction and maintenance of telegraphic cables in the Pacific Ocean for the use of the Government in its foreign intercourse.

Mr. HALE. The bill has not been read. I ask that it be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator desire to discuss the bill?

Mr. HALE. I desire to submit some remarks after the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read the bill:

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the bill which is now before the Senate involves not only a question of sentiment touching our relations with a foreign people, but embodies a plain business enterprise which, if undertaken by the United States, increases our communication with the Hawaiian Islands, bringing them and their affairs, by the electric current, close to our doors, and enabling us to act as our constituted authorities may deem wise, on the happening of any significant event in what were formerly known as the Sandwich Islands.

Its consideration raises none of the domestic controversies in Hawaii during the past three years, which so occupied the attention of Congress and of the American people, but looks straight ahead to the accomplishment of a purpose which is much more in the domain of the real and the practical than the sentimental.

The subject of our relations with the Hawaiian people, under whatever form of government they have lived, for the last forty years has never been long absent from the interest and consideration of the people of the United States. Bright, keen, strong, and accomplished men have gone out from us and made their homes in these islands, and have there lived and prospered and come to be leading figures in the land where they have fixed their new homes. They have acquired land, built up estates, intermarried and reared families, and have, at times, held the highest offices under the Government.

It is safe to say that during these forty years the leading sentiment in the Hawaiian Islands has looked to the United States for interest and friendship, rather than to any other country, and that this, and no other, has been regarded by this people as the mother country. Trade between us and them has largely increased, and the current business between the two countries has been mutually profitable to each.

I give the following comparative statement of the number of American vessels and the amount of tonnage arriving at the principal seaports of the world for the year ended June 30, 1894, compiled from statistics in the Bureau of Navigation:

Port.	Number of vessels.	Tonnage arriving.
Antwerp	19	45,024
Bombay	No report
Bremen	No report
Calcutta	None
Hamburg	2	4,350
Havre	10	16,453
Hongkong	79	137,473
Honolulu	165	146,993
Liverpool	43	*92,932
Manila	10	13,591
Rio Janeiro	64	46,310
Southampton	29	*177,573
Sydney, New South Wales	29	33,568
Valparaiso	10	9,264
Yokohama (Kanagawa)	65	*165,074

*The amount of tonnage is augmented at these three ports by regular lines of American steamers. At Liverpool by the Ohio and Indiana, running regularly between that port and Philadelphia; at Southampton by the steamships New York and Paris; at Yokohama by four large steamships of the Pacific Mail Steamship Line.

(See pages 87, 88, Report of Commissioner of Navigation, 1894.)

Statement of the nationality, number, and aggregate tonnage of vessels arriving at the ports of the Hawaiian Islands for the year ended December 31, 1893. (From the Annual Report of the Hawaiian Collector of General Customs.)

Nationality.	Number of vessels.	Aggregate tonnage.
American	238	181,817
Hawaiian	*23	15,759
British	58	†111,655
German	5	5,062
Japanese	4	7,167
Other nationalities	2	2,245

*Owned almost entirely by Americans.

†The greater part of this tonnage represents calling steamships of transpacific lines; those of the Canadian Pacific Company, running between Vancouver and Yokohama; the Occidental and Oriental, between San Francisco and the same port, and a chartered British steamer in the Oceanic Line, from San Francisco to Sydney, New South Wales.

These islands are set, like precious gems, in the middle of the sea, and have been looked upon with greedy eyes by other nations than ours who have, from time to time, sought to establish an influence with the people or the Government of the Hawaiians, which efforts, if successful, would involve nothing but detriment to us.

I propose to give, at no great length, some of the events which touch our relations with the Hawaiian Islands and which bring their history down to the present moment as affecting the objects of the bill before the Senate.

In the last forty years, Mr. President, wherever intercourse and business relations have been maintained between one country and another, the laying of submarine cables as a means of facilitating such business and intercourse has been constantly going on upon the beds of rivers, lakes, bays, gulfs, and oceans in every continent. So marked and beneficent have been the results of these submarine cables that, aside from what has been done by private and corporate enterprise, many of the nations of the world have undertaken the laying of these cable lines, either by assuming governmentally the whole cost and maintenance and ownership of the lines, or by liberal subsidies to companies which but for such aid could not afford the cost of these enterprises.

I have here a list showing the number of cables and the governments by which they are owned or subsidized, and it may be a surprise to Senators, as it was to me, to find how many of these lines, both long and short, have been fostered and aided or absolutely owned by the different nations of the world.

I give here first a list of ocean cables owned and operated by different governments:

Ocean cables owned and operated by governments.

Country.	Number of cables.	Country.	Number of cables.
Austria	31	Great Britain (international)	9
Belgium	2	England and France (jointly)	6
Spain	2	England and Belgium (jointly)	2
Italy	34	British India	93
Germany (internal)	43	Canada	22
Germany (international)	3	Queensland	13
Greece	46	South Australia	5
France	50	New Zealand	3
Denmark	40	Tasmania	1
Norway	255	Victoria	1
Holland	18	Turkey	10
Russia	7	Japan	19
Sweden	7	Netherland Indies	4
Senegal	1
Cochin China and Tonquin	2	Total number	754
Brazil	15
Argentina	1
Great Britain and Ireland (internal)	102

The number of cables maintained partly by government assistance and which would be impracticable without such assistance is much greater.

I give next a list of subsidies granted by the British Government alone for submarine telegraph cables. They embrace subsidies aggregating £90,100 per annum, about $450,000 in our money, and cover lines to an extent in all nearly 10,000 miles:

Particulars of subsidy granted by the British Government for submarine telegraph cables.

Date.	To whom granted.	Amount of subsidy per annum.	Term.	For what cable.	Length (nautical miles).
			Years.
1879	Eastern Telegraph Co. and Telegraph Construction Co.	£17,500	20	Natal-Zanzibar	1,943
	do	17,500	20	Zanzibar-Aden	1,908
1886	Eastern Telegraph Co. and Brazilian Submarine Telegraph Co.	19,000	20	St. Vincent and West African ports to the Niger.	2,740
1889	International Cable Co.	8,100	20	Halifax-Bermuda	850
1893	Eastern and South African Telegraph Co.	14,000	20	Zanzibar-Seychelles.	1,119
	do	14,000	20	Seychelles-Mauritius.	1,064

The subsidies granted to the Eastern Extension Australia and China Telegraph Company, Limited, amount to nearly $300,000 per annum, as shown by the following table:

Particulars of subsidy arrangements made with Eastern Extension Australia and China Telegraph Company, Limited.

Government granting subsidy.	Amount of subsidy per annum.	Term.	For what purpose.	Length of cable in question.
		Years.		Knots.
Victoria, New South Wales, South Australia, Western Australia, Tasmania.	£32,400	20	For duplicating cables between Penang and Australia.	2,500
New Zealand, New South Wales.	7,500	10	For laying and working cable between New South Wales and New Zealand.	1,283
Tasmania	4,200	40	For connecting Victoria with Tasmania by submarine cable.	182
France	10,600	20	For laying and maintaining submarine cable connecting Cape St. James (Cochin China) with Haiphong (Tonquin).	774
Spain	48,000	10	For laying and working cable from Hongkong to Cape Boliano (Island of Luzon).	555
Portugal	500	10	For connecting Hongkong with Macao.	41

Mr. FRYE. Can my colleague state what that would average a mile?

Mr. HALE. I have not made the figures that my colleague asks for, but Great Britain gives the Eastern Telegraphic Company, which has a cable of 1,943 nautical miles, a subsidy of $85,000 annually; she gives to the Northern Construction Telegraph Company another subsidy of 17,500 pounds sterling, or $85,000, for twenty years for another line of 1,908 miles.

Mr. FRYE. Will my colleague give me the figures for the 10,000 miles?

Mr. HALE. About $450,000.

Mr. FRYE. That would make an average of about $45 per mile.

Mr. HALE. Yes; $45 per mile annually.

Mr. FRYE. I suppose, of course, the calculations are based on nautical miles in all cases.

Mr. HALE. They are all reckoned in nautical miles.

Besides this, Great Britain and her colonies give to a single company, the Eastern Extension Australia and China Telegraph Company, Limited, the amount of nearly $300,000 per annum, lines that aggregate nearly 5,000 miles, to a single company for this method of communication with her colonies. This includes subsidies by outlying provinces of Great Britain, and also two or three lesser items to the same company by France, Spain, and Portugal.

Mr. FRYE. Does my colleague know whether under these subsidies Great Britain has the privilege of sending her messages free?

Mr. HALE. There is an arrangement, but what the terms of it are I do not know. My recollection of my reading upon the subject is that they vary with different companies. The present arrangement provides that the Government messages may be sent free over this line.

With one exception, these lines have been laid in the great waters of the globe, between all its continents. That exception is the great space of ocean water lying between the two hemispheres, and forming that immense, mighty, and majestic sea known as the Northern Pacific Ocean.

The maps and charts, which I have here, and which any Senator may unroll for himself, show where these lines have been laid, and they illustrate, most graphically, their absence from the great ocean lying between the Americas and the great continent of Asia. Therefore, it has happened, Mr. President, that the countries whose shores this great ocean washes have cast their eyes over these waters and have sought a favorable line where a submarine cable could be laid between the continents of North America, Asia, and Australasia, the great requisite for such a line being some midway stopping place where the circuit could be broken, and where the danger of so long an unbroken stretch would be so great as to render the enterprise of laying the interoceanic cable impossible.

The Hawaiian Islands, over and above all other spots in the great Pacific Ocean, furnish this resting place, this division of the great breadth of waters. Whether such a line should be built from some port of the United States or of our southern sister Republic, Mexico, or the vast domain lying at our north, which forms that great English colony, the Dominion of Canada, has been the question, and it is interesting to watch and note what has been done or attempted to be done, by the United States and by Great Britain, to this end.

In the closing session of the Fifty-first Congress the following provision was embodied in the naval appropriation bill, which I had the honor of conducting through the Senate, and which became a law March 2, 1891:

> To enable the President to cause careful soundings to be made between San Francisco, Cal., and Honolulu, in the kingdom of the Hawaiian Islands, for the purpose of determining the practicability of the laying of a telegraphic cable between those points, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and the President is hereby authorized to direct the use of any vessel or vessels belonging to the United States in making such survey.

Under this authority the Navy Department proceeded to prosecute the survey, under the direction of accomplished officers of the Navy, with ships and crews and appliances furnished by the Government.

The result of this movement, which laid the foundation for any subsequent action on the part of our Government, is found in the documents which I now present to the Senate, making them a part of my remarks. They consist of the report of Lieut. Commander Richardson Clover, Hydrographer of the United States Navy, giving the general results of the survey, and made to Commodore Ramsay, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, in the Navy Department. This report is transmitted by Commodore Ramsay to Hon. B. F. Tracy, Secretary of the Navy, and by him sent to the President, and by President Harrison sent to Congress in his message which came to the Senate on the 27th day of July, 1892, and was then referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Executive Document No. 153, Fifty-second Congress, first session, contains these messages of transmittal and the detailed report of the course and the result of the survey, which will be interesting to any Senator who desires to follow these events.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the results of the survey for the purpose of determining the practicability of laying a telegraphic cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands.

July 27, 1892.—Read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, with its accompaniments, a report from the Secretary of the Navy of the results of the survey made pursuant to the act of March 2, 1891, "to enable the President to cause careful soundings to be made between San Francisco, Cal., and Honolulu, in the Kingdom of the Hawaiian Islands, for the purpose of determining the practicability of the laying of a telegraphic cable between those points."

BENJ. HARRISON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 27, 1892.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, July 25, 1892.

SIR: Under the act of March 2, 1891, providing for a deep-sea survey to determine the practicability of laying a telegraph cable between California and the Hawaiian Islands, the steamer Albatross began to take deep-sea soundings in October, 1891, and by January, 1892, two lines had been run between Monterey Bay, California, and Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands. The Albatross, being required for special investigations in Bering Sea, was detached from the work in February, and the steamer Thetis was detailed to run a third line between Point Concepcion, California, and Hilo Bay, Hawaii, which was completed in May.

The result of the survey shows that a practicable route can be easily selected. The report, prepared by the Hydrographic Office of the Bureau of Navigation, is herewith transmitted.

Respectfully submitted.

B. F. TRACY,
Secretary of the Navy.

The PRESIDENT.

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 25, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit the report of the Hydrographer to the Bureau of Navigation concerning the survey of a lane along the bottom of the Pacific Ocean between California and the Hawaiian Islands, for the purpose of determining a practicable route for a submarine telegraph cable between those places.

Very respectfully, F. M. RAMSAY, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. B. F. TRACY,
Secretary of the Navy.

HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE, UNITED STATES NAVY,
BUREAU OF NAVIGATION, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., July 25, 1892

SIR: I have the honor to submit a report of the results of the investigations undertaken in connection with the survey made pursuant to the act of March 2, 1891, "to enable the President to cause careful soundings to be made between San Francisco, Cal., and Honolulu, in the Kingdom of the Hawaiian Islands, for the purpose of determining the practicability of the laying of a telegraphic cable between those points."

The survey was prosecuted with all the care and accuracy that the means for modern deep-sea research afford, and it is believed that the accompanying maps and observations present a good knowledge of the route and establish the fact that the laying of a cable on almost any line between California and the Hawaiian Islands is practicable. A lane about 300 miles wide was developed between California and Hawaii, and the results, as shown in the report seem to indicate the most favorable route to be a rhumb line between Monterey Bay, California, and Honolulu.

Very respectfully,

RICHARDSON CLOVER,
Lieutenant-Commander, United States Navy, Hydrographer

Commodore F. M. RAMSAY, U. S. N.,
Chief of Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department.

In the Fifty-second Congress, as the RECORD will show, a provision was incorporated by the Senate on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill for a subsidy of $250,000 a year for, as my memory recalls, fifteen years' time to enable a private company to construct, lay, and maintain a submarine cable from this country to Honolulu. When that proposition reached the other House it was opposed and defeated there somewhat upon the ground that as the Hawaiian Government had taken no interest in the matter our own Government, if it embarked in the enterprise, would better do the work and pay the bills and own the line than to connect itself by subsidy with a private corporation having no recognition by the Hawaiian Government.

This ended the matter for the time, and the project slept till the stirring events of the last three years forced the subject again upon the attention of Congress and demonstrated the almost absolute necessity of our having quick communication with the Hawaiian Islands if this Government expected to maintain its influence with that people.

I might be led aside, Mr. President, from the strict line of my discussion to refer to the events which led to the subversion of the Hawaiian monarchy and establishment of a republican government, which exists there to-day, but upon this I invoke the memory of Senators who were interested in these events and took part in the rather acrimonious discussion that followed in this body to establish the proposition that had a submarine cable been operating at the time, so that immediate action not only by the President, but by Congress, could have been taken, many of the untoward events of those days would have been averted, and the interest and solicitude upon this side of the water and the agonizing suspense of the people of the Hawaiian Islands might have all been saved.

Growing out of these exciting events came the next proposition for action on the part of our Government, when, upon the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which was before the Senate on February 6, 1895, the following amendment, which I had offered in the Committee on Appropriations, and which had been by that committee adopted and made a part of the bill, came before the Senate. Its language was as follows:

The President is hereby authorized to contract for the entire work of laying a telegraph cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands, and to direct the prosecution of such work whenever such a contract shall be made, and as a part of the cost of such cable the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated.

A somewhat lengthy discussion of this provision, its purpose, scope, and necessity, followed, and the amendment was further amended, at the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, Mr. ALLEN, by adding the words:

Said cable to be owned and operated by the United States Government.

Many Senators took part in the discussion, and in its course the following communications were read to the Senate:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 29, 1891.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th instant, inclosing a copy of House bill No. 13372, present session, "to incorporate the Pacific Cable Company, and for other purposes." You accordingly ask for any views which I may have to offer upon the subject.

This Department feels a deep interest in the prosecution and completion of a submarine cable between the United States and the East, via Hawaii, as shown by the bill under consideration. Recently this subject was presented to this Department by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and I take pleasure in inclosing, for information, a copy of my reply, dated the 22d instant, in the hope that it will suffice for your present needs.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

Hon. MARK H. DUNNELL,
Chairman of the Subcommittee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 22, 1891.

SIR: A letter from you, on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations, under date of December 3, 1890, requested the views of this Department on the subject-matter of the following resolution, adopted by the Senate on the 2d ultimo:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into the advisability of the passage of a law authorizing a survey for a transpacific submarine cable route from some suitable point on the Pacific Coast to the Hawaiian Islands, thence via Samoa and New Zealand to Australia, and of legislation encouraging the formation of a company for such purpose, and to report by bill or otherwise."

The general subject-matter of the resolution has for some time been under attentive consideration in this Department, and efforts have been made to obtain trustworthy indications of the disposition of the Hawaiian Government and of other powers interested in the problem of transpacific communication, to promote the cable connection of the East and Australia with the western coast of the United States via Honolulu and the Samoan Islands. It is only very recently that the plan favored by the Hawaiian Government has been authoritatively laid before me.

I have no doubt of the great importance to the United States of possessing cable communication with Hawaii. Besides subserving the close interests which we maintain with those islands, and tending to exert a positive and potential influence on the political autonomy of the Hawaiian group, such a cable would be a necessary factor in a great scheme of direct communication with China and Japan, and with Australasia by way of the Samoan Islands.

There has already been made to this Government a proposition on the part of Germany and Great Britain to consider the feasibility of a concurrent action and aid toward laying a telegraphic cable to Samoa via Honolulu. It is quite certain that the Japanese Government would, in its turn, welcome a direct line to the United States, and would in all probability contribute, by proportionate guaranty or otherwise, toward its realization. The interest of Japan in the subject has been evinced by recent inquiries. A late dispatch from the United States minister at Peking indicates that a transpacific cable company would receive material encouragement from Chinese quarters.

A comprehensive Pacific system of telegraphy would not only of necessity make Honolulu a radial point, but would supply the single line between the United States and Hawaii with a large volume of business.

The terms of the Hawaiian concession are contained in the annexed letter, addressed to me a few days ago by the concessionary, Mr. Alfred S. Hartwell. It is to be observed that the calculations of working cost and revenue therein presented rest on the operation of the proposed Americo-Hawaiian cable alone, without regard to the increased returns which would doubtless flow from an extension of communication westward. As the system expands working expenses may be expected to diminish in proportion to receipts. A single repair ship, for instance, stationed at Honolulu, would probably suffice for the efficient maintenance of all the cables centering there.

In the course of events telegraphic communication throughout the Pacific Ocean and with the shores of America, Asia, and Australasia is indispensable and certain to come. The section joining Hawaii to the American continent, besides being the shortest and least costly link in the general chain, is by far the most important from political points of view; and I deem it of the highest consequence to the United States that it be promptly constructed by American effort, and with the sanction of our Government.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations,
United States Senate.

The upshot of it all was that, on the 9th day of February, 1895, the Senate adopted the amendment providing for the laying and maintaining of the cable by the Government, and the whole matter went into conference with the House of Representatives.

Not to take up more time of the Senate, I may say that the whole project failed, owing to the hostility of the other legislative branch of the Government to the project, and, so far as we are concerned, there it has remained till to-day.

In the meantime Great Britain has not been idle, and the history of her efforts to secure a landing place for a British cable, which should traverse the bed of the Pacific Ocean, from some point in her Canadian possessions, probably Vancouver, to a resting point in the middle of the sea, from which two branches would diverge, one to some point in Australasia and the other to the Chinese or Japanese coast, is most interesting.

Colonial conferences of all British dependencies were held, in 1887 in London, in 1888 in Sydney, in 1893 in Auckland, in 1894 in Ottawa, and all urged the Imperial Government to conduct the survey of a route between Canada and Australia for the purpose of laying and maintaining a submarine cable between Canada and Australia. In order to accomplish this such a cable must find a resting place and land on one of the Hawaiian Islands or on Fanning Island; but the British project found a lion in the path in the provisions of the existing treaty between the United States and Hawaii, under which such landing of a foreign company for the purpose of laying its cable could only be permitted by the consent of the United States to a modification of the treaty to that end.

In October, 1894, a commission, consisting of the new British consul, Captain Hawes, Mr. Sanford Fleming, of Ottawa, and Mr. W. Hepworth Mercer, of the British colonial office, London, visited the Hawaiian Islands and sought to obtain permission to acquire property, by lease or purchase, as a landing place and intermediate station for the British Pacific cable.

The Hawaiian Government, acting under the provisions of the treaty, and evidently with no sympathy for the movement or for the lodgment of any European or Canadian cable upon their territory, invoked the provisions of the treaty with the United States, which I have before recited, and, in a communication addressed to our Government, asked that Congress might consider the question of permitting the British company to acquire an interoceanic station upon one of the Hawaiian Islands.

This British commission had gone to Honolulu and, in communication with the Hawaiian Government there, was very pertinacious in seeking for permission to land their cable on one of the lesser islands of the Hawaiian group, and went so far as to claim that under the treaty with us a lease to an individual was not prohibited, and that such instrument might be made to Mr. Mercer for the benefit of such company as he might form.

To this proposition the Hawaiian Government refused to listen, declaring that the concessions asked for are counter to the spirit of the reciprocity treaty, and nothing more could be done under it. The most that the Hawaiian Government undertook to do was to refer the subject to the United States. They did not request the United States to agree to the British arrangement. They reported the fact of such negotiation and asked for an expression of our policy on the subject.

This proposition was submitted by President Cleveland in his message of January 9, 1895, which I read to the Senate, recommending its assent to the proposition of the British company.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit herewith certain dispatches from our minister at Hawaii and the documents which accompanied the same.

They disclose the fact that the Hawaiian Government desires to lease to Great Britain one of the uninhabited islands belonging to Hawaii as a station for a submarine telegraph cable to be laid from Canada to Australia, with a connection between the island leased and Honolulu.

Both the Hawaiian Government and the representatives of Great Britain in this negotiation concede that the proposed lease can not be effected without the consent of the United States, for the reason that in our reciprocity treaty with the King of Hawaii he agreed that as long as said treaty remained in force he would not "lease or otherwise dispose of or create any lien upon any port, harbor, or other territory in his dominion, or grant any special privilege or right of use therein to any other power, state, or government."

At the request of the Hawaiian Government this subject is laid before the Congress for its determination upon the question of so modifying the treaty agreement above recited as to permit the proposed lease.

It will be seen that the correspondence which is submitted between the Hawaiian and British negotiators negatives the existence on the part of Hawaii of any suspicion of British unfriendliness or the fear of British aggression.

The attention of the Congress is directed to the following statement contained in a communication addressed to the Hawaiian Government by the representatives of Great Britain:

"We propose to inform the British Government of your inquiry, whether they would accept the sovereignty of Necker Island or some other uninhabited island on condition that no subsidy is required from you. As we explained, we have not felt at liberty to entertain that question ourselves, as we were definitely instructed not to ask for the sovereignty of any island, but only for a lease simply for the purpose of the cable."

Some of the dispatches from our minister, which are submitted, not only refer to the project for leasing an uninhabited island belonging to Hawaii, but contain interesting information concerning recent occurrences in that country, and its political and social condition. This information is valuable because it is based upon the observation and knowledge necessarily within the scope of the diplomatic duties which are intrusted solely to the charge of this intelligent diplomatic officer representing the United States Government at Hawaii.

I hope the Congress will see fit to grant the request of the Hawaiian Government, and that our consent to the proposed lease will be promptly accorded. It seems to me we ought not, by a refusal of this request, to stand in the way of the advantages to be gained by isolated Hawaii through telegraphic communication with the rest of the world, especially in view of the fact that our own communication with that country would thereby be greatly improved without apparent detriment to any legitimate American interest.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 9, 1895.

This recommendation was not received with favor by the Senate, which had more than once committed itself to the proposition that this Government should aid a United States cable, either by building it or by subsidy, and nothing came of it.

The artful project of the British commission had most ignobly failed, and with it, for the present, their hope of securing a concession in the Hawaiian Islands for the benefit of a British cable company.

That great interest had been felt in this commission and great hopes entertained in its action is shown in the reports of the proceedings of the colonial conference at Ottawa in June and July, 1894. I have succeeded in obtaining a copy of these proceedings, and any Senator who hesitates as to the duty of prompt action on our part on this subject will be enlightened as to the objects and hopes of Great Britain upon this matter.

At one of the sessions of the conference Sir Henry Wrixon, a delegate from Victoria, said, speaking of the danger that if England did not take up the cable project, those interested in laying it might secure French assistance:

> The hope we cherish is that we will get France out of New Caledonia, and we are all in favor of England having supreme control of the Pacific. We regard that as essential to our rights and to our existence as a nation. We in Australia dearly cherish the idea that England should control absolutely in the Pacific. That is my argument. The imperial view or national view we regard as important. We want to prevent any other nation from becoming dominant in the Pacific.

The conference, at the time, appears to have been somewhat in fear of interference by the French Government. But its whole proposition was covered by the repeated expressions of the desire that Great Britain should become the mistress of the Pacific Ocean and of the trade on its great waters, and that a submarine cable was the first essential to this control.

Some of the advantages to Great Britain, both from a commercial and military standpoint, were set forth in the conference, as will be found upon pages 301 and 302 of the report by Mr. Fleming, who submitted to the conference certain propositions which had been made touching the importance of the subject to the Imperial Government by General Herbert, then in the service of the Canadian Government.

His first proposition is as follows:

> Such a cable would double the existing means of telegraphic intelligence between Great Britain and Australia, and ultimately between Great Britain, the Cape, and India.

Another proposition was as follows:

> Canada would be provided with an alternative line of intelligence with Great Britain in the improbable, yet possible, event of the general interruption of the transatlantic lines landed in Canada at a time when those landed in the United States might not be available.

This of course refers to the possibility of a conflict between the United States and Great Britain.

Another proposition was as follows:

> A direct line of telegraphic intelligence would be established between the northernmost station of the British Pacific squadron and the stations of the Australian squadron—an incalculable advantage in facilitating the cooperation of these naval forces with one another.

And General Herbert is quoted as winding up his suggestions with the following words:

> In military as in commercial affairs the importance of a rapid and secure interchange of intelligence between distant points can not be overestimated. The proposed transpacific cable will doubtless find many advocates upon purely commercial grounds, but I will venture to report that viewed solely as a military line of intelligence its value is so great that it should secure the unhesitating support of all the governments whose interests and very existence demand the fullest development of an organized system of imperial defense.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the Senator from Maine state a little more clearly what the conference was and who attended it.

Mr. HALE. The report is made by Mackenzie Bowell, then minister of trade and commerce, and at present premier to his excellency the Right Honorable Mr. John Campbell Hamilton-Gordon, Earl of Aberdeen, Governor-General of Canada, etc. He says:

> The undersigned has the honor to present to your excellency the report of the proceedings of the colonial conference held in Ottawa from 28th June to 9th July, 1894.

The make-up of the conference consisted of delegates from the Government of Her Majesty, the Earl of Jersey; the Dominion of Canada, represented by Hon. Mackenzie Bowell and other members of the ministry; New South Wales, the Hon. F. B. Suttor, minister of public instruction; Tasmania, by the Hon. Nicholas Fitzgerald; Cape of Good Hope, the Government of South Australia, the Government of New Zealand, the Government of Victoria, the Government of Queensland.

Nothing, Mr. President, could show more clearly the spirit that animates our great commercial rival in dealing with just such questions as the one now before the Senate. All through General Herbert's suggestions or reflections runs the one dominating purpose which controls English administrations in dealing with the whole world, outside of the British Islands, which is to push out and push forward, to gain territory, to gain the control of great seas and waterways, and all to build up the imperial power and imperial authority. It is time that something of this spirit should be interfused with the policy of the United States.

In the meantime an interesting incident had occurred in the Hawaiian Islands, showing the watchfulness of Great Britain and its determination in some way to gain a foothold in some part of the Hawaiian group. At the Ottawa conference, in the early part of the year 1894, the same Mr. Fleming whom I have before quoted took occasion to say that—

> Another island, considerably nearer Vancouver than Fanning Island, was available for a mid-ocean station. On the 23d September I prepared a memorandum which was sent from Honolulu by Mr. Bowell, informing the Canadian Government that this island was unoccupied and unclaimed. I refer to Necker Island. When I reached Australia the same statement was repeated by me in a memorandum dated October 11, which was submitted to the various Australian Governments. And again in January last I had, with the agents-general and the high commissioner for Canada, an opportunity of seeing Lord Ripon, and I placed in his hands a third document, dated January 6, in which I pointed out that this island, 800 miles nearer than Fanning Island, was still unoccupied and unclaimed by any maritime power. That island, however, is not now available. On the 27th May last formal possession was taken of it by the Hawaiian authorities, so that if we want Necker Island we must now apply to those who have so recently laid claim to it.

It will be interesting to Senators to hear the story of the British attempt to get possession of Necker Island and how that attempt was checkmated by the action of the Hawaiian Government. The island lies about 400 miles northwest from Honolulu, and is in a direct line, as are all of the Hawaiian islands, where a cable would naturally be laid from Canada to Australia or to the shores of upper Asia. It had been claimed by the Hawaiian Government as one of the Hawaiian group from 1857, when the Hawaiian Government sent Captain Paty on an expedition to inspect its outlying islands. Captain Paty reported that he had sailed around Necker Island, but found no place where a landing could be made.

From that date to 1894, when the incident of which I am about to speak occurred, the island attracted no attention. The Hawaiian Government seemed to have been conscious of the defect in its title to Necker Island by reason of not ever having taken possession of it. In the month of May the Hawaiian Government became aware that this defect as to possession had been discovered by the Canadian Government or by persons connected with the British Pacific cable enterprise.

A person whose movements were conducted quietly and perhaps furtively landed from one of the Canadian steamers and went at once to the survey department of the Hawaiian Government, where he made minute and pointed inquiries regarding Necker Island. He also sought out and found a son of Captain Paty, of whom he solicited the possession of Captain Paty's log on the voyage of 1857. These facts were brought to the attention of the Hawaiian Government, which at the same time observed that the British cruiser Champion, then in port, was prepared to go to sea, ostensibly on a target-practice cruise. The Hawaiian Government determined to act at once in order to save any question about ownership of Necker Island. They chartered one of the inter-island steamers, coaled and provisioned it and dispatched it to Necker Island within six hours from the time they had learned of the danger and of the near departure of the British ship Champion.

The Hawaiian vessel and the Champion left port at the same time, heading in the same direction. It was commonly believed that both vessels were bound for the same destination. The smaller vessel, however, that employed by the Hawaiian Government, was enabled to make greater speed than her rival on account of her lighter draft and ability to ignore the reefs, the avoidance of which would prolong the voyage. The Hawaiian expedition was successfully accomplished and the Hawaiian flag was raised upon Necker Island, and proclamation was there made that possession was taken in the name of the Hawaiian Government.

The British ship Champion did not extend her voyage to Necker Island, having stopped at one of the islands on the way. Further advance by her would have been useless.

For once the wit and enterprise and aggressive force of Great Britain had all been met and outwitted by a smaller Government. This is why Mr. Fleming rather pathetically says in the Ottawa conference that Necker Island is no longer available as a British midway point for the laying of their cable.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Maine a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to ask whether the Champion did not have upon her some British botanist or British geologist whom the war vessel might have landed to make botanic or geographical explorations on the island, notwithstanding the fact that the Hawaiian flag was flying there?

Mr. HALE. I do not know, of course, what prevented any further action upon the part of the Champion. I presume that as a British ship she was fitted out with everything that was necessary for any kind of an exploration or lodgment, but the little vessel got there first and raised the Hawaiian flag, and whether the British ship had botanists or not, it was of no use for the Champion to go there. Hawaii in that way maintained her title to the island.

It shows, Mr. President, as many incidents and events show all along the way of the history of this transaction, how determined our rivals are to gain the commercial and military control of the great Pacific Ocean, and that we can afford to lose no time in moving if we determine to move at all.

During the last half dozen years England has been quietly taking possession of group after group of islands in the South Pacific, with the intention of utilizing the most suitable bits of land for telegraph stations on the great transoceanic route. The process has been carried on unobtrusively but systematically. Protectorates were established wherever it was not practicable to assume ownership. In 1888 the British flag was raised on Kingman, Palmyra, Washington, Fanning, Christmas, Dudosa, Bierson, and Penrhyn islands. In the same year Her Majesty the Queen took under her protection Ellice Island and the Phœnix, Union, and Gilbert groups. She already had a protectorate over the Fiji Islands. In 1889 she took Suwaroff Island, and in 1891 Johnston Island, which is about 500 miles west of the south end of the Hawaiian archipelago. In 1892 Gardiner and Danger islands were appropriated. All of these islands and groups have been examined with a view to determining their availability for the purpose mentioned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 2904) to maintain and protect the coin redemption fund, and to authorize the issue of certificates of indebtedness to meet temporary deficiencies of revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] is entitled to the floor on the unfinished business.

Mr. PEFFER. Having the floor, I will yield for the purpose of affording the Senator from Maine an opportunity to conclude his remarks, if he desires to do so.

Mr. HALE. I thank the Senator from Kansas. It will not take me very long to conclude.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be informally laid aside, and the Senator from Maine will proceed.

Mr. HALE. The events which I have recited, showing the purpose of the British Government to establish a Pacific Ocean cable from Canada to Australasia and Asia, with some midway point of rest on or near the Hawaiian Islands, together with the feeling of necessity for close communication with the United States which the occurrences at Honolulu during the past three years had made most intense, had at last brought the Government of the islands to see the necessity of taking steps toward encouraging and aiding some project for telegraphic communication with this country.

It is to the credit of that Government, I can justly say, that whenever it has been confronted with any real emergency it has shown resources adequate to successful action.

On the 12th day of August, 1895, an act to facilitate the construction and maintenance of telegraphic cables in the Pacific, which had been passed by the Legislature of the Republic of Hawaii, was approved and became a law. It is the enabling act under which the concession to which I shall refer later was made. Its provisions are as follows:

An act to facilitate the construction and maintenance of telegraph cables in the Pacific.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Republic of Hawaii:

SECTION 1. The President, with the consent of the Cabinet, is hereby authorized and empowered to negotiate and conclude a contract or contracts with any person or persons, corporation or corporations, government or governments, for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a telegraphic cable or cables connecting the several islands of the Republic or connecting the Republic of Hawaii with the countries lying in or bordering upon the Pacific Ocean.

SEC. 2. There may be incorporated in any such contract or contracts provisions to allow the free use of any Government lands necessary for the construction, maintenance, or operation of such cable or cables;

To admit free of duty all material to be used exclusively in the construction, maintenance, or operation of any such cable or cables;

To allow the condemnation and appropriation, according to law, of such land, property, or rights of way as may be necessary for the construction, maintenance, or operation of such cable or cables and the land connections thereof;

To remit for a term of years, therein to be stated, all taxes upon the property located within the Republic belonging to or connected with such cable or cables and necessary or properly appertinent to the construction, maintenance, or operation of such cable or cables;

To remit all harbor and port dues and charges upon any vessel or vessels engaged in laying or maintaining any such cable or cables, or which may be stationed in the waters of the Republic for such purpose; and

To render to such enterprise or enterprises such financial assistance as may seem just and advantageous to the interests of the Republic.

SEC. 3. Such financial assistance may consist of—

1. A fixed semiannual cash payment or subsidy for a stated period; or,

2. A guaranty by the Republic of a payment of the principal or interest or both of a stated amount of the bonds of any person or company controlling or operating such cable or cables; or,

3. A subsidy by issuing to the party or parties indicated in such contract a stated amount of the bonds of the Republic, bearing interest at the rate and payable at the time or times therein stated; or,

4. A subscription to the stock of any corporation or corporations formed for the purpose of constructing and operating any such cable or cables; or,

5. A combination of any two or more of the methods hereinbefore mentioned.

SEC. 4. Such contract or contracts shall also contain such provisions as to the President and Cabinet shall seem necessary or proper for the protection of the interests of the Republic in and concerning the use and maintenance of such cable.

SEC. 5. No contract or contracts concluded under or by authority of this act shall be binding upon the Government of Hawaii until the same shall have been ratified and approved by the Legislature thereof.

SEC. 6. The President is hereby authorized and empowered to employ an agent or agents to assist, either within the Republic or in any foreign country, in negotiating any such contract or contracts.

SEC. 7. For the purpose of defraying the expenses which may be incurred by virtue of this act the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the treasury otherwise unappropriated, which, or so much thereof as may become necessary, shall be expended in such manner as may be directed by the President.

SEC. 8. This act shall take effect and become a law from and after the day of its approval.

Approved August 12, 1895.

It will be seen that it authorizes and empowers the President of the Hawaiian Republic, with the consent of his cabinet, to ne gotiate contracts with persons or corporations or governments for constructing, maintaining, and operating telegraph cable or cables connecting the several islands of the Republic with the countries lying in or bordering on the Pacific Ocean. The sections succeeding section 1 cover all the details necessary to effectuate such concession, and there are ample clauses touching all questions relating to the accession of lands, the subsidy to be given by the Hawaiian Government, the constitution of any corporation to which the concession shall be granted, and, in short, everything authorizing the President and his cabinet to set in motion the machinery necessary to make and put in operation such concession as would be an incentive and aid to the project for telegraphic communication with the United States.

Closely following this act and directly upon its heels is the concession granted by the President of the Republic of Hawaii to Z. S. Spalding "for laying, working, and maintaining submarine telegraph cables from San Francisco to Honolulu and between the several Hawaiian islands, with exclusive landing rights and subsidy for twenty years."

I have here an official copy of this concession, which takes the form of an agreement between "Sanford Ballard Dole, President of the Republic of Hawaii, and Zephaniah Swift Spalding, of Honolulu, party of the second part, hereinafter called the contractor." I have looked at it, and examined it, and it has been examined by other Senators and Members, and it undoubtedly conveys the exclusive right with the subsidy to Mr. Spalding or to any company that he may form or to which he may assign.

Mr. FRYE. My colleague is aware, of course, that there is another bill already pending, and he will excuse me for interrupting him, but I am chairman of the subcommittee having charge of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I am very glad to hear from my colleague.

Mr. FRYE. The bill to which I refer provides for the landing of a cable at Pearl River Harbor. Has the Senator examined the question as to whether or not the grant of Hawaii to the Spalding Company, or whatever it may be called, is so exclusive as to prevent the landing at Pearl River Harbor of a cable built by a corporation and not by the Government of the United States?

Mr. HALE. I have very grave doubts whether under these two instruments, the enabling acts and the concession coming from it, any right can be granted, during the time when Mr. Spalding is allowed to build the cable, to any other person or to any other company whatever. I am inclined to believe, and I think the Senator and his committee—I am glad they are considering the matter, and I hope they will take it up at an early day—will find, that all this right has been parted with to this company, and that it alone during the time which is fixed, the termination of which is November 1, 1898, has the right to occupy Pearl Harbor or any other portion of the territory of the Hawaiian Islands for this purpose.

It is provided in terms that the Spalding Company shall not be entitled to an exclusive franchise or to a subsidy unless the construction of the cable shall begin on or before May 1, 1897, and be completed not later than November 1, 1898.

I may say here that Mr. Spalding is a man well and favorably known, not only in Honolulu, where he has large business interests, but in the United States and upon the other side of the Atlantic. He is a native of the State of Ohio, was a Union soldier in the late war, and went to Hawaii as an agent for the United States Government about the time of the negotiation of the early treaties, and has since served for several years as United States consul-general at Honolulu. He undoubtedly feels that the success of this cable project, while it benefits the people of Hawaii, also will add to the value of his own property, and that with the prosperity of the islands will increase his own prosperity.

I look upon this as fortunate, because it establishes the fact that the scheme upon which this cable is to be built is not that of an adventurer or a visionary, but that Mr. Spalding and his associates are men of probity, enterprise, and business ability and of sufficient means.

I will not take the time of the Senate by reading the concession or agreement in full, but will, with the leave of the Senate, append it as a supplement to my remarks. I have gone over it with some care and find that it covers all necessary details as to terminal points of the cable, the time which it shall be maintained, the space of time to be devoted to its construction, and I may say here is that "such telegraphic communication shall be established not later than the 1st day of November, 1898"; and the amount of subsidy granted, dependent upon the Government of the United States joining in this undertaking by the granting of substantial assistance to the contractor, his representatives or assigns, is $40,000 per annum.

I can say, in short, of this concession that the intention which evidently animated the Hawaiian Government in making it to connect the enterprise with such aid as the United States might give to it is manifest in all its provisions.

Following this the Pacific Cable Company was organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey, and is the successor and assign of Mr. Spalding's interest, and is the company with which this Government deals, as provided in the bill to which I shall allude later.

I have here a copy of the charter, which, rather than take the time of the Senate in reading in full, I will insert as a supplement to my remarks.

This brings us to the bill which I introduced on January 3, 1896, and which, if it becomes a law, marks the bounds of the obligations of this Government, and all its rights, whether of use or of possession or of ownership, assumed under its provisions.

The bill which has just been read to the Senate has been most carefully drawn. I have examined it thoroughly, as have other Senators and Members of the other branch of the National Legislature, and the Committee on Foreign Relations, which is to carefully consider its provisions, will no doubt examine them in detail and give hearings to all parties from whom information can be gained.

I shall not take up the time of the Senate to comment at length upon each section and clause. It, in short, gives to the Postmaster-General authority to contract with the Pacific Cable Company for transmission by electrical means between San Francisco and Honolulu of all messages on the business of the United States for twenty years from July 1, 1897. The obligation of the United States is to pay in each of the twenty years the actual cost of maintaining, operating, and renewing the cable for that year, and to this is to be added a sum sufficient to pay interest at 4 per cent on the sum expended by the company for constructing and laying the cable and acquiring lands and buildings appurtenant to it for its operation.

From this sum is to be deducted the Hawaiian subsidy of $40,000 per annum, which is thus turned over by the company to this Government. The extent of this obligation is shown by the following computation, which covers the entire cost of the plant, the acquisition of stations, rights of way, and the short interisland connections in Hawaii, the cable repair steamers, and all expense incident to the successful laying and maintaining of the cable, this amount being $3,789,417.45. The annual fixed charges for which this Government will be obligated under the bill amount to $293,324.26, from which is to be deducted the $40,000 annual subsidy given by the Hawaiian Government. So that, in round numbers, the bill commits the United States to the subvention of about $250,000 per annum. I think this is exactly the amount fixed in the bill providing for a subsidy to another company, and to which I have alluded as having, three years ago, in the Fifty-second Congress, passed the Senate. The details are a little more fully given in the paper which I present and make part of my remarks.

Cost of constructing, laying, connecting, and establishing cable lines between the cities of San Francisco and Honolulu, and between points upon the Hawaiian Islands, together with estimate of annual fixed charges, including interest at 4 per cent per annum upon the cost of such cables, ships, stations, land lines, etc.

Cost in cash, based upon estimate of the Compagnie Francaise des Cables Telegraphiques of Paris.

I will here incorporate with my remarks a copy of Senate bill 1316, introduced by me:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to contract with the Pacific Cable Company, a corporation of New Jersey, for the transmission, by electrical means, between the cities of San Francisco, Cal., and Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, of messages on the business of the United States during a period of twenty years from the 1st of July, A. D. 1897; and to stipulate in the said agreement that the amount paid to said company for such service by the United States shall in each year be a sum to be computed as follows:

First. To the amount actually expended during that year by said company in maintaining, renewing, and operating a line of submarine telegraph from San Francisco, Cal., to Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, there shall be added a sum sufficient to pay interest at 4 per cent on the sum actually expended by said company for constructing and acquiring such telegraph line, together with the lands, buildings, land lines, and other appurtenances fairly requisite to its efficient working; such cost to be certified to and approved by the Postmaster-General or otherwise determined as hereinafter provided.

Second. From such sum to be so computed and paid in each year there shall be deducted in each year the sum of $40,000.

Third. The remainder shall be paid to said company by the United States in four equal quarterly payments: Provided, however, That the amount so paid shall not in any one year exceed a maximum sum to be agreed upon in said contract, unless the tolls upon messages transmitted for the United States, computed at the rates charged by said company to the public as hereinafter provided for like service, would be in excess of such sum; in which case the tolls so in excess shall be computed at one-half the current rates; and the deduction of $40,000 hereinbefore provided for shall for that year be diminished to the extent of such excess.

SEC. 2. That said company shall in said agreement stipulate that on or before the 1st day of July, 1897, it will have laid and in operation a line of submarine telegraph extending from the city of San Francisco to the city of Honolulu, capable of transmitting from either of said cities not less than fifteen words per minute; and during said period of twenty years will maintain and renew the same, as may be necessary, to maintain such capacity for electrical transmission between the cities above mentioned.

If from any cause which said company in the judgment of the Postmaster-General could control or avoid, said company shall, at any time within the said term of twenty years, be incompetent to convey the messages of the United States, as aforesaid, for a period of more than one hundred and twenty consecutive days, then, and in that case, the Postmaster-General shall deduct for that year a proportionate part of the sum so named by him as aforesaid: Provided, That in the event of a break or damage to such cable at a distance of more than 500 miles from either of its shore ends, the said term shall be extended to one hundred and eighty days before any deduction from the annual payment by the United States shall result from such incapacity: And provided further, That in the event such failure or incapacity to transmit said messages shall continue for one year, the Postmaster-General may, at his option, cancel the contract made with said company, and from and after that date the Government shall be under no obligation to pay said amount or any sum whatsoever.

SEC. 3. That said company shall in said agreement further stipulate that the United States may at its option at any time during the said term of twenty years, and without notice, assume and take exclusive possession of all and singular the telegraph line of said company to be constructed as aforesaid, extending from said city of San Francisco to the city of Honolulu, together with all lands, buildings and property of every kind appurtenant thereto, and may exercise absolute and exclusive control of and over the business of said telegraph line between San Francisco, Cal., and Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, for and during such time or times as may be deemed necessary or proper by the President, or the official acting in his behalf, the Government to pay unto the said company, in addition to any sum or sums otherwise agreed upon, such amount as shall and will recompense and make good to the said company any and all loss of subsidy from either Government or receipts from business that may be caused by such taking possession or assumption of control by the United States as aforesaid. The said agreement shall further stipulate that the United States may at its option at any time during the said term of twenty years take over from said company and thereafter own and hold, free of all lien or other incumbrance thereon, the telegraph line of said company to be constructed as aforesaid, extending from said city of San Francisco to the city of Honolulu, together with all lands, buildings, and property of every kind appurtenant thereto, upon payment of said company's just debt then existing and incurred for the acquisition, maintenance, and operation of the property so acquired by the United States, and the payment also to the stockholders of said company, or their assigns, of the sums originally subscribed and paid by them in money to said company, with interest at 5 per cent per annum, less any sum or sums repaid to them by said company, as dividends or otherwise, with interest on every of said sums at 5 per cent per annum from the date of such repayment; such provisions to expressly recite that the intent is that the United States shall have a right, at its option, to acquire said property at the strict cost to such company of its acquisition, maintenance, and operation, less any sum which said property may have earned or in any manner repaid, and shall in addition pay the stockholders of said company or their assigns such sums as will reimburse merely their original and actual outlay, less any sum received back by them from any source, with interest in either case at 5 per cent per annum.

Such provision shall further recite that the amount so to be paid for the purchase of said line of telegraph and appurtenances shall be fixed, exclusive of interest, by a sworn exhibit of any and all contracts for construction, maintenance, and operation, any or all of them, and the amount paid thereon by said company; such exhibit as to the cost of construction to be filed with the Postmaster-General within six months after the completion of said telegraph line or lines between said cities of San Francisco and Honolulu; and as to the cost of operation, maintaining, and renewing, by annual sworn statements to be filed with the Postmaster-General not later than May 1 in each year, showing the cost of operation, maintenance, and renewal during the year preceding; showing also all sums received by said company from any source and what part thereof has in any manner been repaid to the stockholders of said company. Every such annual exhibit shall be the basis upon which shall be made the quarterly payments for operation, maintenance, and renewal during the following year, but the amount so paid shall be subject to readjustment to whatever extent at the end of the year it shall at the end of the year be found more or less than the actual cost to said company during the year in which said quarterly payments were made.

Upon the filing of such statement of cost of construction and upon the filing of any such annual statement thereafter, the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, may, at any time within one year, refer the same to the Court of Claims for audit, in which case the judgment of said court shall be final and binding upon the United States and upon said company, but every such exhibit not so referred within one year shall be binding upon the United States and said company.

SEC. 4. That during the continuance of said period of twenty years the maximum rates for the transmission of any message other than United States Government messages hereinbefore provided over such cable between Honolulu and San Francisco shall not exceed $1 per word, and the rates for news messages or items of news to any newspaper or association of newspapers of the United States (commonly known as press messages) shall not exceed one-half the rate which shall be charged for ordinary messages: Provided however, That it shall not be obligatory upon the said company to transmit any messages for a less sum than $1.

SEC. 5. That the company for itself and its representatives shall, upon the execution of said contract, deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, Government bonds to the amount of $100,000 to secure to the United States that the said company, its representatives and assigns, will construct, lay, and equip the said cable in accordance with the terms and conditions of this agreement: Provided, That upon the completion of the construction, equipment, and laying of the said telegraph line the obligation secured by such bonds shall be deemed to have been fulfilled and performed, and such bonds shall thereupon be returned to the said Pacific Cable Company, its representatives and assigns. But if after the execution of such contract there shall be any failure to complete the construction, laying, and equipment of such telegraph line within the time herein specified, then in such case such bonds shall be forfeited to the United States Government as liquidation damages, and there shall be no further or other claim by way of damages by the Government against the Pacific Cable Company, its representatives or assigns.

Under the provisions of this bill the Pacific Cable Company invest the sum of $1,000,000 and become responsible for the future payment of the balance of the cost of construction and laying of the cables and connecting land lines, repair steamers, fittings and supplies, stations, offices, lands and buildings, and rights of way necessary for the business. To secure them in this investment they are to receive the earnings or receipts of the cable systems from all business outside the messages carried and business transacted for the two Governments free of charge.

Assuming the entire cost of the cables and appurtenant property to be from $3,500,000 to $4,000,000, and that the average receipts from outside business would amount to $100,000 per annum, the company would find themselves still with a debt of $1,500,000 upon their line when the Governments cease to pay at the end of twenty years.

If, on the other hand, the Government makes use of its right to take over the ownership of the cable line at any time before the expiration of the twenty years, the Pacific Cable Company will receive and be paid back their investment of $1,000,000, with interest at 5 per cent per annum, less any sum or sums they may have received by way of dividends or otherwise.

All these considerations, Mr. President, lead unwaveringly to one end—the prompt, immediate cable connection between us and the Hawaiian Islands. Without the light thrown upon the subject by the late events which I have recited, President Cleveland has put the matter more strongly than I can in his message of the 3d of December, 1886, in which he says:

> I express my unhesitating conviction that the intimacy of our relations with Hawaii should be emphasized. As a result of the reciprocity treaty of 1875 those islands, on the highway of Oriental and Australasian traffic, are virtually an outpost of American commerce and a stepping-stone to the growing trade of the Pacific.
> The Polynesian Island groups have been so absorbed by other and more powerful Governments that the Hawaiian Islands are left almost alone in the enjoyment of their autonomy, which it is important for us should be preserved.
> Our treaty is now terminable on one year's notice, but propositions to abrogate it would be, in my judgment, most ill advised. The paramount influence we have there acquired, once relinquished, could only with difficulty be regained, and a valuable ground of vantage for ourselves might be converted into a stronghold for our commercial competitors.
> I earnestly recommend that the existing treaty stipulations be extended for a further term of seven years. A recently signed treaty to this end is now before the Senate.
> The importance of telegraphic communication between those islands and the United States should not be overlooked.

And again, in his message of December 3, 1888, from which I quote:

> Proclamation was duly made on the 9th of November, 1887, of the conventional extensions of the treaty of June 3, 1875, with Hawaii under which relations of such special and beneficent intercourse have been created. In the vast field of Oriental commerce now unfolded from our Pacific borders no feature presents stronger recommendations for Congressional action than the establishment of communication by submarine telegraph with Honolulu.
> The geographical position of the Hawaiian group in relation to our Pacific States creates a natural interdependency and mutuality of interest which our present treaties were intended to foster, and which make close communication a logical and commercial necessity.

Mr. President, the way to do what President Cleveland has so clearly stated we ought to do has been made clear by the events which I have so imperfectly recited. The path is open to us. If we do not occupy it, if we do not improve the occasion, if we let the project fail, or are laggard in adopting it, Senators may be certain that in some way, by hook or by crook, the British Government will take up this thing which we have left.

The alternative to which they have been driven, by the efficient proceedings of the Hawaiian Government, of laying their Pacific cable by the way of Fanning Island, involves an almost impracticable enterprise. There has been, thus far, no continuous, unbroken line of submarine cable laid longer than about 2,700 miles, and experts in this business, many of them, believe that to lay a line more than 3,000 miles in length, with no resting place, is impossible.

No cable can be laid from the British North American possessions to Fanning Island without involving a length of at least 3,600 miles. If it can be done at all for this long distance, the additional cost, compared to the shorter and more practicable line, is very great, and the fact that the English colonial office is taking no steps now toward the construction of a line from Vancouver to Fanning Island indicates the difficulties under which it is placed.

I may be asked if the project which I am urging involves the accession of these islands by the United States or is a part of some concerted plan to that end. My answer is that I can not tell whether the construction of this line by our aid and subject to our control will or will not greatly shorten the time when annexation will come, nor do I very much care. There is in my mind no doubt that at some not distant day these islands will be ours. I do not care to precipitate that annexation; but I do know this, Mr. President, that with this line established by our aid and substantially in our hands we have taken a step which forbids forever all interference in these islands by any other nation, and that the whole world will then look upon it as a simple question of time when we shall take them into our fold.

It is no great burden; it involves little immediate outlay, and the expenditure from year to year for the twenty years will never be felt by the American people. But I do not, looking into the future, expect that as a business enterprise the matter will stop here. Almost as a business necessity, the projectors of this plan will be compelled to go farther and to lay the line from the Hawaiian Islands to Japan or some point on the Asiatic coast.

We shall not be compelled, and perhaps not called upon, to aid in that work; but when that additional line shall be laid, Mr. President, it will open a new world, with all its business, for the new line, and when it becomes profitable, and this end of the line which we have substantially built also becomes profitable, long before the twenty years have ended, business men who have and will put their money into the enterprise expect that the entire line, over its two parts, on this side and the other side of Honolulu, will be a paying investment.

I do not deem it worth the while to discuss the question whether our Constitution permits the action which is asked for here, or whether there be or not precedents in favor of such action.

The clauses of the Constitution touching the regulation of commerce and the conduct of postal operations are, to me, entirely ample. If we build ships of war and buy foreign lands for naval stations, surely we may expend money for establishing our communications with these stations or ships that frequent them.

APPENDIX A.

This agreement, made this 12th day of August, A. D. 1895, by and between Sanford Ballard Dole, President of the Republic of Hawaii, for himself and his successors in office, and in behalf of the Hawaiian Government, and by and with the consent of the cabinet, party of the first part, hereinafter called "the Government," and Zephaniah Swift Spalding, of Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, party of the second part, hereinafter called "the contractor," witnesseth:

AGREEMENTS BY THE GOVERNMENT.

ARTICLE I.—Grant of exclusive franchise.

SECTION 1. In consideration of the covenants, agreements, and undertakings hereinafter contained on the part of the contractor or his representatives or assigns to be kept or performed, the said party of the first part, in the exercise of the power to him granted by the provisions of an act entitled "An act to facilitate the construction and maintenance of telegraphic cables in the Pacific," approved on the 12th day of August, A. D. 1895, and of every other power, if any, him hereunto enabling, doth hereby grant, concede, and confirm unto the contractor and his representatives and assigns, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter contained, the sole and exclusive privilege and franchise for and during the full term of twenty years from the 1st day of November, A. D. 1895, to construct or land upon the shores of the Hawaiian group a submarine electric telegraph cable or cables to or from any point or points on the North American continent or any island or islands contiguous thereto.

SEC. 2. Cable to terminate at San Francisco and be maintained for twenty years.—Provided, however, and this agreement is upon these express conditions, viz, that the first cable which shall or may be constructed or laid under this franchise, and for the maintenance of which a subsidy is herein agreed to be paid, shall have its eastern terminus at or near San Francisco, Cal., and its western terminus at or near Honolulu, and shall be maintained in working order in conformity with and subject to the specifications, conditions, and agreements hereinafter contained for the full term of this agreement.

SEC. 3. Exclusive grant not to conflict with treaty rights of foreign governments.—And further, that this grant shall not be construed to prevent any foreign government, having existing treaty rights with the Republic of Hawaii allowing any such government so to do, to land a cable upon the Hawaiian group for other than commercial purposes from any point on the North American Continent.

ARTICLE II.—Grant of subsidy.

SECTION 1. Amount and term of subsidy.—And the Government doth hereby further covenant with the contractor, and his representatives and assigns, that there shall be paid to him, his representatives or assigns, by the Government of the Hawaiian Islands, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth, subject to ratification hereof by the Legislature of the Republic of Hawaii, an annual subsidy of $40,000, gold coin of the United States, for and during the period of twenty years from the date of the establishment by the contractor, or his representatives or assigns, of telegraphic communication between the city of Honolulu, in the Republic of Hawaii, and a point at or near San Francisco, Cal.; and between the said city of Honolulu and the islands of Hawaii, Maui, Molokai, and Kauai.

SEC. 2. Time and place of payment of subsidy.—Such subsidy shall be paid to the contractor, his representatives or assigns, at the treasury of the Government in said Honolulu, by the minister of finance of the Government, or his successor in office, in equal quarterly installments of $10,000 each, during each and all of the years of said above-mentioned term of twenty years.

Subject, however, to suspension or cancellation upon the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth.

SEC. 3. Grant conditioned upon beginning and completion of cable upon specified dates and performance of other agreements.—Provided, however, and this agreement is upon these further express conditions, viz:

(a) That the contractor and his representatives and assigns shall not be entitled to such exclusive franchise, nor to the payment of such subsidy, nor any part thereof, unless the construction of such cables shall begin on or before the 1st day of May, A. D. 1897, and such telegraphic communication be established not later than the 1st day of November, A. D. 1898.

(b) And further, that the Government of the United States shall join in this undertaking by the grant of substantial assistance to the contractor, his representatives or assigns,

And provided further, That upon the failure to obtain the assistance of the United States Government, as herein specified, or upon the breach by or failure of the contractor, his representatives or assigns, to perform or observe all or any of the terms, agreements, or conditions herein contained, the party of the first part or his successors in office may cancel and terminate this agreement and all obligations on the part of the Government thereunder, by notifying the contractor, his representatives or assigns, of such cancellation and termination by delivering a written notice thereof at the house of Bishop & Co., in said Honolulu, not less than sixty days before such cancellation and termination shall take place.

But the rights and privileges of the contractor and his representatives and assigns under this agreement shall not be terminated by his or their failure to begin the construction of the cable herein provided for, and establish communication thereon as herein provided for, upon the dates herein specified, or upon or by reason of any other breach of any condition, or any failure to keep or observe any covenant or agreement herein contained on the part of the contractor, or his representatives or assigns, to be kept or performed, unless and until the Government shall in writing notify him or them that it has canceled this agreement by reason of such breach or failure, by delivering such written notice at the said house of Bishop & Co. not less than sixty days before the date upon which such termination and cancellation are to take effect.

SEC. 4. Suspension of subsidy during temporary failure of cable.—(c) And further that in case of a failure or interruption of efficient electrical connection and communicating power over the said cable or cables between the points hereinafter specified, or any of them, for a period of more than ninety consecutive days, from any cause other than governmental restraint or illegal obstruction, the Government shall not be bound to pay the said subsidy in full, but may deduct therefrom a proportionate amount for the period of such interruption, as follows: For the time of failure or interruption of such communication between San Francisco and the Hawaiian Islands, beyond said term of ninety consecutive days at the rate of $30,000 per annum; for the time of failure or interruption of such communication between the said islands, or any of them, beyond said term of ninety consecutive days, at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

SEC. 5. Cancellation of contract in case of failure for one year.—And provided further, That if the said line or lines, or either of them, shall fail to furnish such communication for a period exceeding one year beyond such term of ninety consecutive days, then and in such case the Government may, at its option, cancel this contract as far as it refers to the line or system so interrupted, and it shall thereupon be freed from all obligations to pay any further subsidy on account of the line or system so interrupted.

That is to say, if the line upon which such communication is so interrupted shall be a part of the interisland cable system it shall be relieved from the obligation to pay $10,000 per annum of said subsidy.

And if the interruption of such communication for such period be on the line between San Francisco and Honolulu, it shall be relieved from the obligation to pay $30,000 per annum of such subsidy, and the grant of an exclusive franchise to lay and maintain a cable to or from the North American Continent to the Hawaiian group and of all other rights and privileges referring or relating to such line or system herein contained shall thereupon and thereby become and be null and void.

ARTICLE III.—Other privileges.

SECTION 1. Rights of way and building sites.—And the Government doth hereby further grant to the contractor, his representatives and assigns, for the said term of twenty years, the free use of a right of way across all Government lands for the landing of any such cable or cables or the construction of any land lines connecting the same, and of suitable sites on any Government lands which may be approved by the Government, for the construction of stations and storehouses for the maintenance or operation of the cable or cables, and doth covenant with the contractor, his representatives and assigns, that during the period of twenty years from the date of the establishment by the contractor, his representatives or assigns, of telegraphic communication between the said city of Honolulu and the other points herein specified, the contractor, his representatives and assigns, shall continue to have the free use of such rights of way and sites.

SEC. 2. Exemption from duties.—And also that during the said term of twenty years there shall be admitted into the Republic, free of all duties, all material to be used exclusively in the construction, maintenance, or operation of any such cable or cables.

SEC. 3. Exemption from taxes.—And also that for the said term of twenty years no taxes shall be levied upon the property of the contractor, his representatives or assigns, located in the Republic, belonging to or connected with such cable or cables and necessary or properly appurtenant to the construction, maintenance, or operation of such cable or cables.

SEC. 4. Exemption from port charges.—And also that during such term of twenty years no harbor or port dues or charges, except pilotage, shall be levied upon or collected from any vessel or vessels exclusively engaged in laying or maintaining any such cable or cables, or which may be stationed in the waters of the Republic for such purposes.

SEC. 5. Grant of power of eminent domain.—And also that during such term of twenty years the contractor, his representatives and assigns, shall have the power and privilege to condemn and appropriate, according to law, such property or rights of way as may be necessary for the construction, maintenance, or operation of such cable or cables and the land connections thereof.

AGREEMENTS OF THE CONTRACTOR.

ARTICLE IV.—Location and equipment of lines.

SECTION 1. Specification of location of lines.—In consideration of the several grants and covenants of the Government hereinbefore contained, the contractor, for himself and his representatives and assigns, doth hereby covenant to and agree with the said party of the first part and his successors in office that he, the said contractor, his representatives or assigns, will, on or before the 1st day of May, A. D. 1897, begin to construct the cables necessary to connect the several points herein specified, and that he, the said contractor, his representatives or assigns, will, on or before the 1st day of November, A. D. 1898, construct, complete, lay, equip, and establish in efficient working condition cables as follows:

From a point on the west coast of California, at or near the city of San Francisco, to a point at or near the said city of Honolulu.

And also from the Island of Hawaii, at or near Kawaihae, to the Island of Maui, at or near Nuu.

And also from the Island of Maui, at or near Napili, to the Island of Molokai, at or near Pukoo.

And also from the Island of Molokai, at or near its west point, to the Island of Oahu, at or near Waikiki.

And also from the Island of Oahu, at or near Waianea, to the Island of Kauai, at or near Nawiliwili.

And also will construct all necessary stations and connections, so as to make such cable and cables available for communication to and from each of such islands.

The landing places at the several termini mentioned shall be at such points on the said respective shores as shall be determined by the engineer in charge of the work.

SEC. 2. Interisland land lines.—And the contractor doth further covenant with the Government that he, his representatives or assigns, will, on or before the said 1st day of November, A. D. 1898, construct and equip and connect with such cable and cables all necessary land lines and stations on each of the said enumerated islands, so that efficient telegraphic communication may be maintained between Honolulu and a point at or near said San Francisco, and between Honolulu and each of the said islands, and between each of said islands and any other of said islands.

SEC. 3. Maintenance of lines.—And further, that after such cables and land lines are so constructed, laid, and placed in operation the said cables and land lines, and each and every one of them, shall be, during the term of twenty years thereafter, continuously and fully equipped, operated, and maintained, so that the same shall and will constitute and form reliable means of telegraphic communication between the points enumerated.

SEC. 4. Proviso for delay in certain cases.—Provided, however, That if any delay in constructing, laying, and completing the said cable or cables shall be caused or arise from any strike, lockout, or any other combination preventing the contractor's works, or any of the trades or occupations upon which the contractor, his representatives or assigns, or manufacturers of cable from which he is or they are obtaining the cable, shall be dependent in carrying out any contract or work necessary to the proper fulfillment of the contract; or shall be caused by any restraints or obstructions occasioned by any governmental authority, or otherwise than by the default of said contractor, his representatives or assigns, then or in any such case the time for completing such cable or cables shall be extended for such period or periods as shall be certified to be reasonable by a competent electrical engineer, who shall be approved by the Government.

SEC. 5. Exemption of contractor from liability under certain conditions.—And provided further, That the contractor, his representatives or assigns, shall not be responsible in damages to the Government for any delay or failure in manufacturing or laying the said cable or cables, except such as may be caused by the culpable neglect of the contractor, his representatives, agents, or assigns, in carrying out the terms of this agreement, the true intent and meaning of this agreement being that the contractor, his representatives and assigns, shall take all reasonable precautions and use their best endeavors to construct, lay, and operate the said cable or cables between the said respective points within the time specified, but that he and they shall not be responsible in damages if he and they shall bona fide use his or their best efforts to accomplish such object.

ARTICLE V.—Ownership of interisland lines.

SECTION 1. Government option to assume ownership of interisland lines.—And the contractor, for himself and his representatives and assigns, doth hereby further covenant with the Government that if so requested in writing by the Government, within one year after the said interisland cable system is completed, he, the contractor, or his representatives or assigns, shall and will sell, transfer, and convey to the Government all of the said interisland cable and cables, and the equipment, stations, and appurtenances, poles and land lines, and everything thereunto appertaining, charging and receiving therefor only the actual cash cost of the said land lines, stations, and equipments, and making no charge for the construction, laying, or furnishing of such submarine cables.

SEC. 2. Government title to interisland cables to be free from all liens.—If the Government shall so acquire such interisland cable system it shall acquire and hold it free from any obligation to pay any indebtedness or any bond or bonds or interest thereon, or any part thereof, which may have been incurred, created, or executed in, upon, or concerning the same, and free from any and every other debt, obligation, and lien of any kind whatever.

But nothing herein contained shall be so construed that such acquiring of such interisland cable system shall release the Government from the obligation of continuing to pay the full amount of the subsidy herein before granted.

SEC. 3. Government acquisition of interisland cable to release contractor from responsibility therefor.—If the said interisland cable system shall be so acquired by the Government, the maintenance and operation, and all costs, charges, and expenses of maintaining and operating such interisland cable so conveyed shall, from the date of such conveyance, be conducted, borne, and sustained by the Government; and the contractor, his representatives and assigns, shall, from and after such date, be relieved from all responsibility and expense for or concerning such system, and no interruption or failure of communication occurring in such interisland cable system after the same shall have been so acquired by the Government shall work, or be made the cause, directly or indirectly, of the suspension or forfeiture of the subsidy hereby granted, or any part thereof, or be made a ground for the forfeiture of this agreement or any privilege thereby granted.

ARTICLE VI.—Use of cable ship.

And the contractor, for himself and his representatives and assigns, doth further convenant with the Government: That if the said interisland cable shall be so conveyed to the Government, the contractor, his representatives and assigns, will at all times allow the cable repairing ship owned by or controlled by him or them to be used by the Government in the repair or replacing of any of the cables in such interisland system, charging therefor only the actual cash outlay of the contractor, his representatives or assigns, in making such repairs or replacement.

ARTICLE VII.—Specifications of size, weight, materials, and efficiency of cables.

And the contractor doth hereby further covenant with the Government that the manufacture, size, and weight of the material used in and the method of storing and laying the said cable and cables shall be in accordance with the several specifications hereunto annexed, and made a part of this agreement.

And further, that all of such cable or cables so to be constructed, laid, equipped, operated, and maintained and all instruments and appliances shall and will be manufactured and constructed throughout in a good and workmanlike manner and of the best materials.

And further, that each and every of the said sections of cable shall, during the said term of twenty years, be continuously, except as herein provided, capable of efficiently transmitting not less than fifteen words per minute between the several points herein specified.

And further, that during the said term of twenty years efficient operators shall be maintained at each of the stations on said lines, who shall and will transmit over said cable lines all messages at such stations received for transmission at such rate of speed for the rates of tariff herein provided for.

ARTICLE VIII.—Schedule of rates.

SECTION 1. Interisland rates.—And the contractor, for himself and his representatives and assigns, doth hereby further covenant with the Government that during the continuance of the terms of this agreement the maximum charge for messages transmitted over the said interisland cable system, from the point of receiving such messages to its point of destination, shall not exceed the following prescribed limit, viz, not to exceed 10 cents for each word so transmitted.

Provided, however, That it shall not be obligatory upon the contractor, his representatives or assigns, to send any message for less than $1.

SEC. 2. Foreign rates.—And further, that during such period the maximum rates for the transmission of any message, other than Government messages, to or from the Hawaiian Islands over such cable between Honolulu and San Francisco, shall be such as shall be agreed upon in any contract which shall be made between the contractor, his representatives or assigns, and the United States Government, not exceeding $1 per word, and any contract with such Government shall prescribe a maximum scale of rates.

And further, that if telegraphic communications shall be hereafter established between the Hawaiian Islands and Australasia or Japan, the rate to be charged for any message transmitted from Honolulu to San Francisco, or from San Francisco to Honolulu, shall not exceed a pro rata proportion, based on distance, of the regular rate for transmitting a similar message to or from San Francisco and Australasia or Japan.

And further, that messages from Honolulu to points beyond San Francisco shall not be charged higher rates beyond San Francisco than the rates which the contractor may be charged for the transmission of the same.

SEC. 3. Press rates.—And further, that the rates for ordinary messages or items of news to any newspaper or news bureau of the Republic of Hawaii (commonly known as press messages) shall not exceed one-half the rate which shall be charged for other messages, excepting messages to or from the Hawaiian Government, or any officer thereof in his official capacity, or to or from any foreign Government.

Provided, however, That it shall not be obligatory upon the contractor, his representatives, or assigns, to send any press message for less than $1.

SEC. 4. Hawaiian Government rates.—And further, that during the said term of twenty years all messages concerning the official business of the Hawaiian Government, to or from the Hawaiian Government or any of its officials, transmitted over said interisland system of cables, or over the said cable from Honolulu to San Francisco, shall be transmitted free up to the amount of the annual subsidy paid by the Government to the contractor, his representatives or assigns, reckoning the charge and scale of rates for such Government messages at the rate herein prescribed or provided for ordinary messages.

ARTICLE IX.—Security for execution of contract.

SECTION 1. Deposit of bonds with minister of finance.—And the contractor, for himself and his representatives and assigns, doth hereby further covenant with the Government that he will, upon the execution of this agreement, deposit with the minister of finance of the Republic of Hawaii, Hawaiian Government bonds to the amount of $25,000 as security that he and his representatives and assigns will construct, lay, and equip the said cables and land lines in accordance with the terms and conditions of this agreement.

Upon the completion of the construction, equipment, and laying of said systems of cable and land lines in the manner herein provided for, the obligation and obligations secured by such bonds shall be deemed to have been fulfilled and performed, and such bonds shall thereupon be returned to the contractor, his representatives or assigns.

But if after the beginning of the construction of said cables, in manner herein specified, there shall be any failure to complete the construction, laying, and equipment of such systems and such land lines within the time herein specified, then and in such case such bonds shall be forfeited to the Hawaiian Government as liquidated damages, and there shall be no further or other claim by way of damages by the Government against the contractor, his representatives or assigns.

SEC. 2. Contractor may cancel this contract within a specified time.—Provided, however, That the contractor, his representatives or assigns, may at any time prior to the 1st day of May, A. D. 1897, notify the Government of his or their desire to cancel this contract, whereupon this contract shall become null and void, and such bonds so deposited as security shall thereupon be forthwith returned to the contractor, his representatives or assigns.

ARTICLE X.—Definition of "beginning of construction."

It is hereby mutually agreed that the beginning of the construction of the cables specified in section 1 of Article IV of this agreement shall be construed to mean, and shall mean, the completion and execution of a contract between the contractor and a responsible cable construction company or companies for the construction and laying of such cable and cables within the period limited by the terms of this contract, and the actual beginning of the work of construction under such contract with such construction company or companies, and a written notice to the Government by the contractor, his representatives or assigns, accompanied by proofs of the execution of such contract.

ARTICLE XI.—Contract binding on and in favor of representatives, assigns, etc.

It is hereby mutually agreed by and between the parties hereto, on behalf of themselves and their respective successors, representatives, and assigns, that all terms and conditions herein contained upon the part of the Government to be observed, kept, or performed, shall be equally binding and obligatory as well upon the Hawaiian Government and the said party of the first part and his successors; and that all of the agreements and covenants herein contained upon the part of the contractor to be kept or observed or performed, are and shall be as well in favor of and enforceable by the Hawaiian Government and the party of the first part as his successors in office.

And further, that all of the terms and conditions and covenants herein contained upon the part of the contractor to be observed, kept, or performed shall be equally binding and obligatory upon the said party of the second part as upon his representatives and assigns; and that all of the agreements and covenants herein contained on the part of the Government, or of said party of the first part, or his successors, to be kept, observed, or performed, are, and shall be, as well in favor of and enforceable by the party of the second part as his representatives and assigns.

[Specifications of cables hereinbefore referred to. Proposed telegraph cable from San Francisco to Honolulu and Hawaiian interisland cables.]

SAN FRANCISCO-HONOLULU CABLE.

The landing place near San Francisco may be at Monterey Bay, and the landing place near Honolulu at Waikiki.

Lengths of cable required.

	Nautical miles.
Shore end (type A)	2
Intermediate No. 1 (type E)	3
Intermediate No. 2 (type B)	51
Deep sea (type D)	2,444
Total	2,500

SPECIFICATION.

Core.

(a) Conductor.—The conductor to be a strand of copper wires weighing 400 pounds per nautical mile, or within 5 per cent thereof, and the resistance at 75° Fahrenheit shall not be more than 3.117 ohms.

(b) Insulator.—The conductor is to be insulated with three coatings of gutta-percha of improved inductive capacity, prepared according to Mr. Willoughby Smith's system, alternating with three coatings of Chatterton's compound, and to weigh 300 pounds per knot, or within 5 per cent thereof. The resistance of the completed core to be not less than 150 megohms per nautical mile after one minute's electrification, when tested at a temperature of 75° Fahrenheit, after twenty-four hours' immersion in water, fourteen days after manufacture, and the average inductive capacity per nautical mile throughout the entire length is not to exceed 0.414 microfarad.

(c) Sheathing.—The core of types A, E, and B to be covered with Clifford's patent sheathing for protection against the ravages of insects.

(d) Serving.—The core of all the types to be served with a good and sufficient serving of jute yarn, steeped in cutch or other preservative mixture, and applied wet.

Outer coverings.—Shore end.

(e) Outer coverings.—Type A.—Type B to be served with tarred jute yarn, and again closed with fourteen galvanized BB iron wires, No. 1 B. W. G. equal to three hundred one-thousandths of an inch when galvanized, or within 2½ per cent thereof.

Intermediate, No. 1.

(f) Type E.—The served core to be covered with twelve galvanized BB iron wires, No. 4 B. W. G., equal to two hundred and thirty-eight one-thousandths of an inch when galvanized, or within 2½ per cent thereof.

Intermediate, No. 2.

(g) Type B.—The served core to be covered with twelve galvanized BB iron wires, No. 6 B. W. G., equal to two-hundred one-thousandths of an inch when galvanized, or within 2½ per cent thereof.

Deep-sea.

(h) Type D.—The served core to be covered with seventeen galvanized steel wires, each wire being taped and compounded. The steel wires to be No. 14 B. W. G., equal to eighty-three one-thousandths of an inch when galvanized, or within 2½ per cent thereof, and to bear a breaking strain of not less than 85 tons per square inch, with an elongation of not less than 4 per cent.

(i) Before being used for the sheathing of types A, E, and B, the galvanized iron wire is to be heated in a kiln or oven just sufficiently to drive off all moisture, and while warm is to be dipped into a hot compound or black varnish.

Outside serving.

(j) Types A and E, manufactured as above, to be covered with two servings of jute yarn laid on spirally in opposite directions, alternately with two coatings of Clark's compound.

(k) Types B and D, manufactured as above, to be covered with two of Johnson & Phillip's patent tapes, laid on spirally in opposite directions, alternately with two coatings of Clark's compound.

(f) Type B¹.—The served core to be covered with twelve galvanized BB iron wires, No. 9 B. W. G., equal to one hundred and forty-eighth one-thousandths of an inch when galvanized, or within 2½ per cent thereof.

Deep sea.

(g) Type D.—The served core to be covered with fifteen galvanized homogeneous iron wires. The homogeneous wires to be No. 13 B. W. G., equal to ninety-nine one-thousandths of an inch when galvanized, or within 2½ per cent thereof, and to bear a breaking strain of not less than 52 tons per square inch with an elongation of not less than 3 per cent.

(h) Dipping.—Before being used for the sheathing the galvanized iron wire is to be heated in a kiln or oven just sufficiently to drive off all moisture, and while warm is to be dipped into a hot compound or black varnish.

Outside serving.

(i) Outside serving.—Type A to be covered with two servings of jute yarn laid on spirally in opposite directions, and two coatings of Clark's compound.

(j) Types B^1 and D to be covered with two of Johnson & Phillips's patent tapes, laid on spirally in opposite directions, alternately with two coatings of Clark's compound.

GENERAL CLAUSES.

(k) Cable to be kept under water.—The cable when completed to be coiled in suitable water-tight tanks, and kept, as far as practicable, constantly under water.

(l) Tanks on board ship.—The completed cable to be coiled on board ship in water-tight tanks, and kept, as far as practicable, under water until submerged.

(m) Final electrical condition of cable.—The electrical condition of the cable when laid to be such as, having regard to its previous condition and making due allowance for the mean actual temperature of the water, as shown by the resistance of the conductor, to give no good grounds for believing that any fault exists in the insulator or conductor.

In witness whereof the said Sanford Ballard Dole, President of the Republic of Hawaii, hath hereunto set his hand and caused the great seal of the Republic of Hawaii to be hereunto attached; and Francis M. Hatch, minister of foreign affairs; Samuel M. Damon, minister of finance; James A. King, minister of interior; and William O. Smith, attorney-general, constituting the cabinet of the Republic of Hawaii, in token of their consent to and approval of this agreement, and the said Zephaniah Swift Spalding have hereunto set their hands and seals, the day and year first above written.

APPENDIX B.

CERTIFICATE OF INCORPORATION OF THE PACIFIC CABLE COMPANY.

This is to certify that we, the undersigned, do hereby associate ourselves into a company under and by virtue of the provisions of the acts of the legislature of the State of New Jersey, entitled "An act concerning corporations" (approved April 7, 1875), and the several supplements thereto and acts amendatory thereof, for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, and to that end we do by this our certificate set forth—

First. That the name which we have assumed to designate such company and to be used in its business and dealings is the "Pacific Cable Company."

Second. That the places in this State where the business of the said company is to be conducted are the city of Jersey City, in the county of Hudson and State of New Jersey, and in such other townships and cities in this State as the nature and the progress of the business of the corporation shall from time to time render necessary or desirable.

The principal part of the business of said company within the State of New Jersey is to be transacted in the city of Jersey City, county of Hudson aforesaid.

The principal office or place of business of the said company outside the State of New Jersey is San Francisco, in the county of San Francisco and State of California.

The company will carry on a portion of its business without the State of New Jersey, and the places out of the State of New Jersey where the same is to be conducted and where the company proposes to carry on operations are in the State of California and in the Hawaiian Islands, and in such other places in the several States and Territories of the United States and in such foreign countries as shall from time to time be found necessary and convenient for the purposes of the company's business.

Third. That the objects for which this company is formed are to do any or all of the things herein set forth to the same extent as natural persons might or could do, and in any part of the world, as principals, agents, contractors, trustees, or otherwise, and either alone or in company with others, viz:

The construction, laying, operating, and maintaining of electric submarine cables in the Pacific Ocean, with telegraph lines and connections for the transmission of messages by electrical means, including the acquisition, by purchase, by manufacture, or otherwise, of all materials, supplies, machinery, and other articles necessary or convenient for use in connection with and in carrying on the business herein mentioned or any part thereof.

(a) To manufacture, purchase, or otherwise acquire, hold, own, mortgage, pledge, sell, assign, and transfer, invest, trade, deal in and deal with goods, wares, and merchandise, and property of every class and description.

(b) To the same extent as natural persons might or could do, to purchase or otherwise acquire, to hold, own, to mortgage, sell, convey, or otherwise dispose of, without limit as to amount, within or without the State of New Jersey, real estate and real property of every class and description.

(c) To acquire the good will, rights, and property of any kind, and to undertake the whole or any part of the assets and liabilities of any person, firm, association, or corporation, and to pay for the same in cash, stock of this company, bonds, or otherwise.

(d) To apply for, obtain, register, purchase, lease, or otherwise acquire, and to hold, own, use, operate, introduce, and to sell, assign, or otherwise dispose of, any and all trade-marks, trade names, and distinctive marks, and all inventions, improvements, and processes used in connection with or secured under letters patent of the United States or elsewhere or otherwise; And to use, exercise, develop, grant licenses in respect of, or otherwise turn to account, any such trade-marks, patents, licenses, concessions, processes, and the like, or any such property, rights, and information so acquired, and with a view to the working and development of the same to carry on any business, whether manufacturing or otherwise, which the company may think calculated directly or indirectly to effectuate these objects.

(e) To purchase or otherwise acquire, to hold, sell, assign, transfer, mortgage, pledge, exchange, or otherwise dispose of bonds, mortgages, debentures, obligations, or shares of the capital stock of any corporation, and to exercise while the owner thereof all the rights, powers, and privileges, including the right to vote thereon, which natural persons, being the owners of such stock and property, might, could, or would exercise.

(f) To draw, make, accept, indorse, discount, execute, and issue promissory notes, bills of exchange, warrants, bonds, debentures, and other negotiable or transferable instruments.

(g) To procure the company to be registered or recognized and to carry on its operations and business in any State or Territory of the United States and in any foreign country or place.

To do all and everything necessary, suitable, or proper for the accomplishment of any of the purposes or attainment of any of the objects hereinbefore enumerated or which shall at any time appear conducive or expedient for the protection or benefit of the company as holders of or interested in any such properties mentioned or referred to herein or otherwise, and in general to engage in any and all lawful business whatever, necessary or convenient (excepting always from this charter the business of an insurance company, a banking company, a savings bank, or other corporation intended to derive profit from the loan and use of money, a railroad or other company which shall need to possess the right of taking and condemning lands in the State of New Jersey), with all the powers which are now or may hereafter be granted to corporations under the laws of the State of New Jersey.

It is the intention that the objects specified in the third paragraph shall, except where otherwise expressed in said paragraph, be nowise limited or restricted by reference to or inference from the terms of any other clause or other paragraph in this charter, but that the objects specified in each of the clauses of this paragraph shall be regarded as independent objects.

Fourth. The portion of the business of the said company which is to be carried on without the State of New Jersey is a part of its financial business, any part or all of its purchasing, manufacturing, and selling business, any part or all of its dealings in personal or real property of all kinds and choses in action, any part or all of the negotiation, sale, and delivery of its stocks, bonds, and other securities, any part or all of its business pertaining to patents, patent rights, trade-marks, and any and all other parts of its business described in paragraph 3 herein which may be or become necessary or convenient or deemed profitable for the company.

Fifth. The total amount of the capital stock of this company is to be $1,000,000, and the number of shares into which it is to be divided is 10,000 shares of $100 each.

Sixth. The amount of capital with which said company will commence business is $1,000,000, which is divided into 10,000 shares of $100 each.

Seventh. The names and addresses of the stockholders, and the number of shares of stock held by each, are as follows:

Name.	Residence.	Number of shares.
Abram S. Hewitt	New York City	1,500
D. O. Mills	do	1,000
G. M. Dodge	do	1,000
Fred. D. Grant	do	500
Wager Swayne	do	500
Jas. J. Hill	St. Paul, Minn	1,000
Z. S. Spalding	San Francisco, Cal	2,500
Jno. H. Browning	Tenafly, N. J	1,000
Mason W. Tyler	Plainfield, N. J	1,000

Eighth. The period at which said company shall commence is the 1st day of January, 1896, and the period at which it shall terminate shall be fifty years thereafter.

Ninth. (1.) The board of directors shall have full and unrestricted power without the assent or vote of the stockholders to authorize and cause to be executed mortgages and liens upon the real and personal property of this company, upon such terms and conditions as shall to the board seem proper, and upon like terms and conditions to sell, in the usual course of business, property both real and personal.

With the consent in writing and pursuant to vote of the holders of a majority of the stock issued and outstanding, the stockholders having been formally convened in a meeting, the directors shall have power and authority to sell, assign, transfer, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of the whole property of this corporation, or any part or portion thereof, on such terms and conditions as the directors shall deem fit, right, and just.

(2.) The board of directors, in addition to the powers and authorities by statute and by the by-laws expressly conferred upon them, may exercise all such powers and do all such acts and things as may be exercised or done by the corporation, but subject, nevertheless, to the provisions of the statute, of the charter, and to any regulations that may from time to time be made by the stockholders, provided that no regulations so made shall invalidate any provisions of this charter, or any prior acts of the directors which would have been valid if such regulations had not been made.

(3.) The company may in its by-laws confer powers additional to the foregoing upon the directors, and may prescribe the number necessary to constitute a quorum of its board of directors, which number may be less than a majority of the whole number.

(4.) The board of directors may, by resolution passed by a majority of the whole board, designate two or more of their number to constitute an executive committee, which committee shall for the time being, as provided in said resolution or in the by-laws of said company, have and exercise all the powers of the board of directors in the management of the business and affairs of the company, and have power to authorize the seal of the company to be affixed to all papers which may require it.

(5.) No stockholder holding less than 10 per cent of the total stock issued shall be entitled to an examination of the books of account, or documents, or papers, or vouchers of this company, except by a resolution of the board of directors giving such privilege, and an examination shall then be had only at the time and place, in the manner, to the extent, and by the person named in such resolution of the board of directors, excepting from this entire restriction only such corporate records as are, by statute, open to the inspection of stockholders.

This restriction shall not be construed to limit the right or power of any director or officer of the corporation to examine the books, papers, or vouchers of the said corporation.

(6.) The company may use and apply its surplus property earnings or accumulated profits, authorized by law to be reserved to the creation and maintenance of a surplus fund, or to the purchase and acquisition of property, and to the purchase and acquisition of its own capital stock, and may take the same in payment or satisfaction of any debt due the company from time to time, and to such extent and in such manner and upon such terms as its board of directors shall determine; and neither the surplus fund, nor the property nor the capital stock so purchased and acquired, nor any of its capital stock taken in payment or satisfaction of any debt due the company, shall be regarded as profits for the purpose of the declaration or payment of dividends unless a majority of the board of directors, or a majority of all the stock then issued and outstanding, shall otherwise determine.

In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals this 13th day of December, A. D. 1895.

STATE OF NEW YORK, City and County of New York, ss:

Be it remembered that on this 13th day of December, A. D. 1895, before me, Joseph B. Braman, a commissioner of deeds for the State of New Jersey, in and for the State of New York, resident in said city of New York, personally appeared Abram S. Hewitt, D. O. Mills, G. M. Dodge, Frederick D. Grant, Wager Swayne, James J. Hill, Z. S. Spalding, Mason W. Tyler, and Jno. H. Browning, who, I am satisfied, are the persons named in and who executed the foregoing certificate, and I, having first made known to them, and each of them, the contents thereof, they did each acknowledge that they signed, sealed, and delivered the same as their voluntary act and deed.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal the day and year last above written.

[SEAL.] JOSEPH B. BRAMAN,
Commissioner of Deeds for the State of New Jersey in and for the State of New York, resident in said City of New York.

HENRY C. KELSEY,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY, Department of State:

I, Henry C. Kelsey, secretary of state of the State of New Jersey, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the certificate of organization of the Pacific Cable Company and the indorsements thereon, as the same is taken from and compared with the original filed in my office on the 16th day of December, A. D. 1895, and now remaining on file therein.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, at Trenton, this 16th day of December, A. D. 1895.
HENRY C. KELSEY,
Secretary of State.

Mr. HALE. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLEN. Before the Senator from Maine takes his seat I should like to ask him what became of the amendment that we put upon the Post-Office appropriation bill last year appropriating $500,000 for the construction of a cable line between the United States and Hawaii.

Mr. HALE. I have stated. That amendment, as the Senator will remember, was amended at his suggestion so as to provide that the Government should own the property.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. In that form it passed the Senate. It was voted down in the other House, and the matter went into conference. The Senate insisted upon its proposition for two several conferences; but as the session waned and the bill could not be lost, the Senate at last receded from its own action and the project fell.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not believe that it would now be better policy for us to put such an amendment upon the Post-Office appropriation bill this year to the same effect, and insist upon it, by which the Government would own and control this cable line?

Mr. HALE. The main reason for the change in the manner of acting that has operated in my mind is, that since the time to which the Senator refers the Hawaiian Government has come in with a subsidy of $40,000 a year, to be given to any company that, in connection with the United States, will lay the cable. At that time nobody had shown any interest in the matter. Hawaii had done nothing; there was no indication that it would help pay the bills; and therefore the only thing to do was to build the cable ourselves. But since then, as I have before stated, Hawaii comes in and is ready to assume what I think is her share, one-sixth of the expense of the whole subsidy, and that, therefore, puts the question in a different light.

Mr. ALLEN. I suppose the Senator has no doubt that the Hawaiian Government would cooperate with this Government in the construction of a telegraph line by the Government of the United States?

Mr. HALE. The answer is that the Hawaiian Government has now parted with its rights to do that to Mr. Spalding or to his assigns for the time between now and November 1, 1898.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator, if I am not unnecessarily interrupting him.

Mr. HALE. Not at all.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest that that is such a concession as the Government of Hawaii would have perfect power to cancel. It is not a vested right. It is a grant of sovereignty which may be recalled. Has the Senator any doubt that if the Government of the United States would make a proper appropriation for the construction of a line to be owned and controlled by this Government the Hawaiian Government would properly cooperate with us in that construction?

Mr. HALE. As I have said, I do not know. I have no doubt there is a feeling in Hawaii to cooperate with us in every form possible, but it has chosen this other way of showing its cooperation, and has endowed Mr. Spalding and his company with this gift, so that for two years and more they have a right, if the United States Government will join with them, to lay the cable, and the participation of the United States in the enterprise must be in the form of a subsidy. We, I will say to the Senator, to all intents and purposes own it if we want it. If the Senator will examine the provisions of the bill he will find that on any emergency, of which we are to be the judge, we may take entire possession, control it, operate it, own it, only making the members of the company good their advances.

So we get the cable built. We get the enterprise, with these men enlisted in it. We do not have to do it by governmental means, by the paternal methods. We get the line constructed. Our obligation is not large. It is one that will not be felt by the people; and at any moment we can do what I agree with the Senator is desirable in an emergency, take it and own it; but we do not have to go through the steps and the processes necessary to construct it. As I reflect upon it, in connection with this act of the Hawaiian Government, I think this is, perhaps, the better way to do it. I should not think so if there were not ample provisions for our taking it and owning it on any emergency.

Mr. ALLEN. I observe by the Senator's bill, however, that we guarantee them 4 per cent interest upon their investment. There is no safeguard in the bill, that I can see, against the overcapitalization of the company. They may actually put in one sum of money and capitalize for two or three times that sum, and under the Senator's bill we would be compelled to guarantee them 4 per cent upon their capitalization.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; the Senator is mistaken. It is all safeguarded in that regard. It is only 4 per cent upon moneys actually expended and shown to be expended in stock of the company.

Mr. ALLEN. How are we to know what has been actually expended?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly the Government, as a matter of administration, will appoint proper persons, as we would do in any case where we subsidize a line; we have somebody who sees that the men perform the service. We would require a strict system of accounts, and every dollar that was expended would have to be vouched for.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand that the Senator does not doubt the power of the Government of the United States to construct such a cable line?

Mr. HALE. No; I have not any doubt.

Mr. ALLEN. That is conceded. Then it becomes a question of policy whether it would be better for the Government directly to own and operate the line or to subsidize it and assist some private corporation in operating it.

Mr. HALE. That is one of the questions, as I have said, that the committee must consider.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Maine prefers to assist some private corporation in the construction and operation of this line rather than have the Government of the United States construct and operate it itself?

Mr. HALE. I repeat, in the present condition of this enterprise, the Hawaiian Government having selected its method of giving a subsidy to Mr. Spalding or to the company, having given them the exclusive privilege of laying the cable there, I think rather than to go into any doubtful question as to what we could do, aside from that it is better to seize this opportunity and help the company to construct the line under every safeguard we can throw about it. Every dollar of the expenditure will be vouched for. Our obligations will be known as clearly as they are known when we build a ship of war, or when we improve a river and harbor, or any other work in which Government money is expended. Then, above all, at any day, or any hour night or day, we may lay hands upon and take that property and it becomes ours. I do not see any embarrassment about it. I think there are some advantages in this way over and above our going through the machinery of laying the cable ourselves. I think it will be laid cheaper. I think it will not cost so much by private enterprise aided by us as it would for the Government to do the work. I think the latter course would repeat the history we have made on the construction of war ships, where the most expensive ship, the longest time taken, and the less results shown are when the work has been done by the Government rather than by companies and individuals outside.

I have learned in my experience in that branch of the Government that we get a better ship by far for less money and in less time out of a private than out of a governmental yard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the motion of the Senator from Maine to refer the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. Before the question is put on the motion, I desire to say a few words.

At the last session of the last Congress an amendment was placed upon the Post-Office appropriation bill appropriating $500,000 for a survey for a cable line between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands, and also to commence the construction of the line when the survey was completed. On my motion that amendment was so amended as to vest the title of the cable line in the Government of the United States when it was completed, the amendment in fact providing that it should be constructed by the Government and paid for as the work progressed, and that the line should always remain Government property and be operated at actual cost and kept in repair. The honorable Senator from Maine and a former distinguished member of this body from South Carolina, Senator Butler, agreed with me that there was no doubt as to the power of this Government to construct such a line, to own it and operate it, and, if I recollect rightly, they were fully in accord with me at that time as to the desirability of pursuing that course.

I wish to place myself on record as being opposed to this bill, but not as opposed to the construction of a cable line between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands, because I believe that such a line should be constructed. I had the honor in the last Congress to introduce a resolution in the Senate for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the Government of the United States, which I am in favor of. That resolution came within 2 votes of passing, and I have always thought if it had not been a Populistic measure, introduced from a Populistic source, it would have been adopted here and possibly it would be a law at this time.

I am opposed to this bill because I believe it to be not only within the power of the Government to construct such a line, but because I believe it to be the policy of the Government to do so. I do not believe the Government of the United States should be mixed up in the form of a partnership with any private individual or private corporation in this or any like enterprise.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I interrupt the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I sympathize entirely with his idea that the Government of the United States should not guarantee interest on the overcapitalization of any telegraphic company. I take it for granted, according to the statement of the Senator from Maine, that there would be nothing of that kind in the bill; that the guaranties of the Government of Hawaii and the Government of the United States will be upon the actual cost of laying a cable. That being the case, it seems to me, if the Senator will allow me to say so, that this method is preferable to his method. If the Government of the United States or the two Governments build a cable, I ask the Senator may it not be necessary after all to turn about and lease it to some private company? Is it going to be wise for the two Governments to be carrying on the commercial business of running a cable between the Pacific Coast and the Sandwich Islands? I will put my question in this form: Can not a judicious, economical, and wise contract be made by the two Governments with a private company, properly safeguarded, which would be preferable to making it purely a Government enterprise? I venture to ask the question because the Senator is broad in his notions, and patriotic, and very much in favor of the independence of the Sandwich Islands, and I think of their annexation, and very much in favor of a telegraph line, which we need very much, and yet he is opposed to the only method that is proposed for getting the telegraph line.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New Hampshire misunderstands my position. I am decidedly in favor of the construction of this cable line, but I want the Government of the United States to own it, and to control it and operate it. The Senator asks me if I do not believe that it would be wiser and better for the Government, even if it owned such a line, to lease it to private parties under a properly drawn contract. I do not believe so. I do not believe it would be any wiser to lease a cable line that is used for postal purposes than it would be to lease the post-offices and the post-routes of the United States. Those were private enterprises at one time in the history of this country. I am told by those who are older than I am that they remember distinctly the time when in this country it cost 25 cents to send a letter from one State to another, and in some instances more. The entire postal system of the United States was a private enterprise, exactly as the old stage lines and stage coaches were private enterprises. Yet the Government of the United States saw proper to discontinue the postal service as a private enterprise. Through its sovereign power the Government took control of the postal service throughout the length and breadth of the land, and eventually it assumed control of the postal service emanating from this country and going abroad. Why was that done? Because it made the service more uniform and better, cheaper, and quicker. It was in the interest of the public that that was done.

Now, if we give the money of this Government to the Pacific Cable Company or to any other private enterprise we are simply going into a line of business where we have sunk and are liable to sink in the next twenty years four or five hundred million dollars. The Senator from Maine looks at me with some surprise. I mean to say that the system of subsidizing Pacific railroads, for instance, and the attempt that was made in this Chamber to subsidize the Nicaragua Canal last year will, before they are completed, if they become consummated, cost this Government $500,000,000, if not more. The experience we have had in that line is not such, in my judgment, as to make it satisfactory to our people.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I sympathize with a great many of the Senator's ideas, but he seems to me to go wild in his differences from all the rest of the world, which seems to be the Populistic function. The Senator criticises the construction of the Pacific roads. A great deal of time might be spent in censuring the method that was adopted, but the fact was that under that method railroad communication across the continent was accomplished in less than seven years. The Senator from Maine will correct me if I am wrong. I say in less than seven years of the ten years that were allowed for that purpose that line was built, while if the Government had undertaken to build the roads for itself the work would have probably dragged for fifteen years.

Does the Senator mean to say, going back to that magnificent enterprise, that because he can find fault with the methods that were adopted for building the Pacific railroads the Government itself ought to have built the roads across the continent and to have continued to operate the roads for all time? Is that the Senator's notion about railroads?

Mr. ALLEN. I have not opposed and do not now oppose or criticise the construction of the Pacific roads per se. I criticise the method by which they were constructed and the means employed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator think the Government ought to have built those roads itself?

Mr. ALLEN. I certainly do.

Mr. FRYE. And run them?

Mr. ALLEN. And run them. Why not? It is paternalism, is it? Yes, that is the only trouble. There is the great bugaboo.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not for me.

Mr. ALLEN. Not for the Senator from New Hampshire. I am glad to hear that. Populism is growing; it is spreading into the Northeastern portion of this country. Mr. President, that is the only objection that any man ever made in public or private, and I am glad to do the Senator from New Hampshire the justice of saying that at all times he has had the courage of his convictions in this Chamber.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not willing to join the Populistic party quite yet. I am much more ready to take the Senator from Nebraska into my party than to join his. I say the paternalism of those methods would not deter me from adopting them. I do not think that I am in favor of such methods of governmental intervention in public works. It is a question of policy. One method may be adopted in one case and another method may be adopted in another case. It is not the fear that the Government will overstep its functions that would prevent me from adopting the method which the Senator proposes. In this case the speediest way to get a cable, which ought to be built right away, is to take the method that is close at hand. I hope the Senator, who is all right on the main question, will waive his objections to the method and cooperate with the one that is the practical method of accomplishing the result which all agree is desirable.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Populist party will not take the honorable Senator from New Hampshire into its ranks and into full membership fellowship just yet. I think we prefer to take him, very much as a friend of mine used to say that the Methodist Church took new converts, "for six months on suspicion." [Laughter.] We prefer to have him meet for repentance for a time; and if he proves himself worthy and well qualified, we will at the proper time receive him into full fellowship.

But I am glad to note the fact that light is dawning even in New England, and it is not as bad a thing now as it used to be when I first came here for a man to talk of the doctrine of ownership of railways by the Government. I have never heard a man upon the other side of the Chamber or upon this side, and I never expect to hear one, who can offer a decent reason against those arguments. I understand that gentlemen hold up their hands in holy horror and say, "that is populism;" "that is paternalism;" but you never undertake to define paternalism. You undertake to scare the country with a word, just as you do with the word "parity" and the word "fiat."

No, Mr. President, I am in favor of this Government owning and controlling this cable line for several reasons. In the first place, it would be cheaper, in my judgment, and directly in line with the policy of the Government in owning and controlling the Post-Office Department in all its features; and it would be directly in line with the true policy of this Government never to farm out to private individuals or private corporations any of its sovereign power. We might just as well say that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States should be farmed out to private enterprise (and I presume they would, in many instances, be as valuable as they are now if they were) as to say that the sovereign power to control the mail service of this Government, or any feature of it, should be farmed out to private corporations. The truth is, we are, every day of our lives here, delegating sovereign powers to private corporations and private enterprises that the Constitution places in this Government to be exercised in the interest of the people. Senators seem to be bent upon having these powers delegated to private corporations. When it comes to the question of the power and policy of this Government to own and operate such lines by itself unaided, and unaiding any private corporation in a like enterprise, I believe it is the true policy and the patriotic policy for the Government to own and operate them.

In the next place, there is another serious objection to the bill. Another great corporation is to be raised up, whose fangs eventually are to enter into the legislative and executive departments of this Government, if not into the judicial department, and one more enemy of free government is to be fed and encouraged by liberal appropriations made by Congress. How long will it be until this Pacific Cable Company will place in this Chamber and in the other House of Congress such servile tools as it wants to do its bidding in the form of legislation, and by that means stifle the cries and wishes of the people and enact legislation in the interests of private enterprise and in such a way as to lay additional burdens upon the masses of our people? I do not believe that we should encourage enterprises of this kind where it is in the interests of the Government to construct the work and where it is conceded that we have ample power to construct it ourselves.

Let me recur briefly to our experience with reference to Pacific railroads, for I do not want to be misunderstood upon that question. I admit that it was good policy to construct the Pacific roads, at least one of them, possibly all of them; it was the proper thing to do; but the originator of that enterprise, Mr. Asa Whitney, never expected it to be a private enterprise. His first petition to Congress, in 1846, I think, possibly in 1844, was to the effect that he was to construct the road out of a land grant to be given to him by Congress, and within a certain time after that he was to turn the road over to the Government, and it was to be a great governmental highway. That was his plan. I believe it would have been better policy, and that it would have been a great deal cheaper for this Government to have made a direct appropriation to construct the Pacific railroads from the Mississippi and Missouri rivers as they have been constructed to the Pacific Slope and to have owned and controlled them to-day.

We have a debt of $120,000,000 due us now. We have guaranteed bonds to the amount of $60,000,000, if not more, 6 per cent bonds, that we must make provision for at this Congress—subsidy bonds that were given to those roads. One of the strange things in the history of such transactions is that when the Government of the United States had the first lien upon the roads for the subsidy bonds through some kind of legerdemain, I know not what, that lien was taken off and certain stockholders and bondholders were given a lien prior to the Government's lien. We voluntarily relinquished the first lien upon those roads; we waived our right to foreclose upon the roads and reduce them to Government ownership, and gave to certain moneyed interests in this country a first lien, who now threaten to take the roads and leave the Government without a penny to pay the subsidy bonds or to recoup for the interest that has been paid upon the debt. Is it not likely that the time will come within fifteen or twenty years when a like policy will be pursued with reference to this Pacific Cable Company if it is subsidized?

I believe if we owned and controlled and operated a great transcontinental line of railway to-day we could squeeze a hundred per cent of water out of watered stock. By fixing the rates of passenger and freight tariff upon that road we could force every competing road in the United States to come to the prices fixed by the Government of the United States. It would go as far as anything we can do, if not further, to bring about an adjustment of this great railroad problem.

Mr. President, a railway is a public corporation; that is, it gets its power to go across your land and mine and to exercise the power of eminent domain because the Government farms out to it the sovereign power. That question first arose in this country in the case of Bloodgood vs. The Mohawk River Railroad Company, when the old court of errors of New York was composed of a few judges and the senators. It was a serious question for a great many years whether a private corporation or a corporation in the nature of a railroad company could exercise the sovereign power of eminent domain and force itself across the property of private individuals. Finally that position was sustained; the Supreme Court of the United States followed it, and every court in the Union follows it to-day.

Does any lawyer or any layman doubt that if a railroad company gets a right to construct a road in consequence of the Government farming out to it the right of eminent domain, there goes with that power, as an incident of the grant, the power to control the road that exercises the right of eminent domain? Has not this Government power, whenever necessity may bring about the occasion to exercise its sovereign power of eminent domain, to reduce every corporation of that kind in this country to Government ownership? The same power that the corporation exercises with reference to private property may be exercised by the Government with reference to the property of the corporation itself. It is a supreme power that knows no limit but the limit of necessity and desirability.

Why not, then, own and control those railroads? Out in the State in which I have the honor to live oats are being sold to-day for 11 cents a bushel—oats as fine as were ever grown upon the face of the earth. It costs 16½ cents of freight tariff to put a bushel of oats in market from Nebraska to New York—60 per cent more than the farmer can get for it there. So with corn, wheat, and all other farm products, and with meat products. I believe they are taking from the State of Nebraska and Kansas and other Western States every year $50,000,000 to pay interest upon watered stocks. No restraint is placed upon them by the State government. The State government has no power to place it upon the subsidized roads, in so far as they are doing an interstate traffic business. No restraint is placed upon them by Congress. They are at liberty under our laws to take a road that cost $25,000 a mile of honest money for its construction and to capitalize that road for $140,000 or $150,000 per mile, and by that means take the profits from the grain grower and the meat grower of the States through which they run. It amounts to millions and hundreds of millions of dollars in the course of a year. Is not that a matter of sufficient importance to awake at least some slight interest on the part of Congress?

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Do any of the transcontinental roads that run through Nebraska pay dividends on their stock, whether watered or otherwise?

Mr. ALLEN. They have done so until they have been looted.

Mr. HOAR. But they are in the hands of receivers now?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; and they ought to have been in the hands of receivers years ago.

Mr. HOAR. So the particular hardship which the Senator describes does not exist with the farmers of his State to-day? I put the question for information merely.

Mr. ALLEN. I am willing the Senator should interrupt me and ask a question, but I can not understand the policy of it. The Senator asks me if the stockholders of the railroad companies are drawing dividends to-day. I say some of them are and some of them are not, but throughout their history they have been drawing dividends.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will not understand that I put the question as differing from him in his comment about the Government's policy in regard to those roads. He can not express himself more strongly than I should wish to express myself if I had occasion to do so.

Mr. PEFFER. I suggest to Senators that all of this discussion is out of order. It is going on by unanimous consent, and I hope they will not protract it unnecessarily.

Mr. ALLEN. I will yield to the Senator from Kansas in a few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If a point of order is made the Chair is of opinion that the Senator from Nebraska is not in order, as unanimous consent was simply given that the speech of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] should be concluded, after which the unfinished business would be again laid before the Senate, when the Senator from Kansas would be recognized on the unfinished business.

Mr. PEFFER. I have no doubt the Senator from Nebraska will conclude his remarks soon. I was rather suggesting to other Senators not to interfere with the Senator from Nebraska in order that he might conclude his remarks, if it can be done soon.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall be through in about five minutes.

No, Mr. President, some of those roads are in the hands of receivers, and they ought to go into the hands of receivers. Those roads have been looted from one end to the other. They have been the subject of private plunder in many instances. If they had been managed as they should have been managed they would have yielded a fair compensation upon the actual capital and some compensation upon the entire capitalization. It is a godsend to the people of the United States that they are passing into the hands of receivers and going into liquidation.

Mr. President, I believe it would have been better for the Government to have constructed those roads and to own and operate them to-day. With reference to the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, I favor it. I want to see this Government, by the construction of a canal about 170 miles long, cut off the 10,000 miles of travel around the Horn. But I shall never vote for an interest-bearing obligation of this Government in aid of that or in aid of any other enterprise. It means the expenditure of $300,000,000 upon the part of this Government before that enterprise is finally paid for under such a system. Whenever we can issue the money here and commence the construction of the Nicaragua Canal and pay for it as we go along it will have my vote. But whenever it comes to the question of issuing bonds and subsidizing some private corporation that is to own and construct it and take its profits where we pay the interest and principal of the subsidy bonds, I shall oppose it, not because I do not realize the importance of the enterprise, not because I do not fully approve of it, but because I do not believe that this Government, as a matter of policy, should issue its bonds and incur an endless debt which future generations will be taxed to pay.

Mr. President, for these reasons I am opposed to the bill brought in by the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] will be considered as agreed to, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print, in one volume, all of the acts as they appear in the United States statutes, heretofore passed by Congress, imposing duties on imports.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 628) to provide an American register for the steamer Miami.

SILVER COIN AND COIN REDEMPTION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2904) to maintain and protect the coin redemption fund, and to authorize the issue of certificates of indebtedness to meet temporary deficiencies of revenue, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BUTLER to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

[Mr. PEFFER resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. See Appendix.]

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE COGSWELL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of William Cogswell, late a member of the House from the State of Massachusetts, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 16, 1896.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. William Cogswell, late a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the House do now adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the communication of the death of the Hon. William Cogswell, late a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 20, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 16, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege affecting the proceedings of this House, and ask the Clerk to read from a pamphlet issued by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York a paragraph which I have marked bearing upon the question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Then came the Alabama claims and the fisheries dispute, the first being decided in our favor and the latter against us, each side accepting the decision and paying the award like business men. Then came the seizure of Canadian sealing vessels by the United States in Bering Sea, which was arbitrated, and about $400,000 awarded to the owners of the seized vessels, which has not been paid, owing to the failure of Congress to make an appropriation therefor, and which we are in honor bound to settle without further delay.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not a question of privilege. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated that he rose to a question of privilege. The gentleman has stated no such question, nor does the article read from the desk constitute a privileged matter.

Mr. GROW. It is a privileged matter, for if it be untrue, as I shall demonstrate, it is a direct reflection upon the good faith of this House in the discharge of a national obligation. The alleged failure on the part of the House is not true——

Mr. CRISP. I beg pardon; the gentleman presents no privileged question. My friend would no doubt like to submit remarks upon it; but, nevertheless, it is not a matter of privilege.

I will refer the Chair to the rule in a moment.

Mr. GROW. I did not propose to take more than a minute. I simply desire to correct the statement. It is not true.

Now, does the gentleman from Georgia think that a direct reflection upon the House and its membership such as this does not constitute a question of privilege?

Mr. CRISP. I insist that the gentleman must wait until the Chair decides whether he has presented a privileged question or not. I make the point that the gentleman has not presented a question of privilege, and it is for the Chair to determine.

I am looking for the rule. I desire to call it to the attention of the Chair. The rule of the House is in the following words:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of its members individually, in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions except motions to adjourn.

Now, I insist, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman has not presented a question of privilege. The Chair heard the reading of the paragraph, and I invoke the judgment of the Speaker upon it.

Mr. GROW. Now, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can be heard upon the point of order.

Mr. GROW. In response to the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Speaker, I claim that any charge made against the good faith of the House with reference to its legislation upon any subject presents a question of privilege for the whole House, being just the same as a misrepresentation of the views and acts of the members themselves.

The arbitration, to which reference is made in this pamphlet, did not award a dollar of damages for the seizure of the fishing vessels; but if so, the representatives of the people on this floor are false to the discharge of their duty and to their country for refusing to assent to what an arbitration had agreed to. Now, I take it that that presents a question of privilege for the whole House. If not, I wish to make a statement which will bring it strictly within the rule, so that the Chair will be fully informed of the question.

Mr. CRISP. I ask a ruling of the Chair——

Mr. GROW (continuing). The joint high commission agreed on between Great Britain and this country, sitting at Paris, refused to consider the question of damages for the seizure of the sealing vessels, hence they made no award, but on the contrary the Secretary of State and the President of the United States agreed with the ambassador of Great Britain on a lump sum if Congress should approve of it.

Mr. CRISP. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should confine himself to the question of order.

Mr. GROW. My question of order is that whatever affects the vote of a member of the House presents a question of privilege.

But, Mr. Speaker, in order to bring it strictly within the rule I will make it personal to myself. I will raise the question of personal privilege. Before the House, when we voted on it, was the question of raising $400,000 in a lump sum, and we are told that two-thirds of this was claimed by American citizens who made sham sales of their vessels to unnaturalized citizens——

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that any question of privilege has been made out.

Mr. GROW. I am satisfied. [Laughter.]

PRINTING OF TARIFF ACTS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Printing to favorably report the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS], chairman of the Committee on Printing, presents the following report, which the Clerk will read to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and are hereby, authorized to cause to be printed, indexed, and bound in cloth, in one volume, all of the acts as they appear in the United States Revised Statutes, heretofore passed by Congress, imposing duty on imports, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DUTIES OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read at length. It provides that the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to inform the House whether or not, in his opinion, the duties of the Assistant Secretary of War can not, after March 4, 1897, be more satisfactorily performed by the designation or assignment by the Secretary of War of the commanding officers of the Army or the Adjutant-General of the Army to perform said duties during the illness or temporary absence of the Secretary of War.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that it seems to me that resolution should be investigated by a committee. The positions of Assistant Secretary of War and Assistant Secretary of the Navy were authorized in order that there might be a little civil blood in those two Departments. I think it would be better to have the resolution go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STEELE. I will state to the gentleman that there is no purpose in this resolution to try to amend the law. This is only a resolution for information.

Mr. CANNON. I should not mind the recommendation of the Secretary of War, even if he should recommend the change. I think it would be better to have the resolution go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the consideration of the resolution.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

The bill (S. 1) granting a pension to Mrs. Eva Davis Cogswell, widow of Brig. Gen. William Cogswell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 941) granting to the Atchison and Nebraska Railroad Company and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, its lessee in perpetuity, the right of way over a part of the Sac and Fox and Iowa Indian Reservation, in the States of Kansas and Nebraska—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

UNCOMPAHGRE INDIAN RESERVATION, UTAH.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back favorably the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Utah submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby requested to inform the House in detail as to the proceedings had and expenditures made by his Department in carrying out the provisions of sections 20, 21, and 22 of an act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, etc., approved August 15, 1894; with the names and residences of commissioners appointed under the provisions of said sections; with copies of instructions given by his Department to said commissioners, and with a statement, if not incompatible with the public service, of the probable time when that provision of said sections can be executed which provides for a restoration to the public domain of certain lands within the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation in the Territory of Utah."

Mr. SHERMAN. This is simply a resolution of inquiry. The act provided for the appointment of a commission to allot in severalty the lands of the Uncompahgre Indians in Utah, and also that the same commission should negotiate with the Uintah Indians in Utah in reference to allotting their lands in severalty. This resolution simply asks what action the Secretary of the Interior has taken under that act.

Mr. SAYERS. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Was the appropriation to which the gentleman refers embraced in a special act?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it was in the Indian appropriation act of 1894.

Mr. SAYERS. Did not the last Congress pass an act in reference to those tribes?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I think not. I am quite sure no such action was had.

Mr. SAYERS. I may be mistaken as to the tribes, but I am quite confident that the Delegate from Utah was insisting last session on the passage of a special act with reference to two Indian tribes.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that is true, I am not informed of it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman whether these lands include certain valuable asphalt deposits?

Mr. SHERMAN. They do include those lands.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is simply a resolution of inquiry?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all.

Mr. DOCKERY. It proposes to make no disposition of those lands at this time?

Mr. SHERMAN. No disposition at all.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEASE OF SCHOOL LANDS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill No. 2769. It has been reported favorably from the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2769) to authorize the leasing of lands for educational purposes in Arizona.

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands reserved for university purposes, and all of the school lands in the Territory of Arizona reserved by law for school purposes, may be leased under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory, but until such legislative action the governor, secretary of the Territory, and superintendent of public instruction shall constitute a board for the leasing of said lands under the rules and regulations heretofore prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for the respective purposes for which the said reservations were made, except that it shall not be necessary to submit said leases to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval; and all necessary expenses and costs incurred in the leasing, management, and protection of said lands and leases may be paid out of the proceeds derived from such leases.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in explanation of the bill that it simply makes available——

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Arizona will be allowed to explain the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. The bill simply makes available the reserved school lands of the Territory for revenue during the Territorial condition. The bill is identical with one passed last session for the Territory of Oklahoma. It confers no title and sells no land, but simply makes the school lands available now while they are idle and doing no good to anybody; and the bill gives authority to the Territory to lease them.

Mr. SAYERS. Is there a report from a committee?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. There is a favorable report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SAYERS. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Arizona as to whether there is any limit to the time of the leases?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. It is simply during the time Arizona remains a Territory. When it became a State, the State would own the lands.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Would not the lands be then burdened by existing leases?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Not by any means. I suppose that would all be regulated at the time when Arizona became a State, when it would be the owner of this land and have the fee simple to it.

Mr. FLYNN. I will state that this bill is identical with the Oklahoma bill which was drawn by the Department and passed at the last session. It is a question of allowing the authorities of the Territory to get the proceeds from the vacant lands in the reservation known as school lands in that Territory.

Mr. LACEY. I will state further that it relieves the Interior Department from being compelled to approve all these leases.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Is there any communication from the Interior Department in favor of this bill?

Mr. FLYNN. The same proposition has heretofore been approved by the Department.

Mr. LACEY. They prefer to be relieved from the approval of the leases, and the bill allows them to be made by the Territorial officers, without the approval of the Department.

Mr. McRAE. If my friend from New York will allow me, I will state that I do not think there can be any objection to this bill. It provides, as has already been stated, only a question of authority for the local officers of the Territory to lease the lands now reserved for school purposes, which will eventually be given for the education of the youth of that country, so as to enable them to receive some rent for a school fund from lands that are now given free, almost, to graziers. This bill itself perhaps has not been referred to the Department, but a bill to the same effect, in relation to Oklahoma, was indorsed by the Department last year, and I can not see why the same principle should not apply to the Territory of Arizona which has already been applied to that of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. STEELE. Pending the announcement of that vote, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution I introduced this morning.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The question was then taken; and the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DINGLEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills, and the Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3537) making appropriation for payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CLARK]; but, Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Iowa begins his remarks, I would like to have the attention of the committee for a moment in reference to the order of debate for to-day.

The committee in charge of this bill has been requested by a great many members that the bill be not taken up by paragraph to-day, but that the committee proceed to consider it under general debate; and the committee is disposed to do so, and to remain in session as long as there are members who are anxious to speak in general debate, without taking up the bill by paragraphs, and unless there shall be some considerable objection to it, the bill will not be taken up by paragraphs under the five-minute rule to-day.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The bill will not be voted on to-day?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No; there will be no vote taken to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to make any arrangement for closing general debate?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have no particular desire, as there seems to be no disposition manifested on the other side; but I will simply announce that general debate will be closed to-day, and that the bill will not be taken up under the five-minute rule to-day.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why do you not ask unanimous consent to close general debate to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to ask unanimous consent to close general debate to-day?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is my wish.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the pending appropriation bill be closed to-day, and that the bill be taken up to-morrow under the five-minute rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CLARK] is recognized.

Mr. CLARK of Iowa. I have no purpose, Mr. Chairman, to occupy the time of this committee in any general discussion of the measure now pending. I merely desire to call attention to a case or two within my personal knowledge, as contributions to the mass of testimony that is being submitted as constituting reasons why this Congress, representing the American people, making the appropriation of money for payment of pensions, shall define more fully and emphatically the conditions under which the Department or the Bureau of Pensions shall administer its service and distribute those funds. I favor the amendment offered by my friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] because it is in the line of needed legislation. Whether it be held germane to this bill or not, discussion of it will at least be useful as contributing to the proper and complete pension law which Congress should enact.

I will cite first an instance within my personal knowledge. Mr. Francis M. Ross, formerly a private in Company B, Forty-second Indiana Infantry, a resident of my own county, drew a pension under the laws of the United States. He made application for an increase of pension. Dr. John J. Rigg, a townsman of his, a physician of character and repute, a member of the board of examining surgeons in that county, gave a certificate as to his condition, which I will read:

STATE OF IOWA, Lee County:

KEOKUK, June 10, 1892.

This certifies that I am a resident of Keokuk, Iowa, Lee County; was formerly of Montrose, Iowa; was a practicing physician of Montrose for ten years; have known Francis M. Ross for several years; became his family physician in 1883, and have continued to be such ever since; was called to see him for heart trouble on the 13th day of September, 1885, and have examined him and treated him for said trouble on a number of occasions since. He has a chronic organic lesion of the heart; hypertrophy with valvular insufficiency, also regurgitation (mitral); such disability bringing about a very serious train of symptoms, such as difficulty in breathing, smothering spells when lying down, pain in the region of the heart, and upon the least exertion there occurs a severe attack of palpitation. He is unfit for manual labor and especially labor that would require much walking or lifting. His degree of disability is more than it would be from the loss of leg or arm. I have no interest in the prosecution of this claim.

JOHN J. RIGG, M. D.

The gentleman giving this certificate is, as I have already stated, a physician of high character, and is at present a member of the board of examining surgeons for pension applicants in my county.

Dr. J. M. Anderson, was a resident of my county for fifty years, a gentleman of the very highest character, a gentleman of such standing and repute in his lifetime that when he died last year almost the whole county gathered at his burial, and I felt honored, Mr. Chairman, when, as a personal friend and representative of the district, I was asked to be one of the pallbearers who should bear that honored man, a citizen of my county from the Territorial period, to his grave.

He was a man as honest as Washington and as courageous as Jackson. He would not have borne false testimony for his life. He furnished a certificate to Mr. Ross, which is as follows:

MONTROSE, LEE COUNTY, IOWA, September 16, 1890.

In the matter of the claim of F. M. Ross, late private in Company B, Forty-second Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, for increase of pension.

Personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for said county and State, J. M. Anderson, M. D., whose post-office address is Montrose, Lee County, Iowa, whom I certify to be reputable and entitled to credit, and declares in reference to the above case as follows:

I have been intimately acquainted with said soldier for twenty-five years, and a portion of that time was his family physician. I treated soldier about eighteen years ago for pleuro-pneumonia, and discovered at that time that he had chronic pleurisy with lesion. The exact date of my first treatment I can not give. I have prescribed for him at different times since, and have made a careful physical examination of his condition quite recently, and find cardiac enlargement and mitral insufficiency, also enlargement and induration of liver and spleen, and inability to lie down except upon his abdomen, his face down on his pillow. By reason of these complicated diseases he is incapacitated from manual labor, and the degree of his disability is, in my opinion, equal to the loss of an arm or leg.

I am 70 years old; have practiced medicine forty-eight years, and I have no interest in the prosecution of this claim.

J. M. ANDERSON, M. D.

Dr. A. Weisman, also a member of the board of examining surgeons, gave a certificate to the same effect; which is as follows:

KEOKUK, IOWA, December 22, 1894.

A. Weisman, M. D., a citizen of Keokuk, Iowa, whose post-office address is 1123 Main street, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to aforesaid case as follows: I am a practicing physician and have been acquainted with said soldier for a short time. I never attended claimant professionally, but have made an examination of his physical condition at this date at his own request, and have found the following disabilities:

He has chronic pleurisy, affecting both lungs Some emplysemia of left lung, slight over base of right lung. Pleuritic adhesions of left lung, causing dry, hacking cough, particularly at night. Can't lay on his back, or on either side, for any length of time, causing dyspnœa; bowels tympanitic, spleen enlarged, hypertrophy of heart, and anemia. Disabilities increase in cold and damp weather, and are in such a degree as to disable him from doing any manual labor. The disability did exist, as claimant states, while in the service.

The above affidavit is in my own handwriting, and, in making the same, I did not use and was not aided or prompted by any written or printed statement verified, prepared, or dictated by any other person and not attached as on credit of my testimony.

A. WEISMAN, M. D., Keokuk, Iowa.

Dr. J. J. Rigg, of whom I have already spoken, after he became a member of the board of examining surgeons supplemented his first statement by an additional one, which is as follows:

KEOKUK, IOWA, January 15, 1894.

In the pension claim No. 204667, of Francis M. Ross, of Montrose, Iowa, I respectfully submit the following in regard to the case: I have known said soldier intimately over ten years and have been his family physician the greater part of this time. He has suffered from chronic pleuritis, with adhesion over the lower lobe of left lung; also hypertrophy of heart, with valvular insufficiency; also fermentative dyspepsia, resulting in a chronic gastritis; has dropsical effusions around the heart and in the abdominal cavity, also of the left leg and foot, and hyperthesia of entire left side. Is now totally disabled so far as earning a support by manual labor is concerned. His disabilities are permanent and progressive and were not caused by vicious habits; and in view of the above facts, and knowing the condition of soldier, both physically and financially, I would regard his case deserving of more than his present rating, and respectfully recommend the increase asked for.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN J. RIGG, M. D.,
Member Board United States Pension Examiners, Keokuk, Iowa.

Dr. H. Carnes, another reputable physician, examined this pensioner, and gave the following certificate:

MONTROSE, IOWA, December 18, 1894.

In regard to the case of F. M. Ross would state that I have this day examined him and found the following conditions in regard to pleurisy, viz:

Adhesions of all the lower lobe of left lung; also emplysemia of lower lobe of left lung; would further state that I have been intimately acquainted with claimant for past six years, have prescribed for him frequently during that time for pleurisy, and, in fact, whenever he contracts a cold he is troubled more or less; it is chronic form, is progressive and permanent. His disability is real without the least shadow of doubt; would state that I have no interest whatever in the prosecution of this claim.

H. CARNES, M. D.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I may remark that these gentlemen, besides being physicians of high repute, are all of them Democrats.

Here, Mr. Chairman, were four physicians of his county, of high personal and professional character, who united in personal knowledge and professional treatment of this man's case, and certifying that the pensioner was entitled to an increase of pension. Now, here is the answer received to the pensioner's application:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., May 27, 1895.

SIR: I have to advise you that your name has this day been dropped from the pension roll, certificate No. 204667, for the reasons set forth in my letter to you under date of December 11, 1894, viz, that the disability for which the pension was allowed has ceased to exist in a pensionable degree.

[Laughter.]

That is signed, "William Lochren, Commissioner."

That soldier, Mr. Chairman, is now laboring through me, and through my distinguished colleague at the other end of this Capitol, Senator GEAR, to be reinstated on the pension roll of the Government, not upon his personal testimony, but upon the testimony of four of the chief physicians of my county, as I personally know. Now, sir, I want to take from that Bureau of Pensions, by whatever party it may be administered, the right to drop a pensioner from the rolls under such conditions without an adjudication of his case by a tribunal where he shall have a right to be heard. [Applause.]

There is another case and phase of Department policy to which I wish to call the attention of this committee. Mr. William Smith, of Company K, Nineteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, a resident of Mount Pleasant, in my district, applied for a pension. In the progress of time and in the discretion of the Bureau of Pensions he received a pension. He applied for a rerating under the conditions which I am about to set forth, and he received this notice from the United States pension agency at Des Moines, acting as the representatives of the Pension Bureau. The pension agent wrote to Mr. Smith as follows:

UNITED STATES PENSION AGENCY,
Des Moines, Iowa, September 29, 1892.

DEAR SIR: I hand you herewith blank voucher for pension accrued under your certificate to October 4, 1892. The terms of your certificate are such that former payments erroneously made to you are to be recovered to the amount of $1,007.20, and checks drawn for your quarterly payments will therefore be forwarded to the Assistant Treasurer of the United States until that amount shall have been recovered.

Very respectfully, S. A. MARINE, Pension Agent.

WM. L. SMITH,
Mount Pleasant, Henry County, Iowa.

Mr. Chairman, in the case of a private soldier in my own town an application for a rerating led to an equivalent order, and I was informed by the commandant of the Grand Army post of my town that under that order it would take sixteen years to settle the debit and credit account between that pensioner and the Government—that sixteen years must elapse before that pensioner can draw a dollar of pension, and in the meantime he is being maintained by the charity of the people of Keokuk day after day and year after year. I submit, Mr. Chairman and members of this House, that there needs some reversal of policy like this.

I am done, Mr. Chairman, but in closing let me say I can easily find a reason why this policy, unless we check it, may increase. The President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury have had their hearts made sick by the deferred hope of the promise that the Wilson-Gorman tariff would yield an adequate revenue. They have been disappointed on the line of the regular receipts by the operations of that bill. But, Mr. Chairman, if the Pension Department can sit there and by facile and deft bookkeeping of its clerks swop all the pension money between debit and credit, so that it appears merely upon the bookkeeping of the Department and no dollar of it is paid out, probably there will come a surplus to the revenues of this Government by way of the back door of the Pension Department which can be credited hereafter to the operation of the Wilson-Gorman tariff. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, it is not to be denied that the air gun which the gentleman from the Seventh district of New York [Mr. BARTLETT] charged and exploded the other day possessed greater recoil than any piece of ordnance ever used in the gigantic struggle out of which arises the question which is before this committee to-day for determination. Its echoes have been heard in this Chamber for several days, and it is very evident that the greatest point of danger about that gun was its rear and not its front. [Laughter and applause.] These echoes to which we have listened, Mr. Chairman, are but as gentle zephyrs compared with the tornado that will in time come up from the valleys and down from the mountain sides of the regions from which the Union boys came marching in 1861, and from that to 1865—"three hundred thousand" and "five hundred thousand more." These reverberations from distant States in this land will come from the yeomanry, from localities where patriotism is engendered, where it is given birth, where it grows and expands as true patriotism deserves to. You will not find it in the marts of commerce, you will not find it in a part of the Seventh Congressional district of New York represented by the gentleman who has spoken here, for there it is overshadowed by other considerations. You will find it in the rural districts of this land, where love of country is supreme over considerations of business and home comforts—that love of country which actuated every Union soldier who abandoned his home and all that which he held dear, for what? Not for his own protection, not for his own gratification, but for the preservation of a principle which might redound to the benefit of this country and of succeeding generations.

The gentleman from the Seventh Congressional district of New York informs this House that the Democracy of his State and the best Republicans of New York are not in favor of a further extension of pension legislation which shall result in "looting" the Treasury without proper justification. This statement, Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to say, was refuted by his colleague from the Tenth district of New York; and I believe that the great majority of the constituents of the gentleman from the Seventh district of New York will repudiate his statements.

The great difficulty with the gentleman to whom I refer is that where we on this side of the House find justification he can see none. And I regret exceedingly that such is the fact. The gentleman has called out such a rain of invective upon his head as no member of this House has before, certainly during this session, been so unfortunate as to invite, and were it not for the provocation contained in his remarks I should not now presume to engage the attention of this committee for one moment. But, Mr. Chairman, every man who is a true friend, not a false friend, of the Union soldier should rise here before this debate shall close and in his place denounce the stigma and the reproach which is heaped upon the Union soldiers and their dependents, living and dead, by the unfortunate language made use of by the distinguished gentleman from the distinguished Seventh district of New York, when he charges this kind of legislation as an attempt to "loot the Treasury" of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the term "looting" means pillage; it means plunder; and this is the first time in my brief experience that I have ever heard or known of legalized "looting" and legalized "pillage." I presume very few of those here on this side of the House who advocate this kind of legislation are pensioners. Very few of them are participants in the benefits afforded by pension legislation, and we do not resent the stigma because of its application to us individually, but we refute it, and we hurl it back as false in every particular, in every element, in behalf of those whose voices can not be raised in their own defense in this Chamber. [Applause.] That, Mr. Chairman, is our duty, and it is because I claim the privilege of discharging this duty that I stand here for the moment.

Now, sir, we are in accord with the gentleman in every measure that shall tend to prevent any "looting" of the Treasury, if there be anything of that kind; but the difficulty with the gentleman is that he can not see any necessity for pension legislation such as this amendment proposes. The term "looting" implies in the connection in which it is used by the gentleman that the Union soldiers were a set of rascals, that they were dishonest. In refutation of that I say that patriotism and dishonesty do not go hand in hand. What kind of men, Mr. Chairman, did the country call for in the time of its need? It did not look for bankers; it did not look for preachers; it did not look for statesmen; it did not look for men of the highest integrity in the different communities of our land. It did not seek those who could give the best bonds for their honesty and their good behavior. No; it sought able-bodied, patriotic, brave-hearted heroes, with good teeth to masticate hard-tack, with good eyes so that they could take true aim, with sufficient physical ability to carry a knapsack, forty rounds and a musket, a haversack and a canteen. That is the kind of men that were sought—men not necessarily of the highest repute for probity or integrity; and yet, Mr. Chairman, I assume to say, and I challenge contradiction, that taking the same number of men from the higher and the better walks of life—aye, even from the distinguished Seventh district of New York—the standard of honesty and integrity which has been exhibited by the Union soldier will surpass the standard of honesty and integrity established by the best class of men from the best walks of life.

This, Mr. Chairman, is proven by the very few convictions, the very few dishonest acts, the very few cases in which perjury has been charged in the dispensing of pensions to the 970,000 pensioners on the part of this Government. So that I say patriotism, valor, honesty, and integrity have traveled hand in hand together. They can not be separated. He who was so self-sacrificing as to say he owed the country his life, if need be, is the last man to-day who ought to be charged with being ready to "loot its Treasury" and "ruin its credit."

Now, what is the justification for the amendment introduced here on this bill, providing that widows may, in case that they have not a fixed income of $500 per year, receive the pittance which the Government is willing to give them in the shape of pensions. We find it, Mr. Chairman, in the fact that when the widow and her little ones may have a few dollars of income, under the strict construction of the law, she is deprived of the bounty of the Government.

Little does the gentleman from the Seventh Congressional district of New York appreciate this state of things. He goes to his club; sits before his grate fire toasting his extremities, with his pedal appendages incased in soft silken slippers, smoking his cigarette [laughter] and sipping his wine with genial friends about him. The winter wind howling outside disturbs not his peace or his drinks. The howling blasts that come from the homes of want and poverty penetrate not to his abode. Everything is lovely; and surrounded with luxury and comfort, what conception, what knowledge, what information can he have to move the liberal hearts of our citizens? But go to the other place, and what do you find? A house with but a single room; nothing but a tallow dip, if it be at night, to cast a lurid glare over the few objects in it; you find huddled about the dying embers of a once perhaps comfortable fire the widow, with emaciated countenance and frame poorly clad, her little ones shivering by her side over the few fragments that remain still unconsumed, their dimpled fingers blue with cold, no food, no fuel, no nothing but want and misery, not even the common comforts, say nothing about luxury—nothing in view but want and suffering.

The few dollars income which the widow may have for herself and her little ones are insufficient, with her efforts, to support and take care of them; and yet there are the two extremes. There is a case, not an isolated one, for they are numerous in this country of ours, rich and plenteous in every other respect. There is a case, Mr. Chairman, which appeals to the favorable action of this House on this amendment. If she could add to the little pittance she has the bounty which the Government—in case this bar shall be removed—would afford her, she may be lifted up from the condition of penury, poverty, and want, and placed where she ought to be placed; and any man who gets up here or elsewhere and announces to the world that he is "the friend of the Union soldier," and yet will not be moved to act with justice by such a recital, by such an instance, by such an example as that, for him the Union soldier has no need, for he does not want any such friends. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, who are the men and what are the elements that oppose liberal pension laws? Why they are a class who live wholly within themselves. They are a class whose hearts do not beat in sympathy with their fellow-men, unless they be of that class whom they number among their "chums." They are those who were opposed to the Union during the struggle for its preservation. They are those who opposed a protective tariff that would give this country prosperity, because that enabled the country to pay the pensions, and would overcome many of the objections made by the gentleman who urges the depleted state of the Treasury as a reason why we should not pass this amendment. They are those who are rich and know not want in any case; those who are members of fashionable clubs; those who ape foreign airs; who send their orders for their wearing apparel abroad; those who wear spike-toed shoes [laughter]; those who want the earth and everything in it without paying anything for it. [Laughter.]

They are those, Mr. Chairman, who, if they see a Union soldier with an empty sleeve, would elevate their olfactory organs as they passed by; those whose hearts are no larger than wooden nutmegs; in short, those who are entirely wanting in the elements of patriotism and valor and the recognition of valorous deeds, those totally lost to the impulses of a humane spirit, and whose ultimate destination will, I trust, be that bottomless pit described by the distinguished gentleman from the distinguished Seventh district of New York [Mr. BARTLETT] where they can revel in the luxury afforded by the money which the gentleman is so fearful will be unnecessarily thrown therein.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has said that we could not monopolize patriotism. Where did he ever hear the sentiments uttered by a man worthy to speak for those on this side of the House who claimed we had a monopoly of all the patriotism in this country? I deny that that claim has ever been made, either by those on this side of the House or those who thought politically as they do, away back from 1861 to 1865. In those days, Mr. Chairman, all parties furnished men for the defense of the Union, and we accord to them, we accord to those who came from the party of the distinguished gentleman from New York, the same credit as we claim for ourselves. But I will say to the gentleman that we have a monopoly of one thing; that a Democratic Administration in 1860 and 1861 confessed the inability of this Government, in the exercise of its constitutional powers, to suppress the rebellion, to compel a State to remain in the Union if it sought, without just cause, to absolve its allegiance to this Government. When the Republican Administration came into power, it stamped that doctrine out of existence, and because of that, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], with every gentleman who holds a seat in this Chamber to-day, is here under the guise and protection of the law, in a free country, and in a united American Union. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HATCH] is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, in the very few moments that I shall occupy the time of this committee I wish to place myself on record as being in favor of liberal pensions. I also wish to place myself on record in regard to my admiration for the American soldier, for in my estimation marvelous men have these American volunteers proved themselves, on land and on sea. General Grant, our great commander, after the war said to his soldiers:

> Soldiers of the United States, your marches, your battles, your sieges, in endurance, in distance, in brilliancy of results, have dimmed the luster of the world's past military achievements.

And, sir, we can truthfully say that no grander scenes of courage or of devotion have ever been displayed than were displayed by the American volunteers. They have equaled in courage the Spartans at Thermopylæ and the immortal Six Hundred at Balaklava; and, sir, we all know that a large majority, that most of these pensioners, served in a war whose armies were the mightiest hosts ever sent forth by a republic, and in point of magnitude of cost, of blood, and treasure it far outranks any war in the history of this Republic.

And, sir, let me call attention to a few of the battles of that war. There was Cold Harbor, where it was said that in less than twenty minutes after the first gun was fired 10,000 Union men, 10,000 men on one side, lay writhing and bleeding on the sod or calm and still in death. There was Kenesaw Mountain, around whose bloody crest 12,000 men fell in one day. There was that affair at Hampton Roads, when the grand old ship, the Cumberland, went down with all on board, her crew firing her guns as she went beneath the water; and her flag, the Stars and Stripes, was never struck, but floating above the water after the vessel went down. There was Shiloh, upon whose bloody field 15,000 men on both sides, 15,000 Americans, were killed or wounded. There were Gettysburg and Vicksburg and the battles around Richmond and Chickamauga, and Mission Ridge, and the battle in the clouds on Lookout Mountain.

These are but a few of the 112 great battles fought during that war, with more than a thousand minor battles and skirmishes, a war whose mighty death roll reached nearly 400,000, with fully as many more maimed and crippled for life. Surely it was no frolic, no pleasant pastime, this sacrifice of home and home comforts, to go forth to such a war, where every inch of ground was contested by a brave and gallant foe. These older men well remember that during that time there were many dark and gloomy days, for some of these great battles were not victories for us, but were terrible and bloody defeats.

Sir, it seemed at times that He who rules over the destiny of nations had forgotten us, and it has been truly said that if time had been counted by events this nation lived a century during those four years. But, thanks to an overruling Providence, and thanks to these old pensioners and their comrades, this Government of the people, for the people, and by the people was not blotted from the face of the earth; and, sir, after four years of terrible and bloody civil war the world understood that the States of this Union were not loosely held together by a bond that could be easily broken, but that they were, in the language of an eminent statesman, many States but one people, having one Government, one flag, and one common destiny.

Yes, we are one people. We are more than that. We are a free people in every sense of the word, and all of our vast territory is, and whatever territory we may acquire in the future will be, dedicated to freedom forever. Abraham Lincoln proclaimed freedom to 4,000,000 slaves, and the Union Army, taking new hope, pressed forward, carrying freedom and victory together, and made them one. And that memorable appeal to arms also decided that the nation was supreme and that no State could leave the Union even by force of arms. No State has ever seceded, but many have been added to it. It is settled beyond controversy that this

Union can not shrink or contract, but it can grow, increase, extend. Growth, extension, greater power, grander destiny are before us, and to-day we rejoice that we are one great, united, harmonious people, stretching from the Gulf to the Lakes and from ocean to ocean, and in the lines of the poet we can truthfully say:

We know no North, nor South, nor West,
One Union binds us all;
Its Stars and Stripes are o'er us flung,
'Neath them we stand or fall.

We also rejoice that this Republic, with its glorious institutions, its grand power, its bright future, its matchless possibilities, still exists, this mother of republics, whose lullaby ought to be heard over every cradle of liberty throughout the world. [Applause.]

Yes, sir; all these things have been made possible, are in fact accomplished facts, through the sacrifices, the sufferings, and the bravery and heroism of those old pensioners and their comrades; and I say to you that, for one, I am opposed to the pension of a single one of these men being taken away from him unless he has had a fair trial, a fair chance given to him for defense, and a fair court to hear him in. [Applause.] Therefore, I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF]. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I must confess a great deal of surprise that at his late hour there should be any objection urged against the widows of deceased soldiers receiving the pension due them unless they prove that they are paupers. It seems to me that instead of doing these widows a favor you are punishing them. You make the criterion of their deserts their poverty; you brand them as paupers; you place a placard upon their backs, as it were; you make it a matter of record, and you make that old stooped and gray-headed lady exhibit to the public and her posterity the record, "I, too, am a pauper." It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that the criterion of pensions should not be how many dollars are you worth, but what are your deserts, either as a soldier, or the widow of a soldier, or the mother of a soldier, or the orphan of a soldier.

The question as to whether the soldier himself received injuries during the war and while in service seems to be, also, at this late date, a back number, and especially when you consider that a certain class of our soldiers, to wit, the Mexican soldiers, have for some years received a service pension. There is no reason why there should be this invidious distinction between Mexican soldiers and the soldier of the Union. The pension, the sum of money itself, is not so great, and there is no reason that can be advanced why the Union soldier should not be placed precisely on the same footing as every other soldier that has a pension under our Government. It has been urged that a great many soldiers who never heard a gun fired would probably be pensioned under that system. However, the same objection would lie as well against the Mexican soldier. The fact is, a large majority of the Mexican soldiers pensioned are men who never were near the front, and who never left their homes. The mere fact that they had enlisted entitles them to a pension. While I am finding no fault with that, yet I do find fault with gentlemen who raise objection to the Union soldier being placed on the same footing with the Mexican soldier. You may tell us that a longer time has elapsed. In my judgment time has nothing to do with the matter. A matter of justice is justice one day after the act as well as it is one year, twenty or thirty years after.

It has been urged that this means an extra tax upon the people of the United States. To my friends on the Democratic side of the House I simply want to say that we adhere to the position of a protective tariff which will never make an American citizen pay one penny of tax. Under a revenue tariff it is true you make the American citizen pay the tax. A protective tariff (and at the proper time that shall be illustrated more at large) must be paid at all times by the foreign producer and foreign importer. When it is not paid by them it is of itself a revenue tariff, I mean a tariff for revenue only, a tariff that must be paid by enhancing the price of the article upon which the tariff is laid. A protective tariff means that it lowers the price of the article, and on that I challenge contradiction. I ask any gentleman on that side of the House to show me a single article upon which there has been a protective tariff for ten to twenty years that has not fallen in price, while on the other hand take any article upon which there has been a revenue tariff laid, it has enhanced in price, and the result is that the consumer of this country must pay the additional duty as a tax.

I only speak of this incidentally. I speak of it because it has been thrust in our teeth in the discussion of the revenue bill in the beginning of this session, that we have been endeavoring to burden our people with taxes. But let that be as it may. The point I am most particular about in the consideration of this bill is the infamous system that has been established, I believe, Mr. Chairman, not by the Pension Bureau, but by a power higher than the Pension Bureau itself, a system that I say is infamous because it stands without a precedent, a system that is infamous because it is so unjust that the most tyrannical nation of the world would not have dared to adopt anything of the kind.

One of the fundamental principles of human government is the presumption that every man is innocent until he is proven guilty. Another is that no man shall be declared guilty except by due process of law after a fair and impartial trial, at which he may be present personally or be represented by counsel, where he may have an opportunity to confront his accusers and to examine and cross-examine witnesses, in other words, to make for himself a defense against any charges that may be alleged against him. Why, sir, the veriest vagabond that travels the streets, the worst criminal that has ever been known, is, in the eyes of the law, an innocent man until he is proven guilty. I care not how low in life he may be, I care not what his reputation or his standing is, being charged with an offense, he is still innocent until that offense is proven according to law. No government, no human society, could possibly exist and tolerate a system so infamous as the one that has been adopted by this Administration with reference to our soldiers.

Let us examine it. The applicant for a pension files his application. There are certain forms and processes of law prescribed, and he conforms to them. He introduces his evidence to show that he is entitled to a pension. There is a critical examination of it, and in every case where any doubt exists a special commissioner is appointed who goes to the vicinage, meets the witnesses face to face, carefully and critically investigates the case, and finally the pension is allowed. Years roll on, witnesses die, records are destroyed, evidence is lost, and then, when the pensioner is in that dilemma, an order comes from somewhere in Washington through the Pension Bureau saying to the pensioner: "Unless you show within sixty days that you are not a perjurer, unless you show within sixty days that you have not been guilty of fraud, your pension will be taken from you."

The pensioner stands utterly and absolutely helpless. His witnesses are dead, his evidence, much of it, is destroyed; or, even if some of his witnesses be still alive, owing to the fallibility of human memory, they may perhaps in some small matter contradict some of their former statements, and that is made a pretext for permanently depriving the old veteran of his pension. Instead of holding men innocent until they are proven guilty, this Administration hangs them first and tries them afterwards. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] They put the brand of fraud upon the pensioner. They denounce him and his witnesses as perjurers. They make that record and they hand it down to posterity. His children and his children's children must face that record standing in the archives of this nation, and he has no remedy, because he is forced to prove a negative, which is almost an impossibility. I repeat, sir, that it is the most infamous proceeding that can be found in the history of any government pretending to civilization or justice.

Gentlemen here tell us that something must be done to cut down expenses, resting their opposition to the pensioning of our soldiers entirely on the amount of money involved. That is the only argument that has been used, and it has been put in the most offensive form. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] does not content himself with saying that this is taking money out of the Treasury in a legal way. He speaks of "looting" the Treasury, robbing the Treasury. To "loot" means to rob, to plunder, to take by brute force, and that is the description which the gentleman from New York gives of legislation designed to pay the honest debt which this Government owes to the veterans of the late war.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BRUMM. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman inform us how the Treasury can be looted after it has been emptied by the policy of the party now in power? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRUMM. To be sure, there is very little substance left to loot, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] seems to think that we are "going for" the shadow. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen talk about "looting" the Treasury to pay the soldier, whether he received his wound or other disability in the line of service or not. I do not so regard it. I maintain that the debt which this Government owes to the soldiers of the late war can never be paid. In the shape of a debt it stands beyond the possibility of mathematical calculation. It grows with the growth of our nation. It enlarges with the blessings of this great Republic. Whatever advance we make, whatever blessings we enjoy as a nation, we make and we enjoy because the boys in blue saved them for us. Yet men here halt and quibble about a mere matter of from $8 to $12 a month for the short lives these old veterans still have to live or for the lives of their widows, orphans, or dependent parents, and then call it "looting" the Treasury.

Sir, in considering the great achievements of the soldiers of the Grand Army of the Republic history furnishes no parallel.

Their heroism, loyalty, devotion, self-sacrifice, and success can not be equaled anywhere in the history of the world. They were not hired butchers, but the free citizen soldiers of our land, who held the power of sovereignty as well as the sword and musket. The soldiers of the Union were citizens, as it were, yesterday, soldiers to-day, and citizens to-morrow. The grand spectacle of the aggregation of that Union Army is incomparable. Their heroic work is equal to the best; but in their segregation they loom so far above anything that history has recorded that men should blush with shame when they say, "We will not even give you enough to provide for the ordinary necessaries of life during the remainder of your short existence." When the Army of the United States disbanded, these citizen soldiers by the hundreds of thousands, although paid only 50 per cent of the amount due them, went back to their homes, entered into civil life, and without a murmur became the best citizens of our land. No other people could have done it, no country could have risked it but this glorious Republic of ours.

And here I want to say to my friends on the other side that your "boys" deserve the same credit. History accords them this proud honor as well as us. When your "boys" were done fighting, though beaten, they did not become bands of marauders and robbers. They went back, as did our "boys," and again became citizens of this mighty Republic. Sir, on both sides they were the citizen soldiers that only this Republic can produce.

Mr. Chairman, the cheapest thing that this Government can pay is the price it expends to establish the precedent that it will ever be just to its soldiers and let our posterity know that when soldiers will so loyally make sacrifices as did the boys in blue, this Republic will ever remember them and no future soldiers shall be treated worse than the best of those who served in the last rebellion.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. R. 39) making an appropriation to defray the joint expense of locating the boundary line between the Territory of Alaska and the British North American territory; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. DINGLEY in the chair.

Mr. DOVENER. Mr. Chairman, it had been my purpose to remain silent and merely listen to the criticisms that were showered upon my friend from the State of New York [Mr. BARTLETT]. But in view of a letter which my mail has brought me this morning from the Pension Department in this city, in answer to a letter of inquiry in regard to the application of a respectable widow of a Union soldier, I should be recreant to my trust and false to my constituents if I did not lay that letter before this House. I intend, after reading this letter, to send it to this widow, a woman whom I know well. This letter is dated "Washington, D. C., January 14, 1896," and I hope my friend from New York is here and will take a memorandum of the case and have it inquired into, so that possibly he may explain that which is inexplicable to me as to the neglectful attitude of the Commissioner of Pensions and his department toward this old soldier, his widow, and his orphans.

MADAM: In response to the personal inquiry of Hon. B. B. DOVENER relative to your claim for pension as widow of the above-named soldier, you are advised that Dr. W. H. McCullom—

A gentleman whom I know well—testifies that Ira was born December 3, 1879, and you allege that his correct name is Ira Lawson—

Now I want to call the attention of the House, and especially my friends on the other side, to the capricious and unjust manner in which pensions are hung up year after year. This doctor (a gentleman whom I know myself) it appears had stated that this widow's son "Ira" was born December 3, 1879, and the widow stated that her son's name was Ira Lawson. After that it seems some gentleman was sent out to make inquiry as to this apparent discrepancy (and we get such communications frequently) and he had examined the old family Bible. This old lady was unable to write, although she was filled with patriotism and self-sacrificing love for this Union, under the promptings of which she had sent her husband to a soldier's grave in defense of his country. It appears that, some other person having entered the name on the record, it was not spelled Ira Lawson, but Ira Clawson, the difference being merely an additional letter, and this family record also stated that the child was born December 20, 1879, instead of December 3, 1879, as the doctor had stated. The letter continues—

While the certified copy of Bible record shows that Ira Clawson was born December 20, 1879. The correct date of his birth and his correct name should be stated and this discrepancy explained.

Now notice what follows:

Evidence showing that the children are all living should also be furnished, as the last on file only covers November 12, 1892.

So that this pension has been ready for consideration, has been ready to be passed upon, since 1892, and only after an inquiry by me has been made in the year 1896, something like four years later, is this widow informed that some person has come across a Bible record showing a discrepancy of seventeen days as to the birth of her child, and possibly, through a misunderstanding of the name, has misspelled it. So her case is sent back for further information, and not only that, but she must prove over again that her children are living, because more than three years have elapsed while the Department has been waiting to inform her of this technical difficulty. And inclosed in this letter is the famous Order No. 229, which has already been read and its contents commented upon before the House during this discussion, so that I need not read it again. This is the claim of Esther P. Orum—claim No. 534385—and for the benefit of my friend from New York I will say that this is a respectable lady, the widow of a soldier, and residing at the town of Sherrard, W. Va. Here is another letter which I have received to-day, addressed to myself:

McMEEHANS, January 1, 1896.

DEAR SIR: I received to-day an answer to your call on the Department of the Interior about the pension for myself. They say the claim was rejected on account of not having proof of my father's marriage. I am very thankful to you for what you have done for me, and hope you will assist me a little further.

There is only one way for me to get proof of the marriage, and that is by finding a family by the name of Jefferson, who lived in Wheeling in 1864, but moved to Washington, D. C. If it is not asking too much, would you please send me a list of the Jeffersons as they appear in the directory of Washington? I will write to them and maybe I can find the one I am looking for.

Respectfully, yours,

H. J. DRUMM.

Hon. B. B. DOVENER, M. C., First District, West Virginia.

My friend who opened the debate on the other side of this question used this language, which is found in the RECORD, page 724:

For myself, I can say that I truly believe, had I been of years sufficiently mature when the first cannon boomed across the harbor of Charleston on the morning of April 12, 1861, I should have found my place among the enlisted men in the civil war.

I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York is in earnest in the use of that language; and when the extract which I have read from his speech was delivered on the floor of the House he firmly believed that he would have done so. Let us look at the facts. I am of the opinion that my friend from New York need not have been deprived of that privilege if he had chosen to go into the Army. He was born in 1847, and was 14 years of age when the "cannon boomed across the harbor of Charleston." Down in my State, situated differently from the gentleman from New York, born and reared in the State of Virginia, where we were divided in sentiment, when but a few years older than himself, I parted with family and friends and entered into the Union Army in response to that "boom that was sent across Charleston Harbor" of which the gentleman from New York speaks, and in the company which I had the honor to command were men, loyal mountaineers, of what was afterwards the State of West Virginia, who came to the camp, boys of 13 or 14 years of age, and offered their services in defense of the old flag. They were too young, some of them, to be recognized or received into the Army, but they remained with us and underwent the trials as well as the hardships of camp life and finally succeeded in getting their names upon the rolls, and when they did they did it by convincing us by services, entirely voluntary, that they were capable of performing the duties required of them. And, Mr. Chairman, when they enlisted they placed their names upon the rolls as 18 years of age; and after the war was over when some of these men applied for pensions it has come to my personal knowledge that this Commissioner of Pensions has asked to have it explained how it was that they said their age was 18 at that time, while the records of the War Department show very differently, because they seemed to be four years older at that time than they really were, and hence they could have not been in the service, for they were not old enough.

Those are cases of which I have personal knowledge. I say we were differently situated down in West Virginia from the situation in which the gentleman from New York found himself. But let us go a little further. In 1862 the war was still going on, and the gentleman from New York was 15 years of age. In 1863 we were still in that terrible trouble, and the gentleman from New York was 16 years of age. In 1864 he was 17 years of age, and still the war went on and the draft riots of New York went on at the same time in the presence of that gentleman, knowing that the Government was needing forces.

I have already said that in my State we labored under considerable disadvantages. We raised seventeen loyal regiments and sent them into the United States Army, with thirty-six or thirty-seven thousand men from my section, and we did not have any draft either. We raised these regiments, and in 1863, on the 20th day of June, they recognized us as a free, sovereign, and independent State, and placed one of the brightest stars upon the flag of our country in honor of West Virginia. When they did that the General Government said "You have assumed the duties of statehood; you must assume also the responsibilities of it and must furnish your quota of men," and, Mr. Chairman, we did so. Therein we were a little unfortunate no doubt. Possibly if some of us had been less patriotic and the draft had come on us, there are some no doubt among us who might have had the pleasure of hiring a substitute, and then we would have been in the direct line of promotion and possibly President of the United States some day. [Laughter.]

Now, my friends, I want to say to you this: I recall another instance of patriotic sacrifice, and I commend the history of the man to my friend from New York. At 16 years of age—much younger than my friend was—a youth left the State of Ohio who served honorably in the ranks of the Union army. He returned to his State and has been an honored ornament to it ever since; and on yesterday, recognizing his worth and merit, he was unanimously chosen by his party as Senator from the great State of Ohio to represent that State from the 4th day of March, 1897. I speak of the Hon. Joseph B. Foraker, who at 16 years of age went into the Union army. [Applause.] So that my friend need not have been deprived of the opportunity to serve in the Army if he had desired.

As I said, I think my friend hardly appreciated the situation when he made the remarks which he made the other day. During the war I heard the expression "Lincoln hirelings" applied to us. Since the war, in the newspapers of the country, I have seen the words "pension bummers." I have also heard the pensioners called "Treasury looters," but I never expected to hear a gentleman who regretted that his age prevented him from being in the ranks of the Union Army, and who claimed to be so loyal to this Government, make use of language of the same character, such as "looters and pillagers of the Treasury" and men "indulging in a carnival of pillage"—such language as I heard the gentleman use the other day. As suggested by a friend at my side, that fixes his condition very safely.

Does my friend from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] apprehend—does he for one moment comprehend who it is that he is insulting by calling them "looters of the Treasury" and "organized pillagers of the Treasury"? Aye, although he may not have been disposed to risk his younger days in the Army of the Union, yet he was of age sufficient to have at least read and known the history of his country, to have known something of the men whose surviving comrades he calls, with their widows and orphans, "looters of the Treasury." If he would refer to the books that he was then studying, to the history of the times when he was 16 or 17 years of age, he would recollect who these men were. Does he remember when that grand old vessel of which we all speak with pride, the old ship of state, was out on the sea of dissolution? Does he remember when the clouds hung low? Does he remember when the lightnings flashed, when the thunder rolled, and when the gale bent the masts of that old vessel, when in her distress Abraham Lincoln, of sainted memory, grasped the helm of state and cried for men to man that vessel, and the response came from shore to shore, "We are coming, Father Abraham, 300,000 more"?

The sons and widows of these men and their surviving comrades are the ones who are charged here with being looters of the Treasury. Their comrades, their husbands, and their fathers—many of them lie dead. They are required to prove that death came in the line of service. Many of them sleep in unknown graves in front of Richmond. Many of them sleep in the Wilderness, and at Gettysburg, and along the banks of the Ohio and the great Father of Waters, amid the pine woods of Georgia and the Everglades of Florida. They sleep in honored graves, although unknown. Their sunken graves may be unmarked by any stone or monument, but I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] that in the heart of every loyal American citizen there is erected to their memory a monument around which the flowers of remembrance will bloom in eternal verdure, when the remarks of the gentleman I hope will have been forgotten.

Mr. Chairman, having said this much, I do not wish to detain the committee longer. I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. I am willing to go further and to support the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana and to pass a law commanding the Commissioner of Pensions not only to cease persecuting and striking from the roll arbitrarily the veterans, their widows and their children, but to place back every soldier and soldier's widow and soldier's orphan who has been stricken from the roll under the arbitrary orders and technical rules of this Department; and then if there are any charges against them let them be informed of that fact; let the man who makes the charge substantiate it. Until that is done, let them remain upon this roll of honor as brave and honorable soldiers of the Union or as the widows and orphans of such. [Applause.]

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman, it may appear a little odd for a Representative upon this floor from the State of North Carolina, who himself served upon the other side in the late war between the States, to make an argument upon the subject of pensions or to attempt to do so.

The best definition I have ever seen of the word pension is this:

A sum due a soldier, and sometimes poor authors, for services rendered.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the consideration moving the heart of any great government to pay this class of meritorious citizenship is public service, and when these services are performed by soldiers they require the exercise of the very highest qualities of the human heart—courage, constancy, patience—and in this country the very highest capacities of American manhood are displayed in the performance of the duties of the soldier.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was not only so in the late civil war in which the States participated, but it will be an obligation resting upon this great Government of ours in all probability at all times to recognize the right of these meritorious classes.

Let us see. I turn to the report of the Secretary of the Interior, made in 1894, and I find that the Government has not yet entirely discharged its obligation to pay pensioners of the war of the Revolution. You will find that there are names upon the roll to-day from the Revolutionary struggle, from the war of 1812, and from the Mexican war.

Mr. Chairman, in the best essay that I have ever seen by mortal man, that wonderfully strong intellectual document from the pen of the immortal Lord Bacon, the title of which is "The true greatness of nations and states," it is recorded that all republics, all nations, all states, must have motion; that the oceans of the world have been put in a cradle by the direction of the Deity in order that the waters may be rocked and the oceans preserved from impurity. Says this great author:

There must be action, motion, on the part of nations and states, and the true motion of a nation is foreign war. Foreign war in its effect upon the state or nation strengthens, purifies, and preserves. A civil conflict has exactly the opposite effect; like the fever heat upon the human form, it extracts the light of the eye and the life of the heart.

This Republic, Mr. Chairman, is young, and yet in its first century this fever of which the great author tells us came upon the infant Republic. The north of us was engaged in deadly conflict with the south of us, if you will allow the expression. There never has been such a conflict, in many respects, in the history of the nations of the world. It was the dashing, gallant South against the iron resolution of the North; and I was glad to hear the distinguished gentleman who sits over there accord honor this morning to the brave Confederates who fell without success. In my humble judgment, Mr. Chairman, this war was a war of necessity. It must of necessity have fallen upon this young Republic. Why so? Let me see if I can not show it. It was a conflict between the States and the Federal Government. The State courts, therefore, were utterly incompetent to pass upon the great question. Why? Because they were parties to it. The Federal Government was likewise incompetent to pass upon it, because in this conflict of opinion between the States and the Federal power it likewise would be a party to it. The prayers of the good and pious of the land and the expostulations of the great of the land were all unavailing. The courts were incompetent for its adjudication.

This great war of opinion, the bloody chasm, had been dug through this Republic before there ever was a gun fired. How was it to be settled? The courts could not settle it, neither State nor Federal. The prayers of the great could not settle it. No power on God's green earth could settle it, save the arbitrament of the sword. That arbitrament was had. Neither side to-day is ashamed of the part it took in it. I have not seen a single Northern soldier who is ashamed of the side he took in it; and I have not seen a single Southern soldier who is ashamed of the part he took in it. Why, Mr. Chairman? Simply for the reason that this great question could only be settled by the arbitrament of the sword, and when my associates fell into the gulf, when their bones bleach and probably dissolve, in this chasm of public sentiment made by this conflict of opinion before the war, I can claim for them that they have performed at least this office—they have helped to fill up the bloody chasm which seemed to threaten the impairment of this Union, and made it indissoluble. [Applause.]

But while that is so, for one, I recognize the complete decision of the great question by this arbitrament of the sword. My section went under. I recognize the great principle that the Government owes to this class of its public servants, the soldiers who fought to preserve it, the duty now of pensioning them, but at the same time, Mr. Chairman, while that is so, I want to call the attention of the committee to some little matters that have given me some trouble. It is this, and if there can possibly be a remedy all patriots will unite in trying to bring it about: It is the inequality resulting from the operation of our pension system. I want to give you some figures which I prepared hurriedly this morning from documents. The internal revenues collected from this Republic to-day amount to enough to pay the pensions of the Republic, and very little more.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it turns out that North Carolina, the State I in part represent, pays $2,632,779.69 under the operation of the internal-revenue system. I mean, of course, the entire revenue obtained from the internal-revenue system. You never hear me say a word in disparagement of that system of revenues which we collect from customs duties, because in my opinion it is the light and life of this Republic, North and South. [Applause.] But so far as the internal revenues are concerned, if gentlemen will but think for a moment of their operation in the light of the amount of the pensions of this country they must see that it is absolute death to the State of North Carolina. How can we remedy this?

Mr. BRUMM. Repeal them.
Mr. LINNEY. This moment should that be done if I had such power.
Mr. BRUMM. I am in favor of their repeal.
Mr. LINNEY. God bless my friend. Will you help me to do it?
Mr. BRUMM. I will.

Mr. LINNEY. Then I will introduce a bill to-day. Now mark it, we pay $2,632,779, as I have said. We get back in pensions how much? Five hundred and seventy-two thousand dollars. We lose by the arrangement over $2,000,000 every year. Yet we have only $7 per capita circulation, while many of the great States of the North have over $200 per capita circulation.

The great State of Massachusetts pays, under this system of internal revenue, $2,687,178.35 and gets back, under the system of pensions which now exists and will continue to exist of necessity, $5,948,985.49.

The great State of Ohio pays $12,477,148.01 of internal revenue, and she gets back, in the form of pensions, $14,737,191.54.

The great State of Pennsylvania pays $10,981,086.12 internal revenue, and she gets back $13,574,346.36.

The State of Iowa pays $465,105.87 internal revenue, and gets back in pensions $5,760,000.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question in regard to Iowa?

Mr. LINNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LACEY. Are not the gentleman's figures with regard to Iowa rather misleading? For instance, we have no distilleries in Iowa, and consequently only the amount the gentleman has read—$465,000—is paid there in the form of internal revenue, but the people who drink the whisky pay the tax in North Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINNEY. I am only taking the figures from the reports. If the reports are wrong I am not to blame for that. I am telling you how the figures talk.

Kansas, "bleeding Kansas," pays $277,633.81 internal revenue, and she gets back in the form of pensions $6,084,592.16.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I join heartily with my friends who desire to put a bridle upon the Secretary of the Interior in this matter of pensions. I say there is no sense in permitting him to exercise arbitrary power to exclude men from the pension rolls, and I shall vote for these amendments that are intended to curb him in that respect. But I desire to call attention to an iniquity in the internal-revenue system which demands reform almost as strongly as the cry of the widow. In North Carolina the enterprises of our people connected with the internal-revenue system consist largely in small distilleries. We have been a pretty small people anyway since the war crippled us, except, thank God, in courage, and I hope I may be pardoned for claiming a reasonable share of intelligence for my State. For this reason our financial enterprises have been on a small scale.

Now, it is a common thing for a Government officer to go around, and, by a mere view of the premises of one of these distilleries, to make what he calls a "delinquent assessment" of taxes against the distiller, and thus, by his mere declaration, that tax is almost as effectively levied as it would be after verdict and judgment by a competent court, and the property of the man is sold without a hearing before a jury, or before a justice of the peace, or before any other judicial tribunal known to the law. I hope our friends will help us to abolish that evil, and if the distinguished gentleman who answered me awhile ago so patriotically [Mr. BRUMM] will only get enough members of this House to march at elbow touch with him we will assail this entire iniquity, this accursed internal-revenue system, and blot it from the face of God's green earth, and then we will put a tariff tax upon the goods of foreigners that come into this country large enough to meet the entire demands of the Government. [Applause on the Republican side.] Then indeed North Carolina will have an equal chance in the race of life with Pennsylvania, and will make a showing equal to Kansas, equal to New York, equal to any of the other great States; and then, if in five years after that is done, we are not 100 per cent higher than we are now in all that makes a State great I will never ask another favor of this House. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to address this committee again upon the question of pension legislation, but so much has been said about my attitude and I have been made for so many days the target of attack, the target of abuse, and the object of misrepresentation and invective, that I deem it well to close the debate on this side by answering some of that abuse and some of the alleged arguments that have been advanced against my position.

I think, sir, that I am entitled to a vote of thanks from the Republicans in this Chamber. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I think I am entitled to a vote of thanks for having been the means through which their mouths have been opened, for it must be manifest that we should have been deprived of all the flood of eloquence with which this committee has been inundated for the last three or four days if it had not been for the speech which I made here a few days ago.

Now, the debating school is closed; the daily sessions which have been held for the benefit of the budding orators of every age and every "previous condition" of employment are now at an end. In some of those speeches or addresses the language has been well chosen and the words have been well delivered—although somewhat sophomoric in style and fallacious as a rule in argument. In other cases, instead of oratory and logical argument we have been favored with declamation and rant and invective. I shall only allude to one instance in which I claim the proprieties of parliamentary discussion were grossly violated; I refer to the extraordinary remarks made, I believe, by a gentleman from Michigan yesterday, in which were combined profanity and coarseness—remarks in which the gentleman did not have the courage to avow that the words were his own, but put them in the mouth of a gentleman who, it was alleged, had been sitting on the floor of this House.

Sir, it is the first time since I have had the honor to sit in the Halls of Congress that I have heard a profane word used in debate on this floor, or that I have heard an argument made by a member of Congress, presumed, at least, to have been founded upon his honest convictions, termed "rot." To such words, which I conceive to be an abuse of privilege, and which would have entitled me to summon the member before the bar of this House and to have his words taken down, I deem it only necessary to refer in my remarks to-day. The gentleman who uttered those words was not worthy of being so dignified as to be summoned before the bar of this House. I have had the honor and the pleasure of addressing the members of this House upon many occasions, and heretofore I have been treated with that respect and consideration which I hold that every member of this House, however humble, is entitled to receive.

Yesterday, for the first time, I heard an argument of mine, based at least on honest conviction and following the line of view upheld by some of the leaders of my party, including the Chief Executive of the United States and the leading Senator from Maryland, Mr. GORMAN—I heard that argument characterized by the elegant term "rot." The profane word which preceded that term, though uttered within my hearing, has in the course of revision been wisely expunged from the RECORD, so that it now appears that what I uttered, instead of being some other kind of "rot," was "mere rot." I leave it to the judgment of members of this House whether they have ever heard me make any argument, legal or otherwise, constitutional or founded on moral grounds, which deserved such opprobrium.

There is no other personal incident of this debate which is worthy of notice or answer; for, reviewing whatever was said against me, I can not even say as I look upon my robe, "See what a rent the envious Casca made!"

I have doubted, gentlemen, for the last day or two whether we are free, or bond and slaves—whether a man in the Congress of the United States has a right to raise his voice against lavish expenditure, against unnecessary squandering of the people's money, without being upheld to personal abuse and ridicule. Gentlemen on the other side of the House have not scrupled to conjure up in their fancy or imagination and to picture to this House the circumstances under which I may live in my home. It has been held up as a crime that I should sit at eventide by my fireside or that I should indulge in the use of tobacco; and it has been claimed, because some gentlemen of this House imagined that I am free from want, that my very pecuniary circumstances should form the basis of a charge of lack of sympathy with the widow and the orphan.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir.
Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Just one question.
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] declines to yield.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to accord the members of this House on either side the right to pursue the line of interrogatory and query which was followed upon the day when I first had the honor of addressing this committee. But it is impossible in the limited time which is now left to me (for this debate must be closed to-day) to answer all the interrogatories which I presume are designed as shafts upon my armor and at the same time to conclude this argument within a reasonable length of time.

Now, what is all this debate about? It is well that the country should understand the question. There is, Mr. Chairman, no issue before this committee. In the Committee on Appropriations, of which I have the honor to be a member, I was in favor of the larger appropriation of $140,000,000, rather than the appropriation of $138,000,000. Why? Because I wish it to be within the power of the Commissioner of Pensions to pay the pensions promptly, and to have adequate resources within his reach. That was the view of the whole committee—to give the Commissioner of Pensions the larger sum, to give him the $140,000,000 asked for under the existing provisions of law. The bill itself, dissevered from any improper amendment or rider, received the unanimous support of the Committee on Appropriations, and will pass this House without dispute or division. What, then, is the excuse for all this argument? It is that certain improper amendments have been inserted in this bill, or are to be proposed to-morrow when the bill shall come up for consideration under the five-minute rule.

The first of the amendments coming to this House from the Committee on Appropriations is that which provides that when an application has been rejected and a second application is made, if it appears that at the time of the filing of the original application the disability alleged did in point of fact exist, the pension shall date back to the time of the original filing. To that amendment I accord my support; and I have already given notice that I shall invoke no point of order against it, although as a legislator I believe in the rule laid down by the Committee on Rules of this House, that no change of existing law should ever be incorporated in an appropriation bill. I believe in that broad, sound, general proposition which found favor with the Committee on Rules of this House and which formed a part of the rules of the Fifty-first Congress; which were adopted in their entirety, subject to future amendment, early in this session.

What are the other amendments? The next amendment is that one proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF]. It is that amendment which was found inserted in the pension appropriation bill when it came before the Committee on Appropriations. It is that amendment which did not find favor even with the Republican members of that committee. It was urged against its adoption that it was not right to take away from the Commissioner of Pensions the power which had been imposed on him ever since the creation of his office. It was alleged also against it, and it has been urged also in this committee, that the inconvenience and expense to which the claimant would be subjected in traveling to the various terms of the United States courts would be too onerous, and therefore, for the benefit of the claimant himself, no such amendment should be incorporated even in a general pension bill. And I call the attention of the committee to the fact that you do not find any general agreement on the Republican side of the House with reference to this amendment.

My distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] told us yesterday that that amendment could not have successful practical operation; that he was opposed to it for various reasons, and he gave the reasons why it would operate unjustly and why it was an unwise provision of law. In fact, several gentlemen on that side of the Chamber urged another remedy; they urged a remedy which they hope to see come to pass in the future—that is, the installment of a Republican administration, and the replacing of General Lochren by a Republican Commissioner of Pensions. I believe, gentlemen, that that is a remedy to which you will be entitled if the suffrages of the people of the United States are accorded to you. But to change improvidently an existing provision of law, because you claim that under certain circumstances, and in certain cases, the Commissioner of Pensions has erred, seems to me to be a very unwise mode of effecting a change or providing a remedy.

They say of General Lochren, who, if I mistake not, served honorably in the Union Army, and who is a man with a good record as a soldier, and one which no man on that side of the House or on this side of the Chamber would attempt to impeach, they say that among the enormous number of cases on which his Bureau has been called to pass judgment there have been a certain number of specific cases of error or mistake. That is the claim, and for that reason they urge that General Lochren is opposed to the interests of the Union soldier. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have had the pleasure of meeting the Commissioner of Pensions, and I have always found him, in his attitude to the soldier, to be favorable and considerate; and to be a gentleman who never volunteered to take any view which could by any means be termed detrimental or injurious in the slightest degree to the interest of the Union soldier. I have forwarded many applications and inquiries from my own district to the Commissioner of Pensions, and I believe, with the exception of one or two cases, which had been previously thereto properly rejected, every claim has been passed to a successful determination.

Now, let us see what the condition of business in that office is. In 1891 I believe there were no less than 154,000 inquiries addressed by Senators and Representatives to the Pension Office. The year before last the number was about 95,000, and last year alone 80,000 requests were sent by members of Congress—that is, forwarded by Senators or Representatives—for information. On July 1, 1895, the claims for pensions or increase of pensions amounted to 552,210, represented by 459,475 claimants, and of these there were original claims in number 210,765; and in the last six months alone—that is, until the 4th day of January, I believe, from the 1st of July, 1895—of new claims there were 55,860. Thus you can imagine, thus you can conceive, or form some idea at least, of the magnitude of the work imposed upon the Pension Bureau. What wonder, then, that in the consideration of so many cases, with a party ready to pounce upon every possible mistake or error, ready to claim that any such mistake or error was an absolute dereliction of duty and an effort to encompass a wrong upon the Union soldier who applied for a pension, and with all the shrewdness and all the astuteness and all the time and labor given to the matter by Republican Representatives on this floor, that a few gentlemen in this large body have been able to discover a limited number of cases in which they claim that an error has been committed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, no man, no matter what his position, whether at the head of a bureau or in charge of any Department of the Government, is infallible. Fallibility, alas! is a condition of human existence; and if we were not fallible we should belong to-day, all of us, to that happier sphere to which we may at least hope to attain some day, although one gentleman on the other side of the Chamber has already consigned me to the bottomless pit. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIFFIN. I desire to say to the gentleman from New York that that was his own misfortune in the use of language.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Of course it has been impossible for me to repair to the Pension Office and investigate each specific instance of alleged error. Unfortunately, placed as I am on several important committees of this House, I have other functions to discharge than that of inquiring into every pension case brought up on the floor of this House, whether such case has been brought here by the Delsartian orator from Tennessee or the gentleman from Indiana who furnished me with a single instance yesterday.

Now, let us look into these cases for a moment. There was the case of Alfred Sterrett, referred to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY]. In that case the record shows that a pension had been paid under the act of June 27, 1890, to Mr. Sterrett for a number of years. An examination of the record of the medical board shows that it is true that they did, by a peculiar system of rating, make out that the man showed a physical incapacity of fourteen-eighteenths. Although the action of his heart was regular, he was reported to be suffering from heart affection to the extent of four-eighteenths, from eczema on his arms to the extent of four-eighteenths, and from lung trouble—it would appear not developed in any way in either lung—to the extent of six-eighteenths; and four-eighteenths, four-eighteenths, and six-eighteenths made up the aggregate of fourteen-eighteenths.

Now suppose the Bureau of Pensions or the Commissioner of Pensions to have been mistaken. Suppose that this man was really physically disabled to the extent that he maintained. At least on the papers it must be conceded that there was enough of doubt to put the Commissioner on his inquiry. But whether there were or not, it matters not. In his judgment, in his discretion, he thought that he was entitled to call for a new examination. This gentleman, Mr. Sterrett, who was, if I mistake not, a member of the One hundred and eighth United States Colored Volunteers, refused to submit to a second examination.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman from New York permit a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Is it not true that this gentleman, in his affidavit, in which he declined to be examined before the board at Tell City, requested an examination before the board at Rockport, Ind., for the reason that they were physicians who did not know him, and that the physicians who formed this board at Tell City were his personal enemies? And upon the other hand, did he not only not refuse to submit to an examination, but did he not request an examination at the hands of the Rockport board?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I believe that this man, Mr. Sterrett, has requested an examination at the hands of another board, but I do not know what action has been taken upon that application by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Did he not, right at the time he made that affidavit, as a part of the affidavit, request an examination before the Rockport board?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Not that I am aware of. I have not seen any such paper.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If you will examine the papers you will certainly see that.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, the charge made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] the other day was that because the president of the medical board at Tell City wrote a letter—which I admit was a very improper letter, a letter attacking this man—because such a letter had been written, the Commissioner of Pensions must have decided upon that letter. Now, it appears from the papers on file, that the paper which must have been acted upon was the regular report from the secretary of that medical board at Tell City informing the Commissioner of Pensions that the claimant, Mr. Sterrett, refused to submit to an examination.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will you permit me right here to ask a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir; I can not yield.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman will not yield to me, as I did to him yesterday?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. All right; I will yield.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will ask you if there is any paper on file in that case from the secretary of the board of examining surgeons at Tell City?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. There is a paper stamped from the secretary of the examining board saying that the claimant refused to appear before him.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And is not that paper this letter from Dr. Hutcheson?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir; there is another paper.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, it has been placed on file since I examined the papers then, and belongs to that class of secret testimony that the Commissioner does not allow ordinary people to see.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I want to give the gentleman every chance, in fairness, to state his whole case. Of course I am not, as gentlemen seem to imagine, in active service in the Department of Pensions. I do not know anything about these cases of my own knowledge.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I concede that the gentleman is correct in that statement.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I merely state what the record shows. I merely state that it would appear by the papers on file that what the Commissioner of Pensions acted upon was this report sent from the secretary of the examining board at Tell City. Now, as the gentleman intimates that that paper has been filed recently, I can only state that my impression is that that paper bears a file mark showing, I think, that about the time had elapsed which would naturally have elapsed before the report was filed.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And does not show any examination by the Tell City board?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] declines to yield.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What was the other case? The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON] called my attention to the case of Selina Brewer, and he complained that the Commissioner of Pensions had required proof of marriage, or rather of nonmarriage. It appears this man Brewer and his present widow, or alleged widow, were married in 1886 (he died in 1891), and the Bureau of Pensions had required some proof from this lady that she was not married at the time she married him. In reference to these cases, involving the law of evidence as to marriage, I believe that the Bureau of Pensions has only followed the regular rule of law, which makes marriage depend on the lex loci contracts, and the Bureau accepts such proof of marriage as would be required by the courts of the State in which it is alleged that the marriage took place. It is all very well to say that the Commissioner of Pensions should not exact any proof of marriage, but you must bear in mind that there are many cases arising in which two women claim to be the widow of the same decedent, in which two women file applications for the payment of the same pension, and there have been some cases in which the widows were at least three in number.

Let me call the attention of the Committee to the case of an Illinois woman, Rosetta Mulligan, of Pearl, Pike County, Ill., who was pensioned as the widow of Hiram H. Mulligan, of Company D, Third Illinois Cavalry, and Company G, Thirty-third Illinois Infantry, under certificate No. 229249.

It is shown that the soldier married Sarah J. Datsen in January, 1855; that four children were born while these parties lived together as man and wife; that in the fall of 1862 the late pensioner, then a single woman, while visiting a sister living near the soldier, became acquainted with him and his family; that in the summer of 1863 the soldier deserted his wife, and on August 9, 1863, married the late pensioner. The soldier died in 1876 leaving a claim pending.

Here is the point in the case. That woman, who was not entitled to a pension, drew from the Government in all $4,011.13, and that money can never be recovered by the Government. That case only illustrates the necessity for the exercise of due care by the Department as to marriage and as to widowhood.

Mr. QUIGG. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him a moment for a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. QUIGG. I want to preface the question by saying that I have not had the same experience with the Pension Department that has been recited by so many gentlemen on the floor, and I admit that somebody ought to ask questions somewhere during the process of getting money out of the Treasury; but does my colleague think it is suitable for the Bureau to require an applicant for a pension as widow to prove a negative proposition by independent witnesses, such as the proposition that the man she claims to have been her husband was never married before she married him. Now, that is the only foolish question, as it seems to me, that I know of having been propounded to applicants for pension as widows, but that question seems to me to be a very unfair one.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. There is no question that my colleague from New York could ask me that would be foolish; but that question, which you say is asked by the Commissioner of Pensions, I do not feel called upon to pronounce judgment upon this afternoon. I am well aware of the good judgment and wisdom of my colleague from New York, for whom I have generally sympathy on all questions of legislation, and there must be something in any proposition that he propounds, but I do not think it is worth while, in the course of this debate, for me to start out with the proposition that no error of judgment, no mistake in decision has ever been committed by the Commissioner of Pensions. If I were a judge on the bench and my view on any question of what the proof of marriage should be were required, or on the weight of evidence, or on the weight of testimony, were asked me, I should feel bound to answer at once; but all I am attempting to do is to explain my position on this pension question, and to defend the Commissioner of Pensions to the extent of showing that he should not be condemned, that he should not be vilified because in some case it may possibly be alleged with some show of reason or plausibility that he has erred.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he will yield for one question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible for me to allow all the gentlemen who desire to question me to interrupt me, for this reason: Gentlemen on the other side of the House have had an unbridled run for several days. There has been no attempt to put the slightest check upon their oratorical impulses.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I want to ask one question merely for information.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding my familiarity with addressing courts and juries and my lesser experience in addressing this House, it is impossible for me to make a continuous argument if I am to be subjected to such constant interruption.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Only for information.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I can not yield. Before passing to the consideration of the rider alleged to be in favor of widows, but which I claim is a mere ad captandum piece of legislation by which it is proposed to give to ladies who it is conceded do not need the money a pension from this Government, before passing to the consideration of that second rider, let me say that if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] be adopted fraud will be the only question that can be raised by the Pension Bureau. That is to say, for any defect in the claimant's case arising from any illegality patent upon the face of the papers, for any collusive action, for any disability which has arisen subsequent to the original grant of the pension, there will be no remedy or recourse.

The amendment will repeal several sections of the Revised Statutes, viz: Section 4707, relative to dependence; section 4708, relative to remarriage; section 4719, relative to failure to claim pension for three years; section 4720, empowering the Commissioner of Pensions to suspend payment in special-act cases during the recess of Congress, and the act of August 7, 1882, terminating the pension on account of adulterous cohabitation of widow pensioners. If this amendment were adopted the Bureau would have no power to suspend a pension in any of the cases which I have indicated, nor would it have power to suspend a pension in cases of complete recovery. In all these classes of cases the Government would be compelled to continue payment of the pension.

Some statement was made in the course of this debate, either yesterday or the day before, as to the cost of pensions in this country, and one gentleman remarked that the cost of the maintenance of the Russian army was greater than the cost of our pension system. It is true that the cost of maintaining the standing army of Russia is greater than our pension appropriation; that is, it is $186,000,000, while our pension appropriation is $140,000,000. But, Mr. Chairman, Russia is the only country in the world in which the cost of maintaining an immense standing army is not less than the amount which we now appropriate for the payment of pensions. For instance, in Austria-Hungary the cost of maintaining the standing army is $55,235,000; in England it is $89,000,000; in France it is $127,900,000; in Germany it is $118,000,000, and in Russia it is $186,000,000. These are the latest official figures which the War Department has been able to obtain.

In reference to the amount of pensions paid in different countries, I desire to call attention to the fact that the pensions paid in France amount to only about twenty-nine or thirty million dollars; in Germany to $19,500,000; in Austria to $12,000,000, and in Russia to $18,000,000. The gentleman who contradicted me in reference to the cost of the standing army of Russia seemed to fear that the argument might be urged that we ought not to pay for pensions a sum greater than the cost of maintaining the standing army of any great European country, but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] interrupted him, and said that the greater the amount paid the larger the pension roll, the greater the encomium which should be passed upon the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not cite these figures showing the cost of maintaining the standing armies of European countries, or the figures showing the amount which is paid in pensions in European countries, as any argument on either side. I merely give these figures as statements of fact tending to show that under our statutes as they stand to-day we make appropriations which may well be considered by the most ardent advocates of an enlarged pension system to be thoroughly adequate to the needs of the widows and the veterans of the civil war.

It has been said by gentlemen in the course of this debate that I have attacked pensions. It has been said that I am unfriendly to the soldier. I denounce each of these statements as an absolute and unqualified falsehood. I, sir, am in favor, as I announced at the beginning of my speech the other day, of the payment of the pensions now provided for by law. I am in favor of the payment of all those pensions which accrue and are due under the general law, of all the pensions which are accorded either to the soldier or the soldier's widow by reason of disease contracted or injury suffered by him in the service and in the line of duty.

I am further in favor of all the sums being paid to soldiers or to their widows which can be justly claimed under any of the provisions of the dependent pension act, so called, of June 27, 1890; and I so stated explicitly on three or four occasions during my speech a day or two since. I avowed that I was in favor of letting the dependent pension act of June 27, 1890, remain unrepealed upon the statute book. I say further that in meritorious cases, in cases which do not come under the provisions of any existing statute, but cases of special or peculiar hardship, where the claim is clearly meritorious, I have always been and always shall be in favor of special pension acts and of special pension legislation.

Why all this abuse; why all this invective which you have hurled upon my devoted head hour after hour and day after day, instead of having been inspired by proper feelings of gratitude to one whom you owe the opportunity to open your maiden mouths? [Laughter.]

I will further state, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the committee, that I have always aided, in so far as it has been within my power, the claim of every soldier and every soldier's widow or orphan within my district which has ever been brought to me. I have given such aid, also, in many cases beyond the limits of my own Congressional district. But notwithstanding the fact that I have voted in favor of pension legislation in the past, that I have voted in favor of special bills that have been meritorious; in spite of the fact that I announced the other day that I was in favor of all the existing pension laws (that is, in favor of the general laws and in favor of letting the act of 1890 remain upon the statute book) I have been assailed in this long debate upon the ground that because I was not in favor of a further enlargement of the pension rolls I was destitute of patriotism. Gentlemen, is he the patriot who believes that for purposes of political advantage the money wrung from the people of this nation by taxation should be paid out to people who do not really need the money? Has it come to such a pass that no Representative in this House dares to rise and say that he is opposed to the unnecessary expenditure of public funds or to the devotion of public moneys to the payment of pensions to people who do not need those pensions?

And let me say right here that in no part of my speech have I intimated that the payment of just pensions, the payment of pensions to such soldiers or widows as are entitled to them under the existing provisions of law, would be in any way an improper depletion of the revenues of this country or of the funds in the public Treasury. I do not think that such use of public moneys would be improper. But I said that if we were to enter upon the passage of an enormous number of new pension bills—if we were to increase the pension rolls enormously by the addition of persons whose income is now adequate and who are not entitled to the payment of pensions, or by the adoption of that which has been proposed and will be proposed again, a general-service pension, which will burden this country with an additional expenditure of from forty to seventy-five million dollars per annum—I said that such enlargement of the pension rolls would inaugurate a pillage of the public Treasury. But my remarks applied to such enlargement of the pension laws, and in no way to existing pensions or to the existing rights of any pensioner.

I will venture to assert that the opposition to an unnecessary and unjust enlargement of the pension rolls has found favor with others in my party than myself, and with many of our party leaders. When I spoke the other day I did not claim to speak for anybody, for any organization. I spoke as a member of the Committee on Appropriations; I spoke because I felt that it would be wrong, through any fear of misrepresentation or attack, to be silent when a proposition came from our committee to enlarge unnecessarily the existing pension laws. I spoke as a Representative in Congress, mindful of what Noah Webster said in the early days of this century, that a Representative in Congress is not only a representative of his district but a representative of the people, a representative of the whole United States. Let me read to you a few words which have come to me showing that even the widows believe that I am right:

Hon. FRANKLIN BARTLETT:

MY DEAR SIR: I had the pleasure of hearing your very able speech upon pensions, and though now a widow asking for increase of pension, I fully indorse many of your sentiments and believe there are to-day many receiving large sums from the Government who have means sufficient to support them in comfort.

One remark of yours struck me very forcibly. You said, show you the man who had fought in twenty battles and you would vote to have him pensioned accordingly. It was rather a singular circumstance that I held in my hand at that time my husband's military record, from which I could have proven to you that he had fought in several more than twenty battles.

I have also, among other letters, received one from a prominent member of the Union League Club of the city of New York—a club which, as you gentlemen are aware, represents one of the great Republican political subdivisions in my city. This gentleman says:

I am most grateful you had the monumental courage to say some words against the additional pensions. Standing up as you did in the center of a half acre of demagogues and saying what you did marks you a man of courage.

[Laughter.]

Mr. MORSE. Send that to Brother HOWARD for his book.

Mr. BARRETT. Will the gentleman from New York allow me——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York declines to yield.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Let me call attention also to the fact that when the act of 1890 was passed one of the great leaders of the Democratic party in the Senate of the United States, the Senator from Maryland, Mr. GORMAN, said:

It is well known that the vote of Indiana controls the election of President of the United States; and I assert here and now, from the rolls of the Pension Office itself, that pensions are being distributed in that State out of all proportion to the number of soldiers furnished by Indiana in the war.

The Senator from Missouri, Senator VEST, after comparing the number of Indiana pensioners with those of Illinois, said:

Why is this enormous disproportion? Read the report of the examining committees and the evidence taken when Dudley was Commissioner of Pensions and you will find the solution. You will find that it was declared and that it was acted upon, "Give pensions freely, liberally; every man that you pension is made or induced to vote the Republican ticket."

* * * * * * *

Sir, I do not care to indulge in speculations as to how much money will be paid upon these pensions. I shall not be here to see the end of it. But I prophesy that the people of this country will revolt against this system as at present carried on. I know that this money is being distributed, not only among the recipients themselves, but it goes to country merchants, to petty dealers, and therefore it percolates and permeates every neighborhood in the country, and is the largest campaign fund that can possibly be used. But there will come an end to it. The American people are long-suffering and patient, but their common sense and their sense of justice will at last revolt against this abuse of the most generous and holy feeling which a people can entertain toward soldiers.

And the distinguished Senator from Maryland, Senator GORMAN, in speaking of the increase of pensions, said:

You are doing it with full knowledge that you have not made provisions to pay them the amounts that are already due since 1879, and you can not do it; you do not dare to do it, because you can not go before an indignant people, as there is in this country, increasing their taxation at the time when you, as well as we, have promised that the burdens shall be taken from them.

Mr. PICKLER. What was the date of that speech.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. That was about the 23d day of June, 1890.

Mr. HARDY. The State of Maryland does not seem to have agreed with him.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I decline to yield.

That was in the speech delivered by the Senator from Maryland when the conference report was brought in on the act of June 27, 1890.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And he is sorry he made it now. [Laughter.] He would not do it again.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. It is unnecessary for me to discuss the views of the Senator from Maryland further than to state what were the views entertained by him at the date of his speech on this question.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the views entertained by me are adverse to a further and unnecessary enlargement of the pension roll except in special cases of peculiar merit, or in cases where the circumstances alleged show that the pensioner's claim is meritorious; I desire to call the attention of the committee to the further fact that soldiers who have gone through the civil war have also rendered their judgments in favor of this side of the controversy. Read what Lieutenant Foote said in the protest of the loyal volunteers against the degradation of pensions:

I have earned the right to speak. I stood in the ranks, a loyal volunteer in 1861, and heard the hissing balls when the first guns were fired at the skirmish of Blackburn's Ford, three days before the first battle of Bull Run. I marched with my company at the last grand review at Washington, in 1865. I lost not a day from service between those dates, except when disabled by a wound received at the battle of Fair Oaks. No man can say of me that I am not with those who demand pensions for loyal service because I did not serve or did not suffer. I have written my record with my blood.

And here I have a still higher authority. I have the words of a gentleman, of a great officer in the Union Army, whose name is familiar throughout this whole country, but who, alas! to-day is no longer with us. I refer to Gen. Henry W. Slocum, of the State of New York. His article was entitled "Pensions; time to call a halt," and was written, if I mistake not, in 1891:

Congress is besieged at every session so to change the laws as to increase the roll of pensioners and vastly to increase the expenditures of the Government. I believe that the time has come when this agitation should cease. I earnestly hope that it will be checked for two reasons: First, I believe the tendency of these constant demands will be to lessen the esteem and affection which our people have always felt for the veterans of the late war. The liberty of the people and their desire to be generous toward the nation's defenders have been evinced not only by this vast pension roll, but by the establishment by the General Government of national homes in different sections of the country, and by several States of like institutions. In these homes the disabled veteran is as kindly cared for as in any similar institution supported by any government in the world. Laws have also been passed giving the veterans preference in the employment of the Government. In fact, nothing has been left undone by our people to testify their gratitude to the veteran soldiers.

But I have still a stronger reason for opposing the further agitation of this question, and that is the interest I feel in the welfare of the many thousands of honest and deserving people whose names are now on our pension roll. There is great danger, if we allow the pension-claim agent to represent the soldiers as a body of cormorants who are discontented with what they have received, that sooner or later we shall "kill the goose that lays the golden eggs." It is for the interest of the pension-claim agent constantly to change our pension laws, so as to enable him to bring in new claims, each of which brings money to his coffers. At the rate pensions are now being granted the claim agents are in receipt of $3,500,000 per year. It is this class of men, and not the honest pensioner, who is interested in continuing this agitation. I fear that eventually a reaction will take place and honest and deserving pensioners will suffer with the undeserving.

* * * * * * *

The best friend of the old soldier is not he who is pressing these exhorbitant demands upon our Government, but he who by counseling moderation voluntarily takes the risk of incurring the hatred of the pension-claim agent and the unthinking condemnation of his comrades.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PICKLER. May I ask the gentleman from New York a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, it is getting pretty late. We are to close general debate to-day, and my colleague on the committee [Mr. BLUE] desires to make some remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE], a member of the committee.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, in behalf of the committee which prepared this bill, it is proper, I think, that the bill should be fully explained before it is submitted to discussion under the five-minute rule.

On the first item of $140,000,000 the committee made no change from the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions, giving the full amount that he estimated would be required for the next fiscal year.

In the item of $800,000, submitted by the Commissioner of Pensions as the needed appropriation, the committee thought best to make a reduction of $50,000. The expenditures of last year were but $729,677.78, and from the information the committee received it was believed that the appropriation would be ample to meet the service.

In the section of the bill pertaining to clerk hire there was in the appropriation bill of last year a provision which the committee has left out, which is in this language:

But the appointment of the clerk to sign official checks, who shall receive the same compensation at each agency as was paid during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, shall be made by the pension agent, without other or further approval.

That, it appears, was amended in the bill last year for the purpose of protecting an appointee of the pension agent at Columbus. The pension agent insisted on appointing his daughter as the clerk to sign pension checks. An amendment was placed on the bill in the Senate, which left the approval to the pension agent himself. Before that time it had been subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. This leaves the bill precisely as the law was prior to that interpolation in the last appropriation bill. That the Commissioner advised, and the committee adopted.

In the item of $500 for fuel the expenditure was $165.05. We reduced the amount to $250 in this bill, which is something more than was expended last year. It seems that fuel is used at only two places, Washington and San Francisco. At the other pension agencies the Secretary of the Treasury furnishes the building and fuel.

In the item of light we have made a reduction of $250, the estimated amount being $750, and the actual expenditure $451.85.

In the further item of $35,000, suggested by the Commissioner of Pensions for stationery and other necessary expenses, it was found that the actual expenditure for last year was $31,136.15; but of that actual expenditure about $1,400 was paid out for clerk hire, which should not be in that item, but should be covered by the appropriation made in another place. We have therefore reduced that item to $30,000 instead of $35,000, and put in the words "exclusive of clerical services."

On the question of rent, the actual expenditure of last year was $23,070. The Commissioner recommended on additional item of $3,000 for the rent of a buildinga t the Buffalo agency.

Mr. DANIELS. I desire to say to the gentleman that I propose to bring that up again by way of amendment.

Mr. BLUE. I will explain it now. The committee refused to place that additional item in the bill for the reason that they regarded $23,070 as sufficient to meet all the rents which the Government should pay. We were informed that a building at Detroit, and also another at Milwaukee, are in course of completion, and that before the money is made available by this appropriation, beginning with the 1st day of next July, the expenditures for rent at Detroit and Milwaukee will be no longer necessary. For that reason we made no addition to the amount for rents.

The bill as reported does not reduce the appropriation for pensions, but it has cut down the other estimates as made by the Commissioner $55,750, as I have stated.

In reference to the amendments proposed by the committee, it was believed that the two provisions incorporated into this bill should go there as a just criticism of the inhospitable and unfriendly action of the Pension Department. They were not made more general, nor to extend beyond the time for which this appropriation is made, by reason of the rule of the Fifty-first Congress, which says:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill, or in any amendment thereto.

It is believed by the committee that these amendments do not change existing law, but that they are a legislative interpretation of what the law is and what it should be interpreted to be, in consonance with what was the ruling of the former administration; and that they are not new legislation, but are simply in the interest of a fair and just interpretation of the existing law, for the protection of the pensioner, during the time this money is to be expended.

That, in substance, is the explanation of the bill as reported. It is not my purpose at this time to enter into any general discussion of the subject of pensions, and were it not for the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] has indulged in some expressions which seem to need reply, I should not at this time say anything further.

At some time in the future I hope to claim indulgence for the purpose of speaking upon the question of pensions at some length, when a measure is here upon that subject.

The gentleman from New York seems to be aggrieved at the treatment he has received, and what seems to have troubled his fastidious taste more than anything else is that some gentleman from Michigan, as he recollects the fact, spoke of some of his language as "rot."

Now, Mr. Chairman, that may not have been as elegant as it was expressive, but I think that the committee will bear me out in saying that it was quite as elegant as the language of the cultured gentleman from New York who spoke of "looting the Treasury." It is also quite as elegant as the expression in the anonymous communication which he has just read to this House, speaking of this House as being "an acre of demagogues." The gentleman seems to be fresh from the classics, and prides himself upon the use of the English language; but I apprehend when he consults with other gentlemen around him, who are equally as cultured, he will feel that the gentleman from Michigan, although coming from the Western country, was equally as elegant and tasteful as he in the selection of his phrases.

Now, the gentleman has quoted Noah Webster, as I recollect him, as giving the proper definition of the duties of a Representative upon this floor. I shall not differ with him in regard to the definition, in the main, but, Mr. Chairman, I do believe that a constituency that sends a representative here is responsible for him. [Laughter.] And while I would not disparage the loyalty of the great city of New York, with its splendid patriotism and the heroism of its soldiers, I do say that a constituency that sends a representative here who talks as he does ought to answer for the man who pretends to represent them. [Laughter and applause.] We have been deluged on this floor with circulars and letters and comments of the press criticising the action of the representatives of the people in standing up for the honor of this nation, in asserting the rights of this Republic against the aggressions of Great Britain; and where do they come from? They come from a place so near the gentleman's district that it seemed to me when I heard him that he must properly represent a constituency somewhere there, a constituency boasting of its wealth, but which would seem to place dollars above patriotism and pelf above that higher duty we all owe to a common country.

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and men decay;
Princes and lords may flourish or may fade;
A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroy'd can never be supplied.

[Applause.]

It was from the farms and workshops, from the hives of industry, from the homes of this great Republic that the men came who bore the heat and burden of this great conflict. Simple and plain were they, but they represented the great heart of the people of this splendid nation. And in that hour when they were offering their lives that the nation might live, throughout this broad land, everywhere above Mason and Dixon's line, the common sentiment was that the disabled soldier and the widow and orphan of the soldier should be cared for. There were put on the statute books of those times the pension laws of this great Republic, and a very large proportion of the men who are now the care of this nation, the wards of this great Republic, enlisted after very liberal provisions for pensions were put upon the statute books, enlisted after that chosen leader of Republican conviction had annunciated the doctrine that "to care for him who has borne the battle and for his widow and orphan is a sacred obligation of this nation." That has come down to us as from a prophet of old from a man whose fame and great name will last long after this Republic shall have ceased to exist.

And now, my fellow-citizens. [Great laughter.] Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, I had gotten out of the presence of the gentleman from New York into the greater presence of the plain people of this country. [Renewed laughter and applause.] If the gentleman from New York had recalled the expressions that he used he certainly could not have found it in his heart to speak of being insulted from this side, and when a member stands in his place and reads encomiums of himself and fails to give names of authors, it seems to me that those encomiums are of doubtful origin and doubtful authority. [Renewed laughter and applause.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] says the Republican side owes him a debt of gratitude for his criticism of proposed pension legislation. In that he is correct. No more potent or convincing argument could be offered in support of the policies of the Republican party than the gentleman's assault upon its liberal pension provisions.

The gentleman also wanders off into the classics, and speaks of the rents which the envious Cascas proposed to make in his garment. If the gentleman harbors the idea that any member on this side of the House envies him the reputation he has won in this debate, he is mistaken.

I do not know how true it is, but it is intimated to me that the gentleman from New York is a constituent of his colleague, Mr. CUMMINGS. If that be so, his speech has already been answered. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to interrupt.

Mr. BLUE. I will be more generous than you were in permitting interruptions.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have the honor to be the constituent of the Hon. JAMES J. WALSH. I have not the pleasure of being the constituent of the Hon. AMOS J. CUMMINGS.

Mr. BLUE. Of whom did you say you were the constituent?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. WALSH.

Mr. BLUE. You are a constituent of Mr. WALSH. It had been suggested to me that you did not reside in your district, and you seem to be willing to testify in that direction yourself. [Laughter.] That being the case, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to pursue that inquiry any further.

In conclusion, permit me to say that it is my judgment that we ought to put this bill through with very few, if any more, amendments. That rule of the Fifty-first Congress has been to a certain extent the rule of this body, I understand, for many years. It is in the interest of good legislation. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] has intimated clearly and distinctly his purpose and intention to bring into this body some general pension legislation soon. This is a matter of appropriation of money, and under the rules it seems to me that we ought not to waste any great length of time in seeking to amend this bill, but should pass it promptly, so that the Senate may get to it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DINGLEY, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3537) making appropriation for payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, before making the motion to adjourn, I desire to announce that to-morrow we shall take up this bill by paragraphs under the five-minute rule.

ARANSAS PASS.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors the bill to amend an act of Congress approved May 12, 1890, entitled "An act for improving Aransas Pass," etc., with a substitute therefor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled Senate bill 628, to provide an American register for the steamer Miami; when the Speaker signed the same.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have an order made for a reprint of the bill No. 3543, introduced by me, for the purpose of preventing the improper discontinuance of pensions. Many members desire to examine the bill and the supply is exhausted, so that even the committee have not a sufficient number of copies.

There being no objection, the reprint was ordered.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE COGSWELL OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, as the successor to the seat of Gen. William Cogswell it is my painful office to formally announce the intelligence of his death in this city on the 22d day of May of last year. General Cogswell was a member of the Fiftieth, the Fifty-first, the Fifty-second, and the Fifty-third Congresses, and was elected, by a majority that swept away party lines in his district, to membership in this House. I need not call the attention of those members who served with him to the fidelity with which he always performed every public duty. It is not my purpose at this time to enter into any extended eulogy of his life and services, but at some later day I shall ask the House to set apart a time when its membership may express formally their appreciation of his life, his character, and his services. I content myself now with sending to the desk resolutions which I ask the House to adopt in honor of his memory.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. William Cogswell, late a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the House do now adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted; and in pursuance thereof the House (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker, as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation for removal of certain furniture and records from the custom-house building in Chicago, etc.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy relating to a deficiency in the "Contingent, Navy," appropriation—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service relating to officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service on detached duty during 1896 with the Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State, submitting an estimate of appropriation for the clerical force in the Bureau of Statistics for the remainder of the current fiscal year, and for the fiscal year 1897—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the finding filed by the court in the case of James P. Layne, administrator of Elizabeth Layne, deceased, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS.

Mr. BARNEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 103) relating to final proof in timber-culture entries, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 56) in writing thereon; which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1179) to repeal section 1218 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by chapter 46 of the laws of 1884 relating to appointments of officers in the Army or Navy of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 55) in writing thereon; which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of 1,500 extra copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Railroads for the year 1895, with appendixes, for the use of the Commissioner of Railroads, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 57) in writing thereon; which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 17, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct a slight error in the Journal. The report which I made yesterday was from the Committee on Indian Affairs, not from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

The Journal as corrected was approved.

ROTUNDA OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk, and for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Joint Committee on the Library be instructed to ascertain the cause of the delay in completing the chiaro-oscuro (light and shade) by Mr. Costogini, in the Rotunda of the Capitol, and whether or not it would be advisable to remove the scaffolding still remaining for the use of completing the painting, and to report to the House the result of the investigation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. SAYERS. Let us have some explanation of it.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word about the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman will be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. HOWE. There is an unsightly scaffolding in the Rotunda of this Capitol building, which has been there for seven years, unused, defacing the beauty of the Rotunda. The resolution which I have just offered is intended to hasten the completion of the historical decoration of the Rotunda, and thereby to hasten the removal of this scaffolding.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will permit me, I will suggest that we should remove the cause of the scaffolding, namely, the sinecure office under the title of "Architect of the Capitol Extension." Then we shall have the Capitol all right. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Speaker, this resolution proposes to refer the subject to the Joint Committee on the Library, that they may investigate it and use their own judgment as to the recommendation that they shall make. My object in presenting the resolution is simply to get rid of this unsightly scaffolding, which, as I have already said, has been there for seven years unused.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

DISTRIBUTION OF NAVAL RECORDS.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a resolution, for which I ask present consideration by the House, and, as it concerns the convenience of very many members, I shall ask the privilege, after it is read, of explaining with great brevity its purpose and effect.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 88) authorizing the distribution of copies of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Navies in Congressional districts where distribution has not been made.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to send the undistributed copies of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, both of the Union and of the Confederate navies, to such libraries, organizations, and individuals as may be designated before the meeting of the next Congress by the Representatives in the Fifty-fourth Congress of the districts whose Representatives in the Fifty-third Congress failed to designate the distributees of their quota of said official records or any part thereof, as authorized by the act of Congress approved July 31, 1894, and the joint resolution approved March 2, 1895, to the extent and in the manner and form provided in said act.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, this resolution has received the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, as will be manifest from a letter which I shall shortly send to the desk. The publication and distribution of these Naval Records were originally authorized by an appropriation act of 1894, which provided that there should be an equal distribution in every Congressional district by the members of the Fifty-third Congress. A resolution passed by Congress on the 2d of March, 1895, provided that the privilege of distributing those records should expire at the beginning of the present Congress. Accordingly those members of the Fifty-third Congress who failed to distribute their quota of these important documents before the opening of the present Congress have lost their right of distribution for their respective districts. There are three districts, including my own, where no distribution has been made, and there are many districts where only a partial distribution has been made.

I send to the desk and ask to have read two letters—one from the superintendent of these Naval War Records and the other from the Secretary of the Navy to the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, LIBRARY AND NAVAL WAR RECORDS,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1896.

SIR: 1. In reference to our conversation of this morning, in regard to the introduction of the proposed joint resolution, authorizing the distribution of copies of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Navies in the War of the Rebellion in the Congressional districts where the distribution has not yet been made, I have to advise you that I have submitted the proposition to the Secretary of the Navy, and the subject meets his entire approval. He is of the opinion that the draft of the joint resolution you were good enough to prepare and leave for his inspection covers the entire ground, with the exception that there ought to be introduced some limit of time as to when the distribution should be completed.

2. I therefore return the draft to you as prepared, with an official letter upon the subject which the Secretary has addressed to Chairman BOUTELLE, of the Naval Committee. May I ask the favor of you that you will present the letter to Mr. BOUTELLE, as the Secretary directed that I forward it to him through you?

Very respectfully,
RICHARD RUSH,
Superintendent Naval War Records.

Hon. WILLIAM H. MOODY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 14, 1896.

SIR: The act of Congress approved July 31, 1894, authorizing the publication and distribution of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Navies in the War of the Rebellion provides that all sets of these records which were not distributed by the members of the Fifty-third Congress shall be sold by the Secretary of the Navy for the cost of publication, with 10 per cent added thereto, and the proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury. The joint resolution of March 2, 1895, extended the time of distribution until the assembling of the present Congress.

There are now a number of sets of this publication (as far as published) in this Department, which being the balance of the unassigned Congressional quota, are now subject to sale by the terms of the law. In view of the fact that the Department has received numerous applications from members of the Fifty-fourth Congress for these unexpended quotas, I have not yet placed them upon sale, deeming it best that the present Congress should have an opportunity to express its wishes in the matter, should it so desire.

If, therefore, it is the pleasure of Congress that the distribution of these unexpended copies should be made in the Congressional districts which have not yet received their full quotas, I beg leave to call your attention to the fact that it could easily be accomplished without any additional expense by means of a joint resolution directing this Department to distribute these volumes upon the orders of the members of the Fifty-fourth Congress whose districts have not yet received their full quotas. The Department would be very glad if Congress would make this disposition of the remaining sets.

Very respectfully,
H. A. HERBERT, Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES A. BOUTELLE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask that the resolution be referred to the appropriate committee. I object to its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. MOODY said: Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], having examined the resolution I offered a short time ago, is willing to withdraw his objection, and I now renew my request for the present consideration and the passage of the resolution.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the resolution again reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it should be again read.

The resolution was again reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOODY. I beg the indulgence of the House for a few moments to explain again the purpose and effect of the resolution. Gentlemen on both sides of the House apparently apprehended that its purpose was to throw the undistributed Naval Records of the War of the Rebellion into a pool and distribute them among the new members. That is a mistake. It has no such purpose or effect. The only object is to secure the proper and equitable distribution of these volumes. It was submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. BOUTELLE], whose absence at this present moment I regret, and who had himself failed to distribute the whole of his quota of 19 copies. He could not do so because under a resolution passed in March, 1895, the right to do it determined on the assembling of the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Now, there are many gentlemen—the gentleman from New York among others—in the House who have failed to distribute their full quotas, and can not do so now, as indicated by the letter read from the Secretary of the Navy, unless the authority is given by this resolution to the Secretary.

The only purpose is to allow those districts which have failed, either in whole or in part, to receive the 19 copies to which each district is entitled to receive the remaining copies to which they are entitled. In my own district the illness and death of my predecessor, General Cogswell, prevented any distribution at all. Under this resolution I shall have the right to distribute the 19 copies already allotted to the Sixth Massachusetts district and now in the custody of the Secretary of the Navy. It will allow the gentleman from New York to distribute his one copy which remains undistributed. It will allow those gentlemen who have failed to designate the distributees of their quotas to do so. If this resolution does not pass the effect will be that under the law the Secretary of the Navy must take all the copies of these records not already distributed and sell them to the public. I trust that will not be allowed.

Mr. HULL. My understanding was that there was a law passed by both Houses and signed by the President, which provided that in the event these documents were not distributed they should go to the Secretary of the Navy and be sold. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's resolution, and the question I wish to ask him is, will this resolution change that law?

Mr. MOODY. It will change the law. The Secretary of the Navy, who has possession of these copies, holds that it will change the law, and on its passage he will immediately distribute to any district which has not already its full quota the remaining number of these records to which that district is entitled.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was almost impossible for me to catch the purport of the resolution from listening to the reading of it from the desk. I want to ask the gentleman if there is to be a distribution of any more than the documents which remain undistributed by members of the Fifty-third Congress who failed to make the distribution? Does it authorize the Secretary to go beyond the distribution of those that remain undistributed?

Mr. MOODY. It does not authorize the distribution of a single additional copy, and it does not change the destination from one district to another of a single copy of the records. It only carries out the purpose of the original act, which has failed, owing to the negligence or failure of Representatives to distribute their allotted quota.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Do I understand that the gentleman's joint resolution in any way reduces the quota of gentlemen who failed to make the designation in the last Congress?

Mr. MOODY. It does not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LEASING OF AMERICAN ISLAND, SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. STEPHENSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3728) to amend section 21 of an act entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1889.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 21 of an act entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1889, be, nd the same is hereby, a mended by adding to said section the following:

"That the said city of Chamberlain, by and through its regular city council, shall have authority to either by itself or under a system of leases, securing a revenue to the city, to use or lease said island for public assemblies of a religious, literary, political, or scientific character; to use or lease the same for fair grounds or driving-park purposes; the right to improve, use, or lease to improve and use, the springs on said island for sanitarium and bathing purposes, together with the right to erect such buildings and make such improvements as may be necessary to provide for the comfort and convenience of those connected therewith or visiting said island for any of the purposes named, the said city council at all times having authority to control and regulate all the fees or charges made by any person or association thereon for any of the purposes herein enumerated, and full authority to construct roadways, and lay out said island into grounds, parks, or lots suitable for the uses herein allowed and provided for, said island always remaining free to the public for the ordinary uses of a public park: Provided, That such leases shall not in the aggregate embrace or cover more than one-third the area of said island."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let us have some explanation of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] asks that an explanation be made. With the consent of the House, an explanation may be given.

There was no objection.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, under section 21 of "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1889, there was granted to the city of Chamberlain, S. Dak., American Island, situated in the Missouri River adjacent to said city, in area about 640 acres, and covered with a heavy growth of beautiful and heavy timber.

The act referred to provided that the city should use the island for a public park, and that it at all times should remain open to the public for such purpose. The city has complied with the provisions of the law, and it is contemplated to improve the island in compliance with the original purpose of the act. To do this will necessitate a large outlay, and the city at this time is not in position from its own resources to carry out the extensive improvements proposed. There is located upon the island a warm mineral spring possessing great medicinal properties, and capital is ready to be invested to utilize the waters and to construct a sanitarium for that purpose. It is also contemplated to expend money in the construction of suitable buildings and beautifying the grounds adjacent for Chautauqua assemblies and for literary purposes. It is further proposed to prepare grounds and construct buildings for agricultural fairs and driving-park purposes.

This bill provides that the act of 1889 shall in no way be violated, but that the original purpose, the dedication of this island as a public park, to which the public shall have free access at all times, shall be faithfully carried out.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What advantage will this be to the city?

Mr. GAMBLE. The city has not the means with which to carry out the improvements at present. Capital is ready to be invested in the making of the improvements, and without the authority given by the present bill the parties who are ready to make the proposed improvements will decline to do so.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What franchises will capitalists acquire under this bill?

Mr. GAMBLE. Under the original act there is a question whether the city has any authority to lease the grounds, so that under the present law capital will not be invested; but under the bill now proposed such investments will be made and these improvements carried out to the advantage of the city.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then this bill gives the city the power to lease?

Mr. GAMBLE. That is all; and it applies only to one-third of the original tract.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from South Dakota a question. Has this been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. GAMBLE. No, sir, it has not; but it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, which has jurisdiction of the subject, and has been favorably reported by that committee in the form of a substitute embodying the same bill as originally introduced by myself, only eliminating from it the preamble, and embodying a further provision that only one-third of it shall be used for this purpose.

Mr. PICKLER. The island in question belongs to the State by a former act of Congress, anyway,

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GAMBLE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. HURLEY, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 2758) entitled "An act to fix the standard of weights and measures," was ordered to be reprinted.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, before moving that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, I desire to have the reference of a bill corrected. It was referred by mistake to the Committee on War Claims, but should have gone to the Committee on Claims. I ask that the bill (H. R. 3715) for the relief of Capt. William J. Kountz be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the change of reference indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 30) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," approved March 2, 1893; and

A bill (S. 43) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed a joint resolution of the following title:

On January 14, 1896:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 19) for filling vacancy on Board of Regents, Smithsonian Institution.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, the following joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 39) making an appropriation to defray the joint expense of locating the boundary line between the Territory of Alaska and the British North American territory—to the Committee on Appropriations.

EULOGIES OF DECEASED MEMBERS.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the Hon. Charles O'Neill, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania; upon the Hon. Marcus C. Lisle, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky, and upon the Hon. George W. Houk, late a Representative from the State of Ohio, be printed, as required by law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to have an explanation as to why these eulogies have not been printed before. This is a very unusual resolution.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I will say that this resolution was introduced by request of the Clerk of the House. He states that the concurrent resolution which passed the House at the last session failed to pass the Senate, and that while the printing law provides for the printing of a certain number of eulogies upon the death of each member, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing requires notice by concurrent resolution of the death of the member. It only refers to the printing of the number of copies required by law.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I was absent when this resolution was read, and did not hear it reported.

The SPEAKER. The resolution can be reported again, if the gentleman desires, and if no objection is made.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS] that it is simply a notice from the two Houses of Congress to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing that these members are deceased.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I hardly understand the necessity for the resolution, if it only calls for the printing in accordance with law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman says it is to give official notice to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing that it is proper to print.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will allow me a moment, as I understand it now this resolution which the gentleman has introduced is an exact copy of the resolutions which we have heretofore passed providing for the printing of eulogies?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That is it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The printing law provides how these eulogies shall be printed, and the number that shall be printed, and their distribution. It has been usual, however, since that law was passed, to introduce these concurrent resolutions and have them referred and reported back, with an estimate of the cost. I shall not object to the consideration of this resolution, in view of the fact that these gentlemen were members of the last Congress, and the eulogies should have been ordered to be printed by the last Congress.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. And only failed to do so on account of the concurrent resolution not passing the Senate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The resolution is proper, in my judgment, and ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

UNAUTHORIZED GRANTS OF PUBLIC LAND.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

I desire to invite attention to the necessity for prompt legislation in order to remove the limitation of the time within which suits may be brought by the Government to annul unlawful or unauthorized grants of public lands.

By the act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stats., 556), the Secretary of the Interior is directed to adjust each of the railroad land grants which may be unadjusted, and it is provided, if it shall appear upon the completion of such adjustment, or sooner, that the lands have been from any cause erroneously certified or patented by the United States to or for the use of a company claiming under any of said grants, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to demand a reconveyance of the title to all lands so erroneously certified or patented, and on failure of the company to make such reconveyance within ninety days the Attorney-General is required to institute and prosecute in the proper courts necessary proceedings to restore title to said lands to the United States. The demands made under this act have been numerous, and in some cases have resulted in the reinvestment of title to the lands in the United States upon demand, but in most cases the demand has been refused and suits have been necessary.

The work of adjustment has been unavoidably slow. The said act makes provision for the reinstatement of entries erroneously canceled on account of railroad withdrawals, and, upon certain conditions, provides for the confirmation of titles derived by purchase from the companies of lands shown to be excepted from the grants. It contemplates a disposition of every tract described by the granting act, situated within the primary or granted limits; an inspection of each tract certified or patented to the company within such limit, to determine whether such certification or patenting was proper; the listing of those tracts shown to be erroneously certified, and the determination for what tracts lost to the grant indemnity is to be allowed.

It is necessary, in making such an ajustment, that all questions of conflicting claims, either between settlers and the road, or between two roads the grants for which conflict or overlap, be finally disposed of, so that a proper disposition of the land can be shown in the adjustment. While adjustments have proceeded with the utmost rapidity consistent with a due regard for the rights of the settlers, of the United States, and the railroad companies, and while to this end the force of adjusters has been largely augmented in the General Land Office, many of the grants yet remain unadjusted.

In some of the grants, notably the corporation grants, the lack of surveys up to the present time made the completion of the work impossible.

Decisions rendered by the Interior Department in numerous conflicts have been carried into the courts. The construction of the Interior Department has generally been sustained when final determination has been reached, but many of the cases are still pending in the courts, not yet having been decided. Some of these cases, while involving immediately the title to only one particular tract, will, when decided, furnish a rule of construction to control the disposition of the title to thousands of acres of other lands in the same situation. Until the courts pass upon these questions final adjustments can not be made.

By section 8 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stats., 1099), it is expressly enacted that suits by the United States to vacate and annul any patent theretofore issued "shall only be brought within five years from the passage of this act." This period of five years will expire on the 3d of March, 1896. Of course no suit by the United States to secure the cancellation of a patent in this class of cases after that date would be effective. Indeed, it is now too late to initiate proceedings looking to any such suit, inasmuch as demand has to be first made on the company, and thereafter ninety days must be allowed for compliance or refusal, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887. Before the expiration of this period the statute would bar the right of recovery by the Government, and the benefits of anticipated favorable decisions of the courts would be lost so far as they might determine the character and disposition of grants similar to those directly involved in pending cases.

It will be readily seen that if this act of limitations is to remain on the statute books, the portion of the adjustment act referred to would be rendered nugatory. Indeed, there would be but little use in continuing the adjustment of many of the land grants, inasmuch as ascertained rights of the United States, or of settlers, could not be enforced by law.

Legislation establishing limitations against the right of the Government to sue is an innovation not entirely consistent with the general history of the rights of the Government, for it has uniformly been held that time did not bar the sovereign power from the assertion of a right.

The early adjudications of the Land Department construed the grants with a degree of liberality toward the grantees which later decisions of the courts and of the Department have not sustained. It seems clear that the further progress of adjustments will develop facts and transactions in connection with these land grants which ought to be the subjects of legal examination and scrutiny before they are allowed to become final and conclusive. The Government should not be prevented from going into the courts to right wrongs perpetrated by its agents or any other parties, and by which much of the public domain may be diverted from the people at large to corporate uses.

In these circumstances, it seems to me that the act of 1891 should be so amended as not to apply to suits brought to recover title to lands certified or patented on account of railroad or other grants. And I respectfully urge upon Congress speedy action to the end suggested, so that the adjustment of these grants may proceed without the interposition of a bar, through lapse of time, against the right of recovery by the Government in proper cases.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 17, 1896.

KITCHEN OF HOUSE RESTAURANT.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The resolution appropriating $2,000 for the enlargement and improvement of the House restaurant and kitchen was read.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman who presented the resolution if that comes from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. HICKS. Yes, sir; I am requested to ask unanimous consent for its adoption.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, is not a report in writing required, under the rule?

The SPEAKER. The rule requires a report in writing.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to have that report.

Mr. HOWE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution, and if that is granted it obviates the necessity for submitting a report in writing.

Mr. SAYERS. I would rather have the report, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Union Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DINGLEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the title of the bill which is the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3537) making appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to report the bill by paragraphs, for the purpose of amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year 1897, in expending this appropriation, whenever a claim for pension under the act of June 27, 1890, has been or shall hereafter be rejected, suspended, or dismissed because of any defect or informality in the application, and a new application shall have been or shall hereafter be filed, and a pension has been or shall hereafter be allowed in such claim, such pension shall date from the time of filing the first application, provided the evidence in the case shall show the disability to have existed or to exist at the time of filing such first application, anything in any law or ruling of the Department to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I desire to suggest that the reading of the paragraph has not yet been concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the paragraph has been concluded.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I think the balance below belongs to that paragraph.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Undoubtedly the gentleman would like it to belong to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph ending with line 21 has been read.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the point of order against the next paragraph that it contravenes the provisions of paragraph 2, Rule XXI, because it is a provision changing existing law. This is an appropriation bill, and therefore it violates the rule of this House; and I raise the point of order on it.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. Before the point of order is made, I have an amendment to the section preceding.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's statement?

Mr. STEELE. I have an amendment I desire to offer, to come in at the end of the section which has been read, the paragraph commencing after line 8.

The CHAIRMAN. And ending line 21? That is the paragraph against which the point of order has been made.

Mr. STEELE. I understood the gentleman to say that it was the next paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That has not been read. The paragraph ending line 21 has been read, and the gentleman makes the point of order that it changes existing law. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized on the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The Chair has misunderstood the gentleman from New York. He makes no point of order upon the paragraph ending with line 21.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to make the point of order upon the paragraph that has just been read?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir; it is against the one which is just about to be read.

Mr. STEELE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer my amendment.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, the next portion of the bill belongs to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a distinct paragraph and a distinct proposition. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment to the paragraph ending line 21.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have understood that the time to object was when the paragraph was reached by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. After the reading of the paragraph has been completed is the time to make objection.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Very well, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment to come in at the end of the paragraph ending line 21, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That it shall be competent for the Commissioner of Pensions, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to establish such rules and regulations for the presentation and prosecution of pension claims as shall be necessary to facilitate the transaction of business: Provided, That all such rules and regulations shall be made public and shall conform to the laws of the United States and the laws and rules of evidence recognized by the courts of justice in the District of Columbia, and shall in no wise abridge the rights of claimants and attorneys as recognized in said courts: And provided further, That claimants and their attorneys duly appointed shall have access to all evidence, reports, letters, and papers which in any wise enter into consideration in the adjudication of such claims.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I raise the point of order against the amendment offered that it violates the provision of the second paragraph of Rule XXI in that it incorporates into this provision certain changes in existing law in a general appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana on the point of order.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It must be first decided whether the amendment is in order or not. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana on the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not, in my opinion, change existing law. It only provides that decent and just consideration shall be given to cases pending in the Pension Bureau. It provides against the secret intrigues now employed by that Department. It is intended to make it possible for claimants or for those who prosecute claims before that Bureau to know what evidence is filed against them. The Bureau, by a rule or practice of its own, not only writes to parties who gave sworn testimony four or five years ago, asking whether they told the truth at that time, but also assures them that whatever they may write now in reply to the inquiries of the Bureau shall be treated as confidential.

This amendment simply provides that whatever evidence is filed in any case must be subject to inspection by the claimants or their attorneys, so that they may know what they are called upon to combat. It requires the Pension Bureau to fix some rule of evidence such as is observed in the courts, and to adhere to it. If the present method is to be continued, and letters written in reply to secret inquiries made by the Department, the writers of those letters being assured that their statements will be treated as confidential, are to be taken as evidence against the sworn testimony of eight or ten good men, then of course there will be no possibility of successfully prosecuting any pension claim. Let me say in support of my position that notwithstanding the fact stated by the gentleman from New York yesterday that there are 500,000 pension claims pending, during the last year there were 2,020 fewer names added to the pension roll than were stricken from it. So far as the mention of the courts of the District of Columbia in the amendment is concerned, that is because the Pension Office is within this District, and the amendment provides that if after the rule of evidence, which it will be observed is to be fixed by the Department, shall be made public, then if the Department violates its own rules the claimant or his attorney shall have the right of appeal, as he now has. There is really nothing new in the amendment. Its purpose is to require the Bureau to fix the rule of evidence and to place the evidence which it obtains on file, and not to allow every man in the Bureau to be a lawyer unto himself.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] if he would not be satisfied to strike out the closing paragraph of his amendment?

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, if I can not get all that I desire, I would like to get as much as I can, and therefore I am willing to conform to the suggestion of the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana modify his amendment?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir; I accept the suggestion of the chairman of the committee [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I suggest that the gentleman modify the amendment by striking out all after the word "courts," and I ask that the Clerk read the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That it shall be competent for the Commissioner of Pensions, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to establish such rules and regulations for the presentation and prosecution of pension claims as shall be necessary to facilitate the transaction of business: Provided, That all such rules and regulations shall be made public and shall conform to the laws of the United States and the laws and rules of evidence recognized by the courts of justice of the District of Columbia, and shall in no wise abridge the rights of claimants and attorneys as recognized in said courts.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I raise a point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have not concluded what I desire to say, Mr. Chairman. In response to the point of order made by the gentleman from New York, I simply wish to call attention to the fact that the amendment as modified does not change any existing law. The Commissioner of Pensions has already the right to formulate rules for practice in the prosecution of pensions, and he has done so and has made them public, and they do not interfere with the laws of the land in any respect. Therefore, the amendment as now modified does not, I repeat, change any existing law.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the use of it, then?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I claim the right to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, we are either a parliamentary body or we are not, and if we be a parliamentary body it is to be presumed that when certain rules were adopted at the beginning of this session, reported here by the Committee on Rules, consisting of five of the ablest members of the House, three from the dominant party and two from my party, those rules were made to be respected. It was stated the other day by the distinguished Republican gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] that he was in favor of the provision in the rules of the Fifty-first Congress, "nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto," because he believed that it was in the interest of good government and of good, fair, and honest legislation that a change of existing law should not be incorporated in an appropriation bill with the view of coercing either the Senate of the United States or the Chief Executive and obliging the Executive to sign a general appropriation bill containing a change——

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know if the gentleman is discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that I am confining myself to the point of order. The Chair will recollect——

Mr. STEELE. I should like to know what the point of order is.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is that the pending amendment changes existing law.

Mr. STEELE. Now, I should like to know what existing law this amendment proposes to change.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I object to such interruptions when I am discussing——

Mr. STEELE. I have the right to know what law the gentleman claims that this amendment violates.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] has the floor on the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to know what law the amendment contravenes.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask that the gentleman take his seat.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is on the floor.

Mr. STEELE. Have I not the right to know what law it is claimed the amendment changes?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Indiana to make the inquiry?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir; I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, these unseemly interruptions during the discussion of a question of law are singularly inappropriate. I have confined myself to the discussion of the point of order and shall do so. When one of the leaders of the Republican party, a member of the Committee on Rules, gives certain reasons for the adoption of the salutary rule which I now invoke, it seems to me I confine myself quite well within the bounds of proper discussion if I refer to what was stated by that gentleman, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania. I believe that the leaders of the Republican party in this House are in favor of the proper construction of this rule.

So we come to this question: Are changes of existing law to be tolerated under some plausible or specious excuse? I claim that it appears on the very face of this amendment or substitute as agreed to in the conference just heard on this floor between the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] and the gentleman from some other State—it appears on the very face of this substitute that it provides in the first place that—

It shall be competent for the Commissioner of Pensions, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior—to establish such rules and regulations for the presentation and prosecution of pension claims as shall be necessary to facilitate the transaction of business.

To do what?—

If this amendment or substitute stopped at the last word just read by me, it would undoubtedly be not subject to the point of order, because up to that point the provision gives or tends to give to the Commissioner of Pensions the power which he already possesses. But the sting of the amendment lies in what follows. The change of existing law lies in this proviso:

That all such rules and regulations shall be made public and shall conform to the laws of the United States and the laws and rules of evidence recognized by the courts of justice in the District of Columbia, and shall in no wise abridge the rights of claimants and attorneys as recognized in said courts.

What a broad, what a monstrous proposition—that is, that the rulings of the courts of the District of Columbia as to pension attorneys and as to the rights of claimants shall control this whole great Department of the Federal Government. The rule now enforced by the Commissioner of Pensions is that the law of evidence of the State in which the particular claimant resides is the law of evidence applicable to the case; in other words, that in reference to marriage the lex loci contractus, or the law of the place where the ceremony was performed, shall govern. Now, is it to be maintained that the law of marriage in the District of Columbia—the Edmunds law, if you please—is to govern marriages contracted outside of this District? The manifest impropriety of such a change of law is too apparent to need discussion.

The only question for the Chair is, is this or is it not a change of existing law? Now, the present occupant of the chair is too good a parliamentarian not to see at a glance that the proposition embraced in the amendment is intended to change the law as it exists to-day, and as it is enforced to-day by the Commissioner of Pensions. So I ask, sir, that the point of order be sustained.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] on the point of order, particularly on the point whether the proposed amendment is a change of the existing law. That is all there is involved.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that there is any other point made. The amendment which it is proposed to insert after line 21, on page 2, provides simply, as I understand—

That it shall be competent for the Commissioner of Pensions, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to establish such rules and regulations for the presentation and prosecution of pension claims as shall be necessary to facilitate the transaction of business.

As to that part of the amendment there can be no question that it does not change existing law, because under the authority contained in various acts of Congress establishing the Pension Bureau the Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, has from time to time adopted rules and regulations. I hold in my hand a book in which those rules and regulations have been collected and set forth for public distribution and use. Then the amendment continues—

Provided, That all such rules and regulations shall be made public and shall conform to the laws of the United States.

Certainly an amendment which directs that the rules and regulations adopted by the Commissioner of Pensions shall conform to the laws of the United States does not change existing law. It directly reaffirms the existing law by providing that these rules and regulations shall conform to that law, "the rules of evidence recognized by courts of justice in the District of Columbia."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is new.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I think the gentleman from Indiana perhaps would not insist upon that part of it. Would the gentleman from Indiana insist on that?

Mr. STEELE. I am going to insist on everything that I can secure that will make the practice better than it is now.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But if the gentleman would strike out all after the word "States" it will relieve the amendment from the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. I will say to the gentleman that the power of appeal now rests in the United States district courts.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes; but it confines the Commissioner of Pensions to the rules of evidence in the district court of the District of Columbia, and these rules go back to the old law of Maryland.

Mr. STEELE. This relates to the practice in the United States district court for the District of Columbia.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They are under the same rules.

Mr. STEELE. In order to relieve the amendment from the objection, I will strike that out. My object is the transaction of business, and to provide for the prosecution of pension claims before the office.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then I confine my remarks to the amendment as modified.

There is nothing now left in the amendment except that the Commissioner of Pensions shall establish rules and regulations, and shall make them public, and that they shall conform to the laws of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana modify his amendment?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The modified amendment will be read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That it shall be competent for the Commissioner of Pensions under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to establish such rules and regulations for the presentation and prosecution of pension claims as shall be necessary to facilitate the transaction of business: Provided, That all such rules and regulations shall be made public and shall conform to the laws of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he understands that to be new legislation?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not think so.

Mr. CANNON. Is that the law now?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It is.

Mr. CANNON. Then, what is the good of it?

Mr. PICKLER. That is what I would like to know.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Everything in it that was new has been knocked out.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order against the modified amendment?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I make the point of order against the modified amendment or new bantling in this present form.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I make the point of order that it is in contravention of the same provision of the twenty-first rule, second paragraph, which provides that no provision changing existing law shall be in order on a general appropriation bill.

As has been well said by one of the leaders of the House, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], if this be no change of existing law, why insert it in a general appropriation bill? It is because there lurks underneath it some insidious purpose or provision to change existing law by the insertion of the amendment. It gives what? It gives the Commissioner of Pensions power to make certain rules and regulations, limiting the power to make rules and regulations to only such as will facilitate the transaction of business; but it does not say to make any rules or regulations which will tend to prevent fraud, or which tend to prevent collusion. It is the insidious design to take from the Commissioner of Pensions that general power to make rules and regulations that the proper administration of his Department—the power which has been reposed in him ever since the year 1833—requires.

Then there is another provision that no rule or regulation can be made by the Commissioner of Pensions which shall not be made public. It shows that there must be some intention or design to take advantage of some rule or regulation properly made, but against which it might be alleged that sufficient publicity had not been given.

So I submit that this provision is a change of existing law, and therefore that it should not and can not be incorporated upon a general appropriation bill in the face of the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman think that the law which now authorizes the Commissioner of Pensions to make rules and regulations for the transaction of business in his office is not substantially the same as this proposition; and that the general design is to facilitate business, notwithstanding such rules and regulations may cover the prevention of fraud?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. In answer to the Chairman's interrogatory, I will say this: That if this simply gave the Commissioner of Pensions power to establish such rules and regulations for the presentation and determination of pension claims, I should be satisfied. But it goes further. It is to make rules and regulations for the presentation and prosecution of claims, such rules as shall be necessary to facilitate business, and which might be construed to limit the power now existing in the Commissioner of Pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman think it would impose a limitation if it should become a law?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. That is my opinion.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I should like to ask the gentleman who offered this amendment a question. The amendment directs the establishment of such rules and regulations for the presentation and prosecution of pension claims as shall be necessary to facilitate the transaction of business, provided that such rules and regulations shall be made public and shall conform to the laws of the United States. Does the gentleman mean that all rules pertaining to the introduction of evidence in the prosecution of claims shall conform to the laws of the United States? If so, suppose the laws of the United States forbid ex parte affidavits or evidence. How are you going to prove a claim? Do you not see there may be danger here?

Mr. MAHON. A claimant would never get a pension through.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I am afraid a claimant would never get his pension through.

Mr. MAHON. Or if he did, it would cost ten times as much as it does now.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I submit that it would mean that the introduction of evidence should conform to the laws of the United States, and if the laws of the United States do not permit ex parte evidence, then how would you ever get your pension claim through?

Mr. STEELE. I do not think it has that effect at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] anything further to say on the point of order?

Mr. STEELE. No; I think not. I think the Chair is thoroughly advised, and that this does not change existing law at all. The intention of the amendment is that some rules of practice shall be laid down by which claimants can be guided.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I suppose we might as well have a ruling, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DINGLEY). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair has examined the proposed amendment, and it appears that one provision of it will work not only as a change of existing law, but will work somewhat disastrously to applicants for pensions, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask consideration of the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask gentlemen who have amendments if they would wait. I ask unanimous consent that we pass to the next portion of the bill which is reported by the committee, and pass upon that before any of these individual amendments are offered.

Mr. HERMANN. I have no objection as to the others which shall follow this amendment of mine.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I know the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] desires to raise a point of order on the next paragraph.

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to leave the Hall of the House in a few moments, and should like to have this amendment considered for that reason.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] offer his amendment to the parapraph under consideration?

Mr. HERMANN. I do, and desire to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] offers an amendment to the paragraph, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend after the word "notwithstanding," on line 21, page 2:

"Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, upon application therefor, the names of the surviving honorably discharged officers and enlisted men of the military and naval services of the United States who actually served ninety days, or more, subsequent to the 4th day of March, 1861, and prior to the 20th day of August, 1866.

"SEC. 2. That pensions under section 1 of this act shall be at the rate per month of 1 cent for each day's service rendered, and payable only from and after the approval of this act, for and during the natural lives of the persons entitled thereto: Provided, however, That in each and every case where the services so rendered was less than eight hundred days, the pension shall be at the rate herein established for a service of eight hundred days, to wit, $8: Provided further, That all invalid pensioners now on the pension roll, or who may hereafter be placed on the pension roll by reason of a disability or disabilities which originated in the line of duty in the military or naval service of the United States since the 4th day of March, 1861, shall be entitled to receive such increase of pension as may be found due them under this act.

"SEC. 3. That all honorably discharged invalid pensioners who rendered service specified in section 1 of this act and who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Pension Bureau or before Congress, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act; and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent any pensioner thereunder from prosecuting his claim and receiving his pension under any other general or special act, at his election, at any time.

"SEC. 4. That rank in the service of any officer or enlisted man shall not be considered in applications under this act.

"SEC. 5. That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed so far as the same relates to this act or to pensions under this act: Provided, That this act shall not apply to those persons under the political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States: Provided further, That the benefits of this act shall not be extended to any person who did not serve ninety days, or more, in the military or naval service of the United States between the 4th day of March, 1861, and the 20th day of August, 1866, and who did not receive an honorable discharge for such service.

"SEC. 6. That all laws or parts of laws which conflict with the provisions of this act shall be and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against this amendment that it contravenes Rule XXI, in that it incorporates a change of existing law.

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to be heard for one moment. I desire to express my profound surprise that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] should have seen fit at this stage to offer the objection which he offers, or to make the point of order. I am especially surprised, since he has shown himself in these debates to be so true and loyal a friend of the old soldiers of the Union——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be directed to confine his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. HERMANN. I shall now confine myself to the point of order. [Laughter.]

The Chair will observe upon a reading of the bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations that two very liberal amendments have been incorporated for the purpose of protecting the just and equitable rights of the old soldiers of the Union. The first is as to the allowance of a pension for the time intervening between the first and second or third application, the pension to commence from the first application.

Another amendment, very liberal in its character, is that which refers to widows' pensions, and which defines what shall be the net income of a widow. Beyond this, we find nothing of relief for the old pensioners of the Union; and it occurred to me that it would have been but generous on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, when they saw fit to amend the law so liberally as they have, to have gone still further.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I object, Mr. Chairman. I ask that the gentleman be confined to the discussion of the point of order.

Mr. HERMANN. I think they should have made this just amendment to the pension laws.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. And not engage in violations of the English language.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. HERMANN. Now I shall particularly confine myself to the point of order. [Laughter.]

This is generally known, Mr. Chairman, to the old soldiers as the per diem service pension proposition; a proposition which met the unanimous approval of the Grand Army posts throughout this country, and as to which there is not a surviving old soldier of the Union who would have any objection. It has also met public approval; and therefore it occurs to me that the gentleman from New York could now very graciously afford to withdraw the point of order and permit this to be incorporated as a part of the laws of the land, for it really meets the approval of everybody but the gentleman from New York himself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the point of order, it will be apparent to the Chair, who is one of the best parliamentarians in the United States, and I will not occupy the time of the House further by a lengthy argument as to whether the point should be sustained or not, but will submit it to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MAHON. I offer an amendment, which I would like to have read and have it pending; but I will not discuss it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That any pension heretofore or that may hereafter be granted or allowed under any law of the United States authorizing the granting and payment of pensions shall be considered a vested right, and shall be so treated by all the courts and officers of the United States.

That no pension, once allowed or granted, shall be withheld, suspended, diminished, or annulled unless the same was obtained by fraud, accident, or mistake. Where a pension has been allowed by accident or mistake, the same may be suspended until the case is investigated and a decision thereon had. In every case where fraud is alleged the person or officer of the United States making the charge of fraud shall file his or her statement, setting forth fully all the facts in the case, said statement or charge to be sworn to by the person or officer making the same. When said statement is filed in the Pension

Department the Commissioner may then suspend, and not before, the payment of the pension until said charge is proven or dismissed. Within thirty days from the time of filing said notice with the Commissioner of Pensions, notice of not less than thirty days shall be given to the pensioner, together with a full and complete statement of all allegations of fraud against his or her pension, and of the time and place a hearing will be had in the case. The pensioner or his duly authorized attorney, or both, shall have the right to be present at said hearing and to cross-examine all witnesses produced by the Government. The pensioner or his attorney shall have the right to produce witnesses in denial of the charge.

The hearing to be held by an examiner appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions. The hearing to be held and testimony taken at the county seat of the county wherein the pensioner lives, and if said pensioner lives within the District of Columbia the hearing to be held and testimony taken in the city of Washington. All evidence offered by either side, as well as the cross-examination, shall be reduced to writing by the examiner, and the same, with his finding of facts, shall be filed with the Commissioner of Pensions within thirty days from the time the taking of the evidence has been closed. The pensioner or his attorney shall be permitted to examine all the papers in the case.

If the charge of fraud is sustained, then said pension shall be annulled and vacated. If the charge is dismissed, the suspension shall be removed and payment of pension be made from date of last payment. The right of appeal to remain as now allowed by the Pension and Interior Departments.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against the provision offered that it contravenes Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the proposed amendment changes existing law, and is therefore in contravention to Rule XXI.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask that it be passed over. I was going to ask unanimous consent that we pass over this offered amendment until the next paragraph, and that permission be given to return to it. I think the gentleman will consent to that.

Mr. MAHON. I agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the pending paragraph be passed over, with permission to return to it after the succeeding paragraph shall have been completed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the next paragraph be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year 1897, in expending this appropriation, it shall not be necessary for a widow, in establishing her claim to a pension under the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, to prove that she is without other means of support than her daily labor: Provided, That before she shall be entitled to a pension under the provisions of said law she shall prove that her net income does not exceed $500 per annum.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that that provision in a general appropriation bill, just read, contravenes Rule XXI, and is therefore improperly inserted in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order against the paragraph which has just been read that it changes existing law, and is therefore in contravention of Rule XXI. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes, sir; I would like to be heard for a moment.

Mr. Chairman, I have argued this question of pension legislation to a considerable extent within the last week, and do not care to discuss the general question of pension legislation to any further extent; but I shall address myself entirely to the question of law—that is, is this provision a change of existing law or not? If it be a change of existing law, then it is out of order and must be stricken from the bill. Now, what is the test under existing law? The test under the dependent pension act, so called, of June 27, 1890, is the dependence of the widow upon her daily labor for support; and this amendment shows on its face that it proposes to change that existing provision of law, because it says that during this year it shall not be necessary for the widow to do what? To prove that she is without other means of support than her daily labor. Now, it is conceded on both sides of the House that in the statute as it stands to-day, without this general appropriation bill in aid of its interpretation, the widow must, as a condition precedent, show that she is dependent for her support on her daily labor. Then the next provision clearly sustains my position. The provision is that before she shall be entitled to a pension she must prove one thing—not that she is dependent upon her daily labor for support, but that her net income does not exceed $500. Now, that needs no argument. It is manifest that a large class of widows who are comparatively affluent would be admitted to the pension rolls under this new provision of law.

I do not know whether the Chairman heard my argument in the course of one of my previous speeches as to the proper construction of the words "net income." No one can say exactly what is the meaning of that expression, and probably it is because of that doubt that those words were used by the gentleman who drew up this amendment. But if we turn back to the tariff act of August 28, 1894, if we turn for guidance as to the true meaning of the words "net income" to the last provision of statutory law passed by the Congress of the United States, we find that before the net income can be determined there must be deducted from the gross income three different classes of disbursements: First, the expenses of carrying on the business, occupation, or profession of the person—in this instance of the widow; second, the taxes paid on all realty and personalty, and in the third place, the interest on existing indebtedness. As an illustration, I may state that when I made out my income-tax return I felt conscientiously compelled to deduct many thousand dollars from my gross income before I reached that which was subject to the tax. So, Mr. Chairman, I submit that on the face of this amendment it clearly appears that it contravenes Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I do not concede that this provision in the bill changes existing law. The law as it now is provides "that if any officer or enlisted man who served ninety days or more in the Army or Navy of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and was honorably discharged, has died or hereafter dies, leaving a widow without other means of support than her daily labor," and so on. This amendment provides that during the fiscal year 1896–97, in expending this appropriation, it shall not be necessary for a widow, in establishing her claim to a pension under the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, to prove that she is without other means of support than her daily labor. The second part of the paragraph, as reported in the bill, is, of course, a limitation on the first; so that if the first part of the paragraph is to remain in the bill the point of order against the second part falls. Therefore I shall not address my remarks at all to the point of order raised against the second paragraph.

I find that this provision in our rules to which the gentleman refers has been for some time a part of the rules of the House of Representatives, the only change being that the proviso in the old rule with reference to reducing expenditures is left out, and we now have the bare, bald provision, "nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto."

The simple question here is: Does this bill, as reported by the committee in this particular paragraph, change existing law?

The provision of existing law which I have read speaks of a widow "without other means of support than her daily labor." The proviso in the bill is that a widow seeking a pension shall not be required during the current fiscal year to prove that she has no other means of support than her daily labor. This proviso does not repeal or change the existing law, but simply provides that during this fiscal year while the expenditure of this money is going on the widow seeking a pension need not make proof that she has no other means of support than her daily labor. We come, then, to the first question: Is an act of Congress appropriating money and providing how that money shall be expended, which only limits the operation of a provision of a law on the statute book during the period for which the money is appropriated—is that necessarily a change of existing law? I hold that it is not. It is, at the most, only a suspension of the law for a brief period. It does not change the law; it does not repeal it; it simply provides that for a brief, well-defined period the law shall be suspended. Now, I do not wish to take much time upon that point, because I desire to read some authorities and precedents to the Chair; but, technically speaking, I say that legislation which for a brief space of time merely suspends an existing law does not necessarily change that law. I refer the Chair to that period which followed 1873 when nearly every State in this Union by its legislative action enlarged the exemption or suspended the right of execution on real estate—suspended it for a definite period. As soon as that period expired the old law was in full force, and, in fact, it was in force all the time, except that, to use a rather vulgar expression, it was "bottled up" during that period. It was suspended, but it was not changed, repealed, or modified.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania any authority to sustain the position he has just taken, that an act suspending a law for a definite period is not, pro tanto, a change of the existing law for that period?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have no authority to sustain that particular proposition, but I have authorities which justify me in claiming that the paragraph in the bill is not a change of existing law in the proper sense of the word, and I will read them to the Chair.

Another proposition is that the language in a bill, which is simply directory during the period indicated, although it may lay down a different line of action from that which the existing law is understood to prescribe, is not necessarily a change of existing law. I call the attention of the Chair to the Digest of the Fifty-third Congress, page 268, and I read:

An amendment providing that no money appropriated in the pending bill shall be applied in a certain lawful way, namely, the transportation of troops on certain railroads, was held in order as being merely a limitation of expenditures, and, indeed, not a change of existing law.

Here was an existing law providing that money appropriated should be applied in a certain lawful way; and there was inserted in an appropriation bill a provision that it should not be applied in that lawful way. That was held not to be a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will pardon an inquiry of the Chair. Suppose that an amendment, instead of providing that no money appropriated in the pending bill should be applied in a certain lawful way, had said that the money appropriated in the bill might be expended in a certain way not now the law; would that be regarded as a limitation?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. In the case which I have just cited it was held that a proviso was in order which provided that the money should not be applied in a way provided for by existing law. That was the decision, as the Chair will observe.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of the inquiry is this: The act of June 27, 1890, provides that a widow without other means of support than her daily labor may be pensioned under certain circumstances. The provision now under consideration declares that she need not prove that she is without other means of support than her daily labor. It thus enlarges rather than limits the appropriation of money. In other words, it devotes the money appropriated in the bill to a purpose not now lawful, but which is to be made lawful by this provision. What does the gentleman say on that point?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The fact that the provision enlarges the appropriation does not affect the question under the present rule. The question is simply whether or not, technically speaking, the language does change existing law. Under the old rule a provision on an appropriation bill might change existing law if it cut down expenditures. The Chair will observe that we do not really suspend the existing law; we merely change the manner of getting the pension. We direct that for the period covered by this bill the widow need not prove that she has no means of support except her daily labor.

Now, in all these cases affecting the decision of points of order under this rule, there must be a technical construction in order to enforce the point; so I claim that a technical construction may and ought to be resorted to in order to sustain a liberal view of a proposition which may be submitted to the House. Technically speaking—and we have no right to treat the question in any other way—this provision does not change existing law.

Now, on page 273 of the Manual to which I have already referred, I read:

The Post-Office appropriation act for the current fiscal year containing an appropriation for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, a provision in the pending appropriation bill adding to the words quoted a designated route to which the appropriation should be applied was held not to be a change of law, but merely a limitation of the discretion of the Postmaster-General; also held that it was in order as being a continuation of a public object already in progress.

The proviso in this bill is a limitation, practically and technically speaking, on the discretion and rulings of the Commissioner of Pensions. It directs that during the coming fiscal year widows in prosecuting their claims for pensions need not prove that they have no other means of support than their daily labor.

On page 274 of the same edition of the Digest it is stated:

A provision in the Indian appropriation bill providing a mode of disposal of lands acquired under a proposed treaty authorized by the bill was held to be in order, although the proposed disposition was different from that applicable to lands already owned by the Government.

I ask the attention of the Chair also to the next paragraph:

An amendment declaratory of the effect of a provision of law and giving an interpretation different from that held by the Department charged with its execution was held not to be a change of law.

Now, if the Chair will pardon me for continuing the discussion further, I will conclude this recital of authorities by referring to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 80 (Forty-ninth Congress), pages 5986, 5987. In this case an amendment was offered to the sundry civil bill in these words:

Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes of large denominations in lieu of notes of a small denomination canceled or retired.

On that proposition offered as an amendment by Mr. Weaver of Iowa a point of order was raised by Mr. Randall; and the Chair held that the proposition was not a change of existing law, and therefore admitted the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is scarcely possible to bring in here a bill or to suggest an amendment that does not in some narrow sense change existing law. We may say that an appropriation bill itself changes existing law, because the law as it exists before the money is appropriated is certainly different from what it is after the appropriation is made. If a narrow, technical construction is to be adopted, it might be held that every paragraph and line of an appropriation bill changes existing law. Now, then, does this proviso change the existing law? The Chairman will observe that the act of Congress is peculiar in its language. It says:

Or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow without other means of support than her daily labor.

I call the attention of the Chair particularly to that language—

Without other means of support than her daily labor.

The Commissioner of Pensions has seen fit, on that language, to compel widows applying for pensions to prove, every one of them, that they were not property holders to the extent of even 5 cents. That woman who had an extra suit of clothes could not acquire a pension; one who had a cow, a sheep, a little lot, anything that contributed to her support, was excluded under that ruling, and in the case of a soldier's widow who lived with her husband, perhaps boarding at some hotel, she was compelled to go out and engage in service as a domestic to prove that she had no other means of support than her daily labor. It gives a chance for the Commissioner of Pensions to hold the rule most rigidly in the construction of that act of Congress. Now, what do we do? We put a different construction upon it. In other words, we direct that during this fiscal year—during the period of the expenditure of the money herein appropriated—the widow making an application for a pension need not prove that she has no other means of support excepting her daily labor. We do not attempt to repeal, to change, or modify. In appropriating this money, and in the expenditure of it, we say that the Commissioner of Pensions is directed that she should not be compelled to prove, in making her application, what the office has heretofore required.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. Suppose this proposition, instead of carrying the limitation, "for the ensuing fiscal year," had used the language that "hereafter" applications for pensions shall be considered in the manner he suggests. What would be the effect, in his judgment, of the use of the word "hereafter," instead of during the fiscal year 1897? In the one case you make a permanent law; and I ask if, in the judgment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that would have been obnoxious to the rule?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I think it would.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then, as I understand the analysis of the position held by the gentleman, it is that it is not obnoxious to the rule to change the existing law for a period of twelve months, but that the same proposition, in the form of a permanent law, would be obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Let me answer the gentleman from Missouri. Any attempt to change a law, to evade a law, or to evade a rule where the intention is obvious—that is, any attempt which in its execution would have that result or effect—would be undoubtedly a change of existing law.

I admit that; and that intent would be evidenced by the direction that "hereafter" and for all time to come the widow should not necessarily be compelled to prove in her application for a pension that she had no other means of support than her daily labor.

But it must be remembered that in this case we are not going beyond the limits of the money we appropriate. We appropriate a certain specific sum for a certain specific purpose that shall run for a certain specific period of time, and we have the right to limit it. We have the right to condition it. Why, the very fact that it is conceded that we have the right to appropriate for this purpose is a concession that we may limit the expenditure. If Congress has no power under the rule to stipulate how the money shall be expended which it appropriates, then we are at the mercy of an official, armed with discretion, who may decide this or that as he pleases. If we have the right to appropriate money for a specific purpose, we have also the right to say how that money shall be expended in the execution of that purpose. That is all we do here. We simply put a limitation upon the expenditure.

I do not understand, sir, that this question has been raised in any place so fully as in the last reference I read. It was then fully discussed, and the Chairman, in ruling upon it, took particular pains to give his reasons. He says:

The CHAIRMAN. In relation to the Civil Service Commission it was held it was not competent to place an amendment on the bill which compelled that Commission to change two of its rules. The present case has this for its basis: The law prescribes the Secretary of the Treasury may issue notes of various denominations, but does not advise the proportion of the denominations in which they shall be issued. Now, it is proposed by the amendment to say in issuing these notes the Secretary of the Treasury shall not issue large notes in lieu of small notes.

Mr. WEAVER of Iowa. No; it merely provides that no part of the appropriation shall be used to change the denomination of the bills.

The CHAIRMAN. Shall not issue in that proportion in payment. That he shall not issue larger notes in lieu of small notes. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is not well taken, and rules the amendment to be in order.

Now, if in appropriating this money we should say that these pensioners should be paid in any particular denomination of money, Treasury notes, greenbacks, or silver certificates, would there be any question of our right to do so? Would there be a question as to our power to determine in what manner the money shall be expended; and if the proposition here was how we should pay it, would it be a question subject to a point of order?

Is it possible we have nothing more or less to do than to appropriate money blindly, leaving the discretion entirely in the hands of the officer who disburses it? This is not an attempt to change existing law. We do not pretend to change existing law.

Mr. MILES. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. MILES. Does not this proposed amendment make a different test of title to the pension?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not at all.

Mr. MILES. The test of title in the one case, as I understand it, was the state or condition of being entirely without means of support other than daily labor. In this case the widow may have a pension although she may have $500 of income. Now, is not that an entirely different test of title to the pension?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, I think not. It depends on the construction of this act of Congress. It does not make any difference whether our bill changes the rule or differs with the construction put upon it by the Commissioner of Pensions. That has nothing to do with the case. The question is, does it change existing law? And we have got to look at the law to see what it is:

Widow without other means of support than her daily labor.

Mr. MILES. That is one test.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is the law.

Mr. MILES. Do you not propose another test in lieu of that, to wit, that she shall not have over $500 income?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No; we say that during the expenditure of this money she need not do what the Commissioner of Pensions has heretofore required her to do, namely, to prove that she is a pauper.

Mr. MILES. If the gentleman will allow me, then, it is a change of test during the expenditure of this appropriation, is it?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No; we say that the Commissioner of Pensions has always erred in the construction of this law; that he had no business to require that a widow should prove herself to be a pauper in order to get a pension.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Your contention is that this is only construction.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This is only construction. It only declares how Congress has defined existing law. It does not change it, or modify it, or suspend it, or anything of the kind:

Widow without other means of support than her daily labor.

If that was to be technically construed, if the Chairman believes that the construction which the Commissioner of Pensions has put upon that phrase is correct, then I undertake to say that it is utterly impossible for any widow on earth to get a pension, technically speaking:

Other means of support than her daily labor.

She might be paralyzed, utterly incapable of performing daily labor. That is not the test, and the Commissioner of Pensions in construing that law has erred, and we propose to construe it in this bill, that is all; and although our construction will differ with the construction of the Commissioner of Pensions, that does not make it a change of existing law; unless the Chairman thinks that it changes existing law—that is, that it is different from the act of Congress, and not a change from the construction put upon it by the Commissioner of Pensions, and that we undertake to say that this law is repealed, modified, or changed. That would be different. That we would be estopped from doing, but we do not. We say that for this period, in expending this money, the widow need not prove what the Commissioner of Pensions has heretofore required her to prove.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, the question before the committee is not, as I understand it, whether existing law is right or wrong—is not whether the proposed legislation is right or wrong. The distinct question is, does the proposed amendment violate the rule by the incorporation of new legislation? That is the precise question, as I understand it. Now, I do not quite agree with my friend who has just concluded his remarks [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], for it seems to me that he has taken altogether a too narrow view of the existing law. He has narrowed it down to too limited a compass. It means more than he gives to it, and I do not agree with his answer to my friend from Missouri, that if the word "hereafter" had been inserted in the clause which reads "during the expenditure of this appropriation" it would have been any change in existing law.

To determine whether this be a change in existing law, it becomes necessary for the committee to construe the existing law. No man can say that it has been changed unless he can say precisely what it is now, and that it would be different as proposed by this legislation.

The existing law is:

That if any officer or enlisted man who served ninety days or more in the Army or Navy of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who was honorably discharged, has died, or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow without other means of support than her daily labor.

What is the purport of that language? It is nothing more or less, Mr. Chairman, I insist, than a mere description of the widow. He must leave a widow who is without means of support other than her daily labor.

Now, then, a widow, when the soldier died, may have had no other means of support; she may have had no other income; she may have her hands and been able to labor and earn a livelihood. During some years she may have been able to accumulate a fund, and at the end of one year of her labor she may have laid aside $50, and placed it in the savings bank. At the end of another year she may have laid aside another $50, and thus placed $100 in the savings bank; and at the end of ten years she may have $3,000 on deposit in the savings bank. Does that cut her off from her pension? Not at all. We must read the whole act together in order to see what is meant by the language. It says: "Leaving a widow without other means of support than her daily labor;" then, after speaking of minor children, says, "she," the widow, "shall be placed on the pension roll of the date of the application thereof under this act at the rate of $8 per month during her widowhood." So that the very law itself contemplates that if, after the death of the husband, that particular condition this widow is left in, namely, without means of support—if all that is changed in the future and she become a millionaire, it does not defeat her right to a pension. The whole thing dates from the death of the husband. If at this moment she is without means of support she is a pensioner, and once on the roll she is there during her widowhood, no matter what subsequent change of circumstances may occur in her behalf.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, that being so, the Pension Office and this committee are called upon to construe that language, "without other means of support." What does it mean? Why, my friend, the chairman of the subcommittee is in error when he says the Pension Office has given it the construction of nothing more than daily labor. As I understand the ruling of the Pension Office, and as I was told by the Commissioner of Pensions, by their regulations they allow a pension in all cases where a widow has some small fund other than that earned by her daily labor, provided that that fund is not as great as the pension itself would be. So that the Pension Office in the construction of this language, "without other means of support," has given it a meaning.

Now, what is proposed by this legislation? Is it to change that law in the least? Not at all. Mr. Chairman, you would not hold that a mere construction of the clause of a statute, giving its true construction, was any change of that law. The law is what its language implies when properly construed, and not what A, B, or C might say it means. But what does it mean when properly construed? Now, the Pension Office, and we in legislation here, must construe that language, "other means of support." That is precisely what this committee has undertaken to do. They have said that you may incorporate what the gentleman from Missouri interpolated, "hereafter," if you please. "Hereafter," a widow in establishing her claim for a pension under the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, shall not be obliged to prove that she has no other means of support than her daily labor. She may have an income of a dollar a month from some other source, and still not have means of support, means sufficient for support outside of her daily labor. She may have that. This is to prevent any possible mistake as to the meaning of that language. The bill goes forward and says that it shall be an inexorable law that in the construction of this statute what we mean by "other means of support" is that it shall not exceed $500 net income.

Now, this statute does not mean that it applies simply to those widows who go out and scrub doorsteps and minister at the sick bed or anything of that kind. The expression, "daily labor," does not have that narrow construction. It means support other than what she can earn; and whether she can earn more than enough for her daily support, that does not deprive her of a pension if she has less than a support. Her daily labor may bring in an income of $150 and her support may require $200 a year, and if she has $50 from some other source she is within the language of this statute.

So that it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly plain. When you read the original statute itself you can see what the meaning of this language in this proposition of the committee is. It is simply the language as we construe it. It does not mean that it shall be the same construction that has been given to it at the Pension Office; but we mean by this language that the limit as to what "means of support" is shall be $500, and in that you add more certainty to the law. You make certain that which is now in a state of uncertainty; you define that which has never heretofore been defined. You do not change anything; you simply give to the original language its very palpable, legal, and common-sense meaning. [Loud applause.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. I quite agree with the able gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS]. In some remarks which I made the other day upon this bill—the present Chairman of this Committee of the Whole was by my side and may remember it—I, in a less direct and less explicit manner, called attention to the fact that I thought the law was all right, but that it was the construction of the law that was wrong. We must not forget, in passing upon this matter, that we may be passing upon the law as construed by the Commissioner of Pensions and not upon the law itself. I took occasion to say the other day, and I repeat it now, that the Commissioner has, in an arbitrary manner, interpreted the words "other means of support" in the act of 1890 to mean $96 a year. That is, he holds that if a widow is in receipt of an income of $96 a year she has other means of support. I called attention then, as I do now, to the fact that that is a misconstruction of the law. The law in speaking of "other means of support" intended such support as was necessary for the widow's proper personal care and sustenance. Why the Commissioner should limit the amount to $96 a year I know not. He had just the same power under the law to limit it to $500 a year, and if he had fixed that amount, he would have come much nearer to carrying out the spirit of the law than he has in fixing it at $96. Now Congress steps in, by the proviso in this bill, and says to the Commissioner: "You shall not limit the amount to $96 a year, but if you undertake to fix any limit it shall be a reasonable one"; in other words, we say that the law of 1890, in using the words "means of support," contemplates a reasonable sum, and that the Commissioner has construed it to mean an unreasonable sum. I claim, therefore, that this provision in the pending bill does not change existing law, but simply interprets the law, construes the law, because the Commissioner has undertaken to misconstrue it. This provision gives a correct interpretation to the terms of the law of 1890, where the Commissioner has given an incorrect interpretation. So, I say, this provision does not change existing legislation, but simply places our construction upon our own language, "other means of support," and says that it shall mean $500 a year, instead of $96 a year, the limit incorrectly fixed by the Commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending appropriation bill has in it a provision which declares that a widow whose net income does not exceed $500 a year shall be held to be entitled to a pension under the act of 1890. Does the gentleman from Ohio think that this would be a change of the law as it actually exists on the statute book?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I think it is not a change of the terms of the law. I think it is simply giving an interpretation to the language of the act of 1890—"other means of support." In other words, it interprets that language for the Commissioner and tells him as to the amount that if any limit is to be fixed it shall be understood as meaning at least $500 under the terms of the existing law. The Commissioner has misinterpreted the words "other means of support" in that law and we interpret them correctly for him.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not new legislation?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it then?

Mr. NORTHWAY. It is an interpretation of the existing law. Suppose the Commissioner of Pensions had established a rule that a widow who was in receipt of an income of $500 a year should not be entitled to a pension, I think he would have had just as much right to do that under the existing law as he had to say that a widow who is in receipt of an income of $96 a year shall not be entitled to a pension, and inasmuch as he has placed the construction upon the law of 1890 that a widow who is in receipt of an income of $96 a year shall not have a pension, we step in by this provision in the pending bill, and say that that is not correct, that the Commissioner has misinterpreted the words in the act of 1890, "without other means of support," and that if any limit is to be fixed it shall be $500. I think we have just as much right to place our construction upon the act of 1890 as he has to place his construction upon it, and I hold that neither construction would be violative of the terms of the act. Therefore I hold that this is not a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The act of 1890, describing widows who shall be entitled to pensions, speaks of "a widow without other means of support than her daily labor." Now, the pending paragraph provides that it shall not be necessary for a widow, in establishing her claim to a pension under the act of 1890, to prove that she is without other means of support than her daily labor. Would not this provision repeal the words in the act of 1890 which the Chair has cited?

Mr. NORTHWAY. This provision in the pending bill simply takes from the Commissioner of Pensions that which he has arrogated to himself—the right to declare that that language in the act of 1890 means that a widow who is in receipt of an income of $96 a year shall not be entitled to a pension, and tells him that the law means that the widow who is in receipt of an annual income of not less than $500 shall not be entitled to a pension. It goes wholly to the question of proof, and not to the right to a pension. It simply takes from the language of the act of 1890 the construction which the Commissioner gives it, and places upon that language the construction which we say it ought to bear, not because the terms of the law are limited, but because they are liable to a construction. "Means of support." The Commissioner says that these words in the act of 1890 mean $96 a year; we say that he shall not construe them to mean anything less than $500 a year. This provision in the pending bill is not a change of law, but is simply a construction of the words "means of support," and it provides that a widow applying for a pension shall not be called upon to prove anything relative to her means of support so long as her income is under $500 a year.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to be heard, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, if the rules of the House are invoked by any gentleman on the floor they should be maintained in their integrity, and this committee ought not to attempt under the guise of "construction" to pass upon or change our rules. I am not authorized to speak for the distinguished gentleman [Mr. DINGLEY] who occupies the chair; but I believe he is in thorough and hearty sympathy with the pending proposition. Believing the Chairman to be in sympathy with the proposition, but necessarily putting a different construction upon Rule XXI from that given it by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Vermont, I do not think, therefore, the Chair ought to be embarrassed by insisting upon what would at best be a very doubtful decision.

The existing law clearly requires that the soldier's widow applying for a pension shall be without other means of support than her "daily labor." This provision changes the existing law. The gentleman from Vermont says that the provision is merely a "construction" of the existing law; but how can Congress construe a law except by the enactment of law? In order to effect a construction you must enact a law differing from the one already on the statute book.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Do the words "without other means of support" mean anything outside of daily labor?

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, that is a matter for construction by the administrative department.

Mr. NORTHWAY. No; but have not we——

Mr. DOCKERY. If we hold a different view from that adopted by the administrative officer who construes the law, we can only make effective our construction by the enactment of a law. There can be no other way for Congress to construe an existing statute.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Is it necessary to enact a new law where the Commissioner is giving a wrong construction of the existing law? May we not wipe out that wrong construction without changing the existing law?

Mr. DOCKERY. I frankly confess that I am utterly unable to understand how Congress can put any sort of "construction" upon an existing statute different from the one prevailing in the executive department except by the enactment of a law; that is a measure which must pass the House and the Senate and be approved by the Executive. That is the only way in which we can make our construction of the law effective.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the appeal on this occasion should be addressed to the Chairman of this Committee of the Whole, because in my judgment he has already intimated the proper construction—that is, that this proposition does not operate to change the existing law. I think our appeal should be addressed to my good friend from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], and I desire his attention. I appeal to him now, in view of the fact that the widows of soldiers of all the other wars are, as I understand, allowed $12 a month under existing statutes (if I am not correct in that statement I should like to be corrected); in view of that fact, I appeal to the gentleman from New York, out of the abundance of his generosity, to withdraw the point of order and allow a vote upon the proposition, especially as this proposition comes to the House supported by substantially the unanimous vote of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I think the position taken by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] is impregnable and unassailable. This is not new legislation. Here is a statute passed by Congress which has received a construction by a ruling of the Pension Office. We come here now and propose to say that that construction is not a proper construction. We do not undertake to change the law; and I call the attention of the gentleman from New York, who makes the point of order, to this proposition: It is entirely competent for the legislative branch of the Government to declare the true intent and meaning of an existing statute. Statutes are sometimes confused in their provisions; they are sometimes drawn in such a way that even the courts of last resort differ in construing their meaning.

Legislative intent can be inferred from the incidents of the legislation. Legislative intent is always competent to construe a statute. Legislative intent can never be invoked to construe a constitutional provision. But in the construction of the purpose of a statute, legislative intent can always be inferred from the surrounding circumstances of the legislation itself. Thus the title of an act not infrequently can be considered in giving construction to the act where the language of the enactment itself is confused or uncertain. Thus the title of an act declares it to be an act "to do so and so;" but it is found in the body of the statute that the person who drafted it has not made the purpose clear. In such a case, according to one of the rules of construction, it is competent to ascertain the meaning from what the title of the act declares. It is also competent to look to the surrounding circumstances. You may look to the debate which took place in the legislative body at the time the act was passed. You may ascertain what was understood at the time to be its purport. This may always be done with reference to legislation; never in constitutional construction, and never to override the plain words of a statute—only in cases of doubt.

Now, then, what is the meaning of the words "without means of support"? Suppose we had simply said in this amendment, "It is the true intent and meaning of the statute of 1890 to provide" so and so. Will my friend from New York, who is a technical lawyer at all events, say that that would be new legislation? I deny it. It is a declaration on the part of the legislative body that the original statute was intended to be thus and so. That is competent; that is binding. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the proposition I make as a matter of law: A legislative declaration of the intent and purpose of a statute carries back the rights under the statute to its original passage. Here is a doubtful statute; rights are sought to be enforced under it; the legislature makes a declaration of the true meaning and intent of the statute; and that declaration reacts upon the statute back to its original passage.

Does this do anything more than that? Is this anything beyond that? Is not this a mere declaration in fact as to what was the true intent and meaning of the statute of 1890? I submit that the Chair will look to the position in which this question presents itself, and will also look back to the conditions that surround the question to ascertain what is the operation and effect of this amendment upon the statute of 1890.

There is another proposition which I desire to press upon the attention of the Chair. This now becomes a declaration of a rule of evidence. I have not entered into these criticisms of the Pension Office and the general execution of the statutes, nor shall I do so at this time. I shall have something to say upon the question when the general legislation from the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall come up. I have not been indifferent to these great questions which have been so ably argued here upon this floor, but I have deemed it better, so far as action in my legislative capacity is concerned to wait until there is no question of the competency of the legislation proposed.

Upon this question, Mr. Chairman, I present this view: What is the rule in the Pension Office now? It is after all but a rule of evidence. The office says, in construing that statute of 1890, that the rule of evidence shall mean that the widow shall show, by satisfactory proof, that the maximum limit of her means of support, outside of the Pension Office, was $96 per annum; and this is a rule of evidence by construction of that statute. That is all there is of it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Under the law as it stands the discretion as to fixing the amount to be considered as determining the means of support of the applicant in a case for pension under that bill is left with the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In terms?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Under the construction of the law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is, under the construction of the office.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, you propose to take away all the right the Commissioner has to interpret the law. Is that not a change of law?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, that is the strongest point that has yet been made against the amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does it not necessarily follow, if that be true, that it is a change of existing law?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me continue for one moment. The point the gentleman makes, I think, is not well taken, for we claim that the exercise of that discretion by the Commissioner of Pensions has been a usurpation in violation of the law of 1890, and not in harmony with the law. We must stand upon that ground or we can not stand upon any.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, allow me to proceed with my question. The present law fixes no maximum or minimum amount which shall be construed as determining whether the widow applicant for a pension has means of livelihood or not, or is dependent solely upon her daily labor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is true.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, there being no maximum or minimum limit fixed by the law, this amendment proposes to fix it, and does it not to that extent change the existing law?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It may not change existing law; but the argument here is that this is new legislation upon an appropriation bill. Now, the question for our consideration is to determine whether or not it is new legislation. It undertakes to declare the purpose of the original law, and that purpose of the original law was something greater and better than the construction of the Pension Office.

In conclusion I have but this to say, Mr. Chairman. I differ with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] in asking that this question shall go over to some future legislation and that the Chair should be relieved of the duty of ruling upon it. I shall be content with the ruling of the Chair, whatever it may be; but if this presents, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] says it does present, a question of doubt, then the spirit of this law appeals to the Chair and to the House to construe the statute for the benefit and not to the injury of the beneficiaries under that statute. Every doubtful question, in construing a statute of this character, ought to be construed in favor of the beneficiaries. It ought not be construed—and there, in my humble judgment, is the mistake of the current administration of the Pension Office—doubtful questions of this character, it has been claimed here, and with great force, have been construed by the office against the applicant. Here is the most worthy of all, in my opinion, of the beneficiaries under the pension law—the widows. I appeal to the Chair, if he has any doubt about it and does not understand clearly that it is a violation of the rules of the House, to give the benefit of the doubt in favor of these beneficiaries. I do not want to vote upon an appeal, for I would feel bound to recognize the ruling of the Chair on this question; and I regret that a gentleman of so high a character for benevolence and kindness of heart as the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] should have made this point of order, so fatal, if it shall be sustained, to the best interests of a great class of beneficiaries under this beneficent law.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say a word on this bill or about this point of order. In the Committee of Appropriations, in common with most of the personnel of that committee, this provision received, upon the merits, my hearty approval. It received that approval for the reason that the law as it is construed by the authority that has the power to construe it is unfair. I believe that it works a hardship, and I believe this provision would cure that hardship.

Now, if the point of order had not been invoked, I think it would have been enacted because I am inclined to think that the Committee of the Whole House is in favor of the law. But the point of order has been invoked. The rule is direct and imperative that no legislation shall be in order upon a general appropriation bill. Now, I am for this provision, because it is legislation. "Ah," says somebody, "it is limitation."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Declaration.

Mr. CANNON. The limitations that have been placed on appropriations, and under which the precedents were made or supposed to have been made that have been referred to, to justify this, were upon the principle that a law is one thing, but that Congress is not compelled to appropriate to carry out a law; that the discretion rests with us, and therefore that we may limit an appropriation and thereby leave all or a part of a law without any money to carry it out. This has the form of limitation, but it has the substance of legislation and enlargement; and, after all, it is the spirit, the substance, that maketh alive and that determines, and not the mere form.

Now, I say again I am heartily in favor of this legislation, if it comes up in the proper way; but when the point of order is invoked, if it should be overruled, we should make a precedent, and upon the appropriation bills that are to follow after in this Congress this precedent would nullify the rule when invoked. Much as I should like to see the legislation enacted, I do not believe that we can afford to nullify that rule.

Mr. MAHON. It can be put into law through another committee.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says it can be put into law through another committee which has plenary jurisdiction. I hope so, and I believe the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] has notified us that he will promptly report a bill covering this and other points.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I only wish to say one word in conclusion. Certain appeals have been made to the Chair, and certain appeals have been made to me. I am surprised to hear gentlemen of this committee, on a question of parliamentary ruling on what is in reality a question of law, appeal to the Chair to decide improperly, because the doubtful question should be construed in favor of the widow. On the other hand, gladly as I should listen to the suggestions urged plausibly in behalf of the widow, I must decline to withdraw my point of order, because I do not think we have any right, as representatives of the people of the United States, to take money wrung from the people by taxation and give it to ladies who do not need or require the money. As to this question of the change of existing law, let me say one word, Mr. Chairman. The suspension for one year of any existing statute is a change of existing law. As the poet says:

> The present moment is our own,
> The next we never know.

So, in so far as existing law goes, it is the law of the current year which affects us. There might be more force in the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] if the word "existing" were omitted. If it were merely "no change of law," there might be some plausibility in his suggestion. But when we find here an inhibition against any change of "existing" law, what does that mean? It means the law which exists to-day; and the suspension of any statute existing in the year 1896 is the change of law for that year. Let us see how it would be with other laws. The suspension of the laws of inheritance would be a change of existing law. The suspension of a law providing for capital punishment during the current year would certainly be a change of existing law, and a change which would find favor with a certain class in the community.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair rules upon this point I want to suggest briefly another view, or perhaps the same view which I did not succeed in making clear when I addressed the Chair before. I am willing to strike out the second proviso in this paragraph if the Chair should hold it to be objectionable under the point of order. The proposition then will be—and I ask particular attention of the Chair, because I shall only occupy a few minutes:

> During the fiscal year 1897, in expending this appropriation, it shall not be necessary for a widow in establishing her claim to a pension under the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, to prove that she is without other means of support than her daily labor.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have not made the motion yet. If the Chair will observe, this is a declaration that it shall not be necessary for the widow to prove this. It does not say that it shall not be proven by somebody. The Government may still prove it if they think it advisable. If the Chair will look at the present law, he will observe that this is not a change of that law at all:

> Leaving a widow without other means of support than her daily labor.

Where is the provision in that law that the widow must prove that fact? The Commissioner of Pensions has said that she must do it before she can obtain a pension. The law does not say so at all. The law does not impose on her the burden of making that proof. This provision in this bill says that it shall not be necessary for the widow to establish that fact; and I stand here as a lawyer, and I declare upon my judgment as such, that it does not change existing law in any particular, because that law does not exist that says that the widow shall make this proof at all.

It exists in this form, which says:

> Shall hereafter die leaving a widow without other means of support than her daily labor.

The law does not put that burden upon the widow at all. We may change that ruling of the Commissioner of Pensions without changing the law. The trouble is that he has erred in the law in the construction of this statute, and he has held that the widow must make this proof, that the law does not require the widow to do at all, and never did. We say that she need not do it. He may still do it if he thinks it advisable after this bill is passed, and undo the law. By striking out the second proviso leaves it unobjectionable and not covered by this point of order at all. I challenge every lawyer and every jurist in this House to say whether that is not a correct and proper legal construction of the status before this commitee at the present time.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I accept the challenge, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I challenge the lawyers. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make the parliamentary inquiry: Are we discussing the amendment as it appears on the bill reported, or are we discussing the modified amendment now suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I think, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question of the gentleman from New York, that I would leave out the proviso in the paragraph, if I have understood the intimations of the Chair correctly. I do not want to force the Chair to an unwilling ruling, because I know the sympathy of the Chair is strongly in favor of sustaining this portion of the bill; but I suggest that if the Chair should sustain the point of order that I would then renew the amendment leaving out the proviso of the paragraph. If the Chair should not sustain the point of order that will be unnecessary. I will ask unanimous consent to strike out the proviso in the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The proviso can be stricken out by unanimous consent. Does the gentleman from New York object to that?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The gentleman means striking out the proviso with reference to $500 in the paragraph? I do not object, provided that it is not to be considered as binding as to what remains.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Certainly not.

Mr. POWERS. I shall have to object. That proviso, in my judgment, is what places the whole thing out of the reach of the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Very well; I will wait until after the Chair has ruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order which has been raised assumes special importance because of the fact that if there should be any variation from the construction of the rule as it has always governed in Committee of the Whole on account of the sympathy that we may have for the particular legislation proposed, it would be a precedent that would rise to trouble us in all subsequent propositions looking to legislation in appropriation bills. The Chair will endeavor, therefore, to consider the question from the parliamentary point of view, and endeavor to follow what he believes to be the almost uniform practice of the House.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] raises the point of order that the pending paragraph is in violation of clause 2 of Rule XXI, the last paragraph of which—that bearing on the point of order that has been raised—reads as follows:

> Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order on any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

That has been the rule in the consideration of a general appropriation bill in the Committee of the Whole for many years. The rule has been modified several times with a view to reducing expenditures, but never so far as this particular point is concerned. The grounds of public policy on which this rule rests are—

First. That inasmuch as general appropriation bills carry the appropriations necessary to maintain the Government, and only appropriations already authorized by existing law, it is of the highest importance that they should not be impeded or jeopardized by differences in the House, or differences between the House and Senate, or differences between the two Houses and the Executive over any legislative propositions that may be proposed as amendments to such bills, each of which should be tried out on its own merits in separate bills.

Secondly. That in view of the fact that the Committee on Appropriations can only consider the question of appropriations—the subject committed to them by the rules—and that each particular subject of legislation is required to be considered by a standing committee which has jurisdiction of that subject, each committee should be held to attend to its particular work. If general legislation on the subject of pensions is proposed, the rule requires that such proposition of legislation shall go to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that committee having the right to report at any time may, on any day bring in any amendment of the pension laws and present it for the consideration of the House, after due consideration as to the effect of such legislation. It is supposed that a special committee having in charge that particular subject has given special attention to such legislation, has looked into all its parts, and is able to bring in a bill of a comprehensive character, which when brought into the House may then be subject to amendments in the ordinary way. It has been found by experience that legislation on appropriation bills is usually exceedingly narrow and unsatisfactory, because of the fact that it had not been considered by the committee having the special subject in charge.

Thirdly, another ground of objection to legislation on an appropriation bill lies in the fact that even if an amendment should be admitted here which is in the nature of general legislation, changing existing law, our rules would so restrict amendments to it that it would be almost impossible to perfect it.

For these three reasons this rule, controlling the action of the Committee of the Whole with reference to proposed new legislation, has been found necessary not only to prevent the delay or failure of general appropriation bills, but also to secure good legislation, and only legislation in which there was general concurrence has, as a rule, been included in such bills. Having stated the grounds on which this rule rests, the question arises whether the pending provision is, as matter of fact, a change of existing law.

There has been more or less discussion of that point, but there is one vital fact to which the Chair desires to call the attention of the committee, because it presents in a nut shell the whole question at issue. The pension act of 1890, which this paragraph proposes to either amend or construe—whichever view is adopted—does not provide that the widow of an enlisted man who served ninety days in the Army or Navy shall receive a pension simply upon proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to have been the result of his service. That act requires something more. That something more is the occasion of the legislation proposed by this paragraph, and the occasion of the deserved complaint which has been made against the administration of the Pension Office with reference to its construction of the law. This additional condition or fact, which must be shown by competent proof in order to entitle such a widow to a pension, is expressed in the law of 1890 in these words: "Leaving a widow without other means of support than her daily labor."

Now, that provision means something. It was intended to mean something when the act of 1890 was passed. I think the Commissioner of Pensions has not given that language the construction which the Congress that enacted the law intended it should bear; but nevertheless it means something. It is certainly a limitation of law to some extent, and a restriction or condition of law which must be met by some proof. And as the Pension Office can not be expected to furnish proof to show that any applicant is entitled to a pension, it necessarily follows that the law of 1890 contemplates that the widow should present the proof required by law.

Now, what does the paragraph under consideration propose? It proposes to give a pension to any widow of a soldier who has died from a cause not originating in his service without requiring any kind of proof with respect to her having other means of support than her daily labor, and by a proviso to establish a new rule, namely, that when a widow shall have shown that her net annual income does not exceed $500 she shall be entitled to a pension.

While I have great sympathy with that amendment, it does seem to me to be clearly a change of existing law. It is a change in the right direction, but nevertheless it is a change of existing law.

It has been contended that the pending paragraph is merely a construction of existing law, and that a construction of the meaning and intent of a law which has been heretofore enacted is not the "new legislation" prohibited by the rule. Everyone knows that no legislative construction can be given to a law that is upon the statute book without a legislative enactment. A construction of an existing law by an act of Congress must be itself a piece of legislation that has been passed by the two Houses of Congress and received the approval of the President. In fact, it is new legislation in every sense, because if it should be held that any act of legislation could be put upon an appropriation bill simply because it professed to construe anterior law, any gentleman could propose an amendment giving any kind of construction to an anterior law, whether right or wrong, thus opening up in the consideration of an appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole any proposition for new legislation under the guise of construing the law.

It does not seem to me that there can be any distinction made in this respect between different legislative acts. If an act is in fact new legislation, it seems to the Chair that it is subject to the point of order under the rule that it is new legislation or (what is the same thing) a change of existing law as construed by the authority that can alone construe it, subject to appeal to the courts, unless Congress shall step in and construe it by a new law.

Another point has been raised—and it is a point of importance—that this legislation is only a limitation or restriction on the expenditure of the money appropriated by the pending bill during the fiscal year in which it will be operative.

Before considering this point the Chair desires to say that the fact that this legislation is limited in operation to one year does not change its character at all. It is still new legislation for one year, a change of existing law for one year, or, if you please to style it an act suspending existing legislation for one year, the fact still remains that it is, pro tanto, a change of existing law.

There can be no doubt about that. Otherwise the tariff law which passed the House the other day might be proposed as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, to the paragraph providing for customs, on the ground that it did not propose to change permanently the existing law—only to suspend it—and was limited in its operation to two and a half years. If an act of the legislative power changes a law upon the statute book for a single year or a single month, or for any period, longer or shorter, it seems to the Chair that it must be a change of existing law.

The argument so strongly urged that this paragraph proposes merely a limitation or restriction on the use of the appropriation for pensions, and that it comes, therefore, under a well-settled practice of the House in Committee of the Whole, seems to the Chair to not be well founded. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] has cited what may, perhaps, be said to be a precedent which practically establishes the principle of limitation; that is the proviso which was ruled to be in order on an appropriation bill, and which was in this language:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not use any of the money appropriated by this paragraph for the printing of greenbacks of a larger denomination than those that are canceled.

Now, look for a moment at the principle of limitation or restriction as established by that proviso. In that case the law authorized the printing of greenbacks of any denomination in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. The proviso limited the use of the money which was appropriated for that single year to the printing of denominations which should not be larger than those that were canceled. Now, observe that the limitation was simply this: The appropriation could not be used for one purpose authorized by law; that is all the limitation there was to it. The proviso did not undertake to say that the appropriation could be used for printing or doing something not already authorized by law. In order to be considered as a limitation or restriction, a provision must prohibit the use of the appropriation for some purpose already authorized by law.

The reason for that rule of limitation is simply this: The House in Committee of the Whole has the right to refuse to appropriate for any object which it may deem improper, although that object may be authorized by law; and it has been contended, and on various occasions sustained by the Committee of the Whole, that if the committee has the right to refuse to appropriate anything for a particular purpose authorized by law, it can appropriate for only a part of that purpose and prohibit the use of the money for the rest of the purpose authorized by law. That principle of limitation has been sustained so repeatedly that it may be regarded as a part of the parliamentary law of the Committee of the Whole.

But observe that the provision now under consideration is not a limitation or restriction; it is an extension. It provides not that the money herein appropriated shall not be used for a purpose authorized by law, but that it may be used for a purpose not already authorized by law. It is an extension, not a limitation. If it should be held that propositions of this character could be presented and entertained as in order on the ground that they are limitations, there is no possible legislation that might not be presented on an appropriation bill and be held to be in order, thus obstructing the passage of appropriation bills.

The Chair is aware that in a few exceptional cases this principle of limitation has been improperly construed to include an enlargement of the objects for which an appropriation may be used; but the exceptions have so clearly disregarded the theory on which limitations rest that they only serve to prove the correct rule.

So, from every point of view, it seems to the Chair, if this question is to be decided on sound principles of parliamentary law, if a practice that will be safe in the handling of appropriation bills hereafter is to be established, it is exceedingly important that we should start at the beginning of this Congress by laying down correctly the rule with reference to new legislation on appropriation bills.

The Chair confesses that he might have been somewhat embarrassed from the fact that he is in favor of substantially the legislation proposed, but in view of the fact that the Committee on Invalid Pensions can report at any time legislation broadening the operation of the existing laws—legislation going to the extent that legislation ought to go—all embarrassment is removed; for, without violating the rules of this House and still maintaining correct principles with reference to the conduct of business in the Committee of the Whole and without obstructing the passage of general appropriation bills, it is possible to accomplish in other ways much more than what is proposed to be accomplisned here.

The Chair is therefore constrained to sustain the point of order against this provision.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After end of line 21, page 2, insert:
"During the fiscal year 1897, in expending this appropriation it shall not be necessary for a widow, in establishing her claim to a pension under the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, to prove that she is without other means of support than her daily labor."

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I raise the point of order that the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania violates the provisions of the second clause of Rule XXI and is therefore out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] desire to make any remarks on the point of order?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I simply desire to call the attention of the Chair to the remarks which I made when last on the floor in support of the amendment then pending. I do not think that this amendment changes the law at all. While it proposes to relieve the widow from proving that she has no means of support except her daily labor, the existing law does not require her to make such proof; it is only the Commissioner of Pensions who has required that she shall make such proof.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. Is this a committee amendment?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Entirely so; every word of it has the approval of the committee.

Mr. PICKLER. Has the committee authorized this amendment?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, yes; they authorized this amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to say a few words in support of the point of order. [Cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"]

I submit the point for the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not seem to the Chair that the principles laid down in the ruling made a few moments ago are at all obviated by the modification of the amendment. Precisely the same objection applies to it—that it is unquestionably a change of existing law, or at least an attempt to declare what the law is by new legislation. In the opinion of the Chair, therefore, the point of order must be sustained.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] was pending on a point of order when general consent was given to pass over the paragraph with the right to recur to it.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I listened very attentively to the ruling of the distinguished occupant of the chair, and fully concur in what he has said. I agree that it is correct in every particular, and the point of order having been sustained on the former amendment, I recognize that it would be useless to press my amendment before the present occupant of the chair. I propose to withdraw it now and will present it again when the chair is occupied by some other gentleman. I will try it on then. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. STEELE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment that I offered some time ago in a somewhat modified form.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That it shall be competent for the Commissioner of Pensions, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to establish such rules and regulations for the presentation and prosecution of pension claims as shall be necessary to facilitate the transaction of business: Provided, That all such rules and regulations shall be made public.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I think that is the law now.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I do not want to go into a discussion of the matter, but I reserve my objection.

Mr. STEELE. What is the gentleman's objection?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I make the point of order upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that the amendment changes existing law.

Mr. STEELE. I do not believe that I will discuss the point of order further than to say that this is now the existing law and is therefore no change. It requires no additional expense; it is only the indication of how the committee would have the Commissioner or Secretary of the Interior observe the rules and regulations that they have promulgated and made public. It is only an indication of what we would have done when we make the appropriation. It does not change the law, it does not involve the expenditure of any additional money, it is not an increase of the expenditures in any manner, and is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, if it is really no change of existing law it seems to me that it is a very foolish proposition.

Mr. STEELE. There are a great many things that seem to the gentleman from New York to be foolish, but upon which many other people are not likely to agree with him. We can not agree upon anything.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. And it seems to me that there must be some motive underlying the presentation of such a proposition. For that reason I feel compelled to reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman claim that it does change existing law?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I so claim.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman be kind enough to point out the law which is changed by this proposition?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What I apprehend is this, Mr. Chairman, that whereas the Commissioner of Pensions has the general authority now to make such rules and regulations as he deems fit, this provides for a certain class of rules; so that it may be regarded, possibly, as a limitation upon the existing powers of the Commissioner—that is, it gives him power to make such rules and regulations as he sees proper, for what? For the presentation and prosecution of pension claims, as shall be necessary to facilitate the transaction of business. If not, what is the necessity for the amendment? Now, the Commissioner has that power. It may be claimed under the amendment that he had not power to make such rules and regulations as might be necessary in cases of fraud, or for the detection of collusion, or detection of any illegality in the papers. That is the reason why I can see that this construction would make practically a change in existing law.

Mr. STEELE. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, it leaves it entirely with the Secretary of the Interior. Not a single word of coercion is in the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression, unless some one can cite a law to the contrary, that it is simply a reaffirmation of the existing law. If so, it is doubtful if a point of order would lie against it, although it might be an argument against the adoption of the amendment that it is only a reaffirmation of what is the law, and therefore an unnecessary addition to an appropriation bill. Unless some one can point out a change of law the Chair is not inclined to sustain the point of order.

There being no such suggestion, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the amendment a minute or two. I am one of the friends of the soldiers of this country who would not favor any legislation whatever to enable a man to go upon the pension rolls who is not entitled to a pension, and I am in favor of every regulation to prevent fraud. So I am with the widows of soldiers. Unless the widow who applies for a pension can establish her widowship of a soldier who performed honest and honorable service I would not have her name upon the pension roll.

The gentleman who spoke yesterday referred to a Commissioner of Pensions who was appointed in 1881, and charged that pensions were allowed during that period for political purposes. I desire to assert, without fear of contradiction, that the appointment of the gentleman who served from 1881 to 1885 was the wisest that has been made by any President of the United States since we have had a Commissioner of Pensions; that there was more real good, kind judgment in the mind and heart of that gentleman than there has been in any man who has been appointed since.

While I would prevent those who should not be upon the pension rolls from getting there, I do not favor the present system, as in its mysterious and crooked ways it prevents an honest soldier from being placed upon the roll. In this respect it has about reached perfection. I do not charge that it has grown up entirely under the present Commissioner of Pensions, and I want to do myself the honor of saying more than the gentleman who spoke for him yesterday, who said that the present Commissioner of Pensions is "said to have a good record." I say that he has a good record as a soldier, that he was a brave soldier, and that I believe his heart is better than it seems to be. On the one hand he is governed by a man whom I do not think has the kind and good feeling for the soldiers of the country that he ought to have, and on the other hand he is at the mercy of men who are in place, who would make the Pension Department a life institution. Their regret is that the soldiers can not live as long as some of these young fellows will live, so that they may not lose their jobs. A majority of the men in the Pension Office, it seems to me, are a law unto themselves, and the more impediments they can throw in the way of a claimant the better service they seem to think they perform. It will be so under the present law regulating appointment to office, and unless the Commissioner of Pensions can discharge employees because of their incompetence or because they know too little or too much, and then be allowed something to say in the selection of his help to do the work of the Pension Department, matters will grow worse than they now are, if possible. I believe if the Commissioner of Pensions was allowed to select his employees because of their integrity, competency, and sympathy the work might be carried on with one-half the present force, and business greatly facilitated. I do not care to talk about what the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] has said. He has a right to his opinion. He has a right in a flippant or obstinate way to object to proper questions. That is his privilege. I will not speak of the harmless shafts that have been shivered on a coat of mail or a devoted head; nor about the income tax; I was not subject to it, I am sorry to say.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Your salary was.

Mr. STEELE. I was not drawing much salary at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to have a minute or two more.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I yield to the gentleman.
